ADDRESS OF THE PRESIDENT

Gentlemen of the Congress:

Eight months have elapsed since I last had the honor of addressing you. They have been months crowded with events of immense and grave significance for us. I shall not undertake to retail or even to summarize those events. The practical particulars of the part we have played in them will be laid before you in the reports of the Executive departments. I shall discuss only our present outlook upon these vast affairs, our present duties, and the immediate means of accomplishing the objects we shall hold always in view.

I shall not go back to debate the causes of the war. The intolerable wrongs done and planned against us by the sinister masters of Germany have long since become too grossly obvious and odious to every true American to need to be rehearsed. But I shall ask you to consider again and with a very grave scrutiny our objectives and the measures by which we mean to attain them; for the purpose of discussion here in this place is action, and our action must move straight towards definite ends. Our object is, of course, to win the war; and we shall not slacken or suffer ourselves to be diverted until it is won. But it is worth while asking and answering the question, When shall we consider the war won?

From one point of view it is not necessary to broach this fundamental matter. I do not doubt that the American people know what the war is about and what sort of an outcome they will regard as a realization of their purpose in it. As a Nation we are united in spirit and intention. I pay little heed to those who tell me otherwise. I hear the voices of dissent—who does not? I hear the criticism and the clamor of the noisily thoughtless and troublesome. I also see men here and there fling themselves in impotent disloyalty against the calm, indomitable power of the Nation. I hear men debate peace who understand neither its nature nor the way in which we may attain it with uplifted eyes and unbroken spirits. But I know that none of these speaks for the Nation. They do not touch the heart of anything. They may safely be left to strut their uneasy hour and be forgotten.

But from another point of view I believe that it is necessary to say plainly what we here at the seat of action consider the war to be for and what part we mean to play in the settlement of its searching issues. We are the spokesmen of the American people and they have a right to know whether their purpose is ours. They desire peace by the overcoming of evil, by the defeat once for all of the sinister forces that interrupt peace and render it impossible, and they wish to know how closely our thought runs with theirs and what action we propose. They are impatient with those who desire peace by any sort of compromise—deeply and indignantly impatient—but they will be equally impatient with us if we do not make it plain to them what our objectives are and what we are planning for in seeking to make conquest of peace by arms.

I believe that I speak for them when I say two things: First, that this intolerable thing of which the masters of Germany have shown us the ugly face, this menace of combined intrigue and force which we now see so clearly as the German power, a thing without conscience or honor or capacity for covenanted peace, must be crushed and, if it be not utterly brought to an end, at least shut out from the friendly intercourse of the nations; and, second, that when this thing and its power are indeed defeated and the time comes that we can discuss peace—when the German people have spokesmen whose word we can believe and when those spokesmen are ready in the name of their people to accept the common judgment of the nations as to what shall henceforth be the bases of law and of covenant for the life of the world—we shall be willing and glad to pay the full price for peace, and pay it ungrudgingly. We know what that price will be. It will be full, impartial justice—justice done at every point and to every nation that the final settlement must affect, our enemies as well as our friends.

You catch, with me, the voices of humanity that are in the air. They grow daily more audible, more articulate, more persuasive, and they come from the hearts of men everywhere. They insist that the war shall not end in vindictive action of any kind; that no nation or people shall be robbed or punished because the irresponsible rulers of a single country have themselves done deep and abominable wrong. It is this thought that has been expressed in the formula "No annexations, no contributions, no punitive indemnities." Just because this crude formula expresses the instinctive judgment as to right of plain men everywhere it has been made diligent use of by the masters of German intrigue to lead the people of Russia astray—and the people of every other country their agents could reach—in order that a premature peace might be brought about before autocracy has been taught its final and convincing lesson, and the people of the world put in control of their own destinies.

But the fact that a wrong use has been made of a just idea is no reason why a right use should not be made of it. It ought to be brought under the patronage of its real friends. Let it be said again that autocracy must first be shown the utter futility of its claims to power or leadership in the modern world. It is impossible to apply any standard of justice so long as such forces are unchecked and undefeated as the present masters of Germany command. Not until that has been done can right be set up as arbiter and peacemaker among the nations. But when that has been done—as, God willing, it assuredly will be—we shall at last be free to do an unprecedented thing, and this is the time to avow our purpose to do it. We shall be free to base peace on generosity and justice, to the exclusion of all selfish claims to advantage even on the part of the victors.

Let there be no misunderstanding. Our present and immediate task is to win the war, and nothing shall turn us aside from it until it is accomplished. Every power and resource we possess, whether of men, of money, or of materials, is being devoted and will continue to be devoted to that purpose until it is achieved. Those who desire to bring peace about before that purpose is achieved I counsel to carry their advice elsewhere. We will not entertain it. We shall regard the war as won only when the German people say to us, through properly accredited representatives, that they are ready to agree to a settlement based upon justice and the reparation of the wrongs their rulers have done. They have done a wrong to Belgium which must be repaired. They have established a power over other lands and peoples than their own—over the great Empire of Austria-Hungary, over hitherto free Balkan States, over Turkey, and within Asia—which must be relinquished.

Germany's success by skill, by industry, by knowledge, by enterprise we did not grudge or oppose, but admired, rather. She had built up for herself a real empire of trade and influence, secured by the peace of the world. We were content to abide the rivalries of manufacture, science, and commerce that were involved for us in her success and stand or fall as we had or did not have the brains and the initiative to surpass her. But at the moment when she had conspicuously won her triumphs of peace she threw them away, to establish in their stead what the world will no longer permit to be established, military and political domination by arms, by which to oust where she could not excel the rivals she most feared and hated. The peace we make must remedy that wrong. It must deliver the once fair lands and happy peoples of Belgium and northern France from the Prussian conquest and the Prussian menace, but it must also deliver the peoples of Austria-Hungary, the peoples of the Balkans, and the peoples of Turkey, alike in Europe and in Asia, from the impudent and alien dominion of the Prussian military and commercial autocracy.

We owe it, however, to ourselves to say that we do not wish in any way to impair or to rearrange the Austro-Hungarian Empire. It is no affair of ours what they do with their own life, either industrially or politically. We do not purpose or desire to dictate to them in any way. We only desire to see that their affairs are left in their own hands, in all matters, great or small. We shall hope to secure for the peoples of the Balkan Peninsula and for the people of the Turkish Empire the right and opportunity to make their own lives safe, their own fortunes secure against oppression or injustice and from the dictation of foreign courts or parties.

And our attitude and purpose with regard to Germany herself are of a like kind. We intend no wrong against the German Empire, no interference with her internal affairs. We should deem either the one or the other absolutely unjustifiable, absolutely contrary to the principles we have professed to live by and to hold most sacred throughout our life as a nation.

The people of Germany are being told by the men whom they now permit to deceive them and to act as their masters that they are fighting for the very life and existence of their Empire, a war of desperate self-defense against deliberate aggression. Nothing could be more grossly or wantonly false, and we must seek by the utmost openness and candor as to our real aims to convince them of its falseness. We are in fact fighting for their emancipation from fear, along with our own—from the fear as well as from the fact of unjust attack by neighbors or rivals or schemers after world empire. No one is threatening the existence or the independence or the peaceful enterprise of the German Empire.

The worst that can happen to the detriment of the German people is this, that if they should still, after the war is over, continue to be obliged to live under ambitious and intriguing masters interested to disturb the peace of the world, men or classes of men whom the other peoples of the world could not trust, it might be impossible to admit them to the partnership of nations which must henceforth guarantee the world's peace. That partnership must be a partnership of peoples, not a mere partnership of governments. It might be impossible, also, in such untoward circumstances, to admit Germany to the free economic intercourse which must inevitably spring out of the other partnerships of a real peace. But there would be no aggression in that; and such a situation, inevitable because of distrust, would in the very nature of things sooner or later cure itself, by processes which would assuredly set in.

The wrongs, the very deep wrongs, committed in this war will have to be righted. That of course. But they can not and must not be righted by the commission of similar wrongs against Germany and her allies. The world will not permit the commission of similar wrongs as a means of reparation and settlement. Statesmen must by this time have learned that the opinion of the world is everywhere wide awake and fully comprehends the issues involved. No representative of any self-governed nation will dare disregard it by attempting any such covenants of selfishness and compromise as were entered into at the congress of Vienna. The thought of the plain people here and everywhere throughout the world, the people who enjoy no privilege and have very simple and unsophisticated standards of right and wrong, is the air all governments must henceforth breathe if they would live. It is in the full disclosing light of that thought that all policies must be conceived and executed in this midday hour of the world's life. German rulers have been able to upset the peace of the world only because the German people were not suffered under their tutelage to share the comradeship of the other peoples of the world either in thought or in purpose. They were allowed to have no opinion of their own which might be set up as a rule of conduct for those who exercised authority over them. But the congress that concludes this war will feel the full strength of the tides that run now in the hearts and consciences of free men everywhere. Its conclusions will run with those tides.

All these things have been true from the very beginning of this stupendous war; and I can not help thinking that if they had been made plain at the very outset the sympathy and enthusiasm of the Russian people might have been once for all enlisted on the side of the Allies, suspicion and distrust swept away, and a real and lasting union of purpose effected. Had they believed these things at the very moment of their revolution and had they been confirmed in that belief since, the sad reverses which have recently marked the progress of their affairs towards an ordered and stable government of free men might have been avoided. The Russian people have been poisoned by the very same falsehoods that have kept the German people in the dark, and the poison has been administered by the very same hands. The only possible antidote is the truth. It can not be uttered too plainly or too often.

From every point of view, therefore, it has seemed to be my duty to speak these declarations of purpose, to add these specific interpretations to what I took the liberty of saying to the Senate in January. Our entrance into the war has not altered our attitude towards the settlement that must come when it is over. When I said in January that the nations of the world were entitled not only to free pathways upon the sea but also to assured and unmolested access to those pathways I was thinking, and I am thinking now, not of the smaller and weaker nations alone, which need our countenance and support, but also of the great and powerful nations, and of our present enemies as well as our present associates in the war. I was thinking, and am thinking now, of Austria herself, among the rest, as well as of Serbia and of Poland. Justice and equality of rights can be had only at a great price. We are seeking permanent, not temporary, foundations for the peace of the world and must seek them candidly and fearlessly. As always, the right will prove to be the expedient.

What shall we do, then, to push this great war of freedom and justice to its righteous conclusion? We must clear away with a thorough hand all impediments to success and we must make every adjustment of law that will facilitate the full and free use of our whole capacity and force as a fighting unit.

One very embarrassing obstacle that stands in our way is that we are at war with Germany but not with her allies. I therefore very earnestly recommend that the Congress immediately declare the United States in a state of war with Austria-Hungary. Does it seem strange to you that this should be the conclusion of the argument I have just addressed to you? It is not. It is in fact the inevitable logic of what I have said. Austria-Hungary is for the time being not her own mistress but simply the vassal of the German Government. We must face the facts as they are and act upon them without sentiment in this stern business. The government of Austria-Hungary is not acting upon its own initiative or in response to the wishes and feelings of its own peoples but as the instrument of another nation. We must meet its force with our own and regard the Central Powers as but one. The war can be successfully conducted in no other way. The same logic would lead also to a declaration of war against Turkey and Bulgaria. They also are the tools of Germany. But they are mere tools and do not yet stand in the direct path of our necessary action. We shall go wherever the necessities of this war carry us, but it seems to me that we should go only where immediate and practical considerations lead us and not heed any others.

The financial and military measures which must be adopted will suggest themselves as the war and its undertakings develop, but I will take the liberty of proposing to you certain other acts of legislation which seem to me to be needed for the support of the war and for the release of our whole force and energy.

It will be necessary to extend in certain particulars the legislation of the last session with regard to alien enemies; and also necessary, I believe, to create a very definite and particular control over the entrance and departure of all persons into and from the United States.

Legislation should be enacted defining as a criminal offense every wilful violation of the presidential proclamations relating to alien enemies promulgated under section 4067 of the Revised Statutes and providing appropriate punishments; and women as well as men should be included under the terms of the acts placing restraints upon alien enemies. It is likely that as time goes on many alien enemies will be willing to be fed and housed at the expense of the Government in the detention camps and it would be the purpose of the legislation I have suggested to confine offenders among them in penitentiaries and other similar institutions where they could be made to work as other criminals do.

Recent experience has convinced me that the Congress must go further in authorizing the Government to set limits to prices. The law of supply and demand, I am sorry to say, has been replaced by the law of unrestrained selfishness. While we have eliminated profiteering in several branches of industry it still runs impudently rampant in others. The farmers, for example, complain with a great deal of justice that, while the regulation of food prices restricts their incomes, no restraints are placed upon the prices of most of the things they must themselves purchase; and similar inequities obtain on all sides.

It is imperatively necessary that the consideration of the full use of the water power of the country and also the consideration of the systematic and yet economical development of such of the natural resources of the country as are still under the control of the Federal Government should be immediately resumed and affirmatively and constructively dealt with at the earliest possible moment. The pressing need of such legislation is daily becoming more obvious.

The legislation proposed at the last session with regard to regulated combinations among our exporters, in order to provide for our foreign trade a more effective organization and method of cooperation, ought by all means to be completed at this session.

And I beg that the members of the House of Representatives will permit me to express the opinion that it will be impossible to deal in any but a very wasteful and extravagant fashion with the enormous appropriations of the public moneys which must continue to be made, if the war is to be properly sustained, unless the House will consent to return to its former practice of initiating and preparing all appropriation bills through a single committee, in order that responsibility may be centered, expenditures standardized and made uniform, and waste and duplication as much as possible avoided.

Additional legislation may also become necessary before the present Congress again adjourns in order to effect the most efficient coordination and operation of the railway and other transportation systems of the country; but to that I shall, if circumstances should demand, call the attention of the Congress upon another occasion.

If I have overlooked anything that ought to be done for the more effective conduct of the war, your own counsels will supply the omission. What I am perfectly clear about is that in the present session of the Congress our whole attention and energy should be concentrated on the vigorous, rapid, and successful prosecution of the great task of winning the war.

We can do this with all the greater zeal and enthusiasm because we know that for us this is a war of high principle, debased by no selfish ambition of conquest or spoliation; because we know, and all the world knows, that we have been forced into it to save the very institutions we live under from corruption and destruction. The purposes of the Central Powers strike straight at the very heart of everything we believe in; their methods of warfare outrage every principle of humanity and of knightly honor; their intrigue has corrupted the very thought and spirit of many of our people; their sinister and secret diplomacy has sought to take our very territory away from us and disrupt the Union of the States. Our safety would be at an end, our honor forever sullied and brought into contempt were we to permit their triumph. They are striking at the very existence of democracy and liberty.

It is because it is for us a war of high, disinterested purpose, in which all the free peoples of the world are banded together for the vindication of right, a war for the preservation of our Nation and of all that it has held dear of principle and of purpose, that we feel ourselves doubly constrained to propose for its outcome only that which is righteous and of irreproachable intention, for our foes as well as for our friends. The cause being just and holy, the settlement must be of like motive and quality. For this we can fight, but for nothing less noble or less worthy of our traditions. For this cause we entered the war and for this cause will we battle until the last gun is fired.

I have spoken plainly because this seems to me the time when it is most necessary to speak plainly, in order that all the world may know that even in the heat and ardor of the struggle and when our whole thought is of carrying the war through to its end we have not forgotten any ideal or principle for which the name of America has been held in honor among the nations and for which it has been our glory to contend in the great generations that went before us. A supreme moment of history has come. The eyes of the people have been opened and they see. The hand of God is laid upon the nations. He will show them favor, I devoutly believe, only if they rise to the clear heights of His own justice and mercy.

WOODROW WILSON.

CORRESPONDENCE

CIRCULARS

TWELFTH INTERNATIONAL FARM CONGRESS

File No. 561.14A12/2a

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, April 7, 1917.

To the Diplomatic Officers of the United States

GENTLEMEN: Pursuant to a provision contained in the Agricultural Appropriation Act, approved March 4, 1917, you will extend to the Governments to which you are respectively accredited an invitation to "appoint delegates or representatives to the International Farm Congress to be held at Peoria, Illinois," during the fiscal year 1918.

At this Congress there will be discussed farming methods and apparatus for tilling, planting and harvesting, the care of orchards, the raising of cattle and live stock, and other subjects looking to better facilities and results to the farmer, particularly in regions having light or irregular rainfall, and the teaching of conservation of moisture through scientific methods.

In extending the invitation and expressing the hope that the invited Governments may deem it of advantage to be represented at the Congress, you will explain that, while the invitation is extended by the authority of the Congress of the United States, the International Farm Congress will not be held under Government auspices and that no provision has been made by the Congress of the United States for the payment of the expenses of the foreign representatives who may attend, or for their entertainment.

In connection with the International Farm Congress there will be held the International Soil Products Exposition, at which the Department of Agriculture of the United States will make an exhibit illustrative of the investigation, products, and processes relating to farming in the sub-humid, arid, and semi-arid regions of the United States.

Participation in this Exposition by the Nations of the world will be welcomed by the management of the International Farm Congress.

I am [etc.]

ESTABLISHMENT OF CHAPTERS OF THE AMERICAN RED CROSS

File No. 811.142/2697

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, November 30, 1917.

Circular telegram to American Diplomatic Missions in Latin America

The support of the Government has been requested by the American Red Cross in encouraging Red Cross activities in foreign countries, and in establishing chapters there. With this in view you may call together the leading American citizens to discuss the subject and to support the establishment of a local chapter. If it is desired, you may accept the honorary chairmanship, but your assistance should be informal and unofficial. When organization is established the committee should report to Red Cross here for instructions.

VISIT OF AN AMERICAN FLEET TO BUENOS AIRES UPON INVITATION BY THE ARGENTINE GOVERNMENT

File No. 811.3335/12

Ambassador Stimson to the Secretary of State

[Telegrams—Extracts]

AMERICAN EMBASSY,

Buenos Aires, June 29, 1917, 2 p. m.

Minister for Foreign Affairs informs me that his Government is more than pleased to have me accept any popular demonstrations of sympathy to the United States. Furthermore he asks me to tell my Government that the Argentine Government hopes our fleet will visit Buenos Aires, that they will be welcomed as friends; and a squadron sent to meet them at the mouth of the River Plata. Finally he tells me that the Argentine Senate voted unanimously to send a cable of sympathy to our Government on the 4th July. He begs me to advise him when fleet is coming so that Argentine Government may make fitting preparation, and I hope the officers and at least one cruiser may visit Buenos Aires as they can be assured of an enthusiastic popular as well as official welcome.

AMERICAN EMBASSY,
Buenos Aires, July 1, 1917, 11 a. m.

Last night after hearing Minister for Foreign Affairs, the Senate adopted unanimously a resolution in agreement with the Executive to make public their approval of the decision of the President to receive in National waters the North American squadron as of a friendly nation:

For this conduct the Argentine Nation finds authority not only under its own rights of sovereignty but in the principles established in recent Conferences and international declarations and in the Treaty with the United States signed by San José de Flores July 10, 1853.

I respectfully suggest that it would have an excellent effect if I could announce actual coming of the fleet or a unit thereof in my speech before the Argentine public meeting July 4.

The note signed by Minister for Foreign Affairs has been received and is as we agreed yesterday morning: First, a note which is as follows:

Informed that the Government of United States would be pleased to improve the opportunity of the coming of its squadron to the River Plate to make a visit of courtesy to our country, I have a real pleasure in sending your excellency the invitation adjoined.

Enclosing the note as quoted in my July 11, 8 p. m. I presume I should accept substantially in the words of your telegram July 13, 5 p. m. The President sends word that he desires to receive the fleet with the greatest possible honors meaning an escort by the Argentine Navy and would therefore, I think, prefer having one ship come to Buenos Aires or as near as possible.

The President of Argentina after receiving Admiral Caperton and Staff yesterday asked me to telegraph you for President Wilson an expression of his extreme satisfaction in welcoming the fleet here and his particular gratification that the four ships came actually to Buenos Aires. He further desired me to assure you that the great reception they received came from the heart of the people. He warmly approved of a procession of two thousand sailors to lay wreaths on the statues of San Martin and Washington next Sunday and gave orders to the Mayor to have the line of march prepared.

According to understanding reached between Imperial Royal Austrian and Royal Hungarian Governments, Imperial and Royal Government of Austro-Hungarian Monarchy according to wish of Government of the United States of America agrees that Article 4 of additional convention of May 8, 1848, and Articles 11 and 12 of Consular Convention of July 11, 1870, between Austro-Hungarian Monarchy and the United States of America be repealed by an exchange of notes. 1528 Your telegram 1668² and Despatch 1781. Department is not clear respecting either precise objections of Government of Austria-Hungary to the so-called Seamen's Act of March 4, 1915, or respecting character of assurances which they desire, since Foreign Office merely observes in general terms in the note addressed to you under date of July 13, last, that since act encroaches upon Austrian and Hungarian legislation, with simultaneous disregard of the axioms of international law, the Imperial and Royal Government must express the certain expectation that the Government of the United States give the Imperial and Royal Government satisfactory assurances in this regard.

It is unfortunate that the municipal laws of the two countries conflict, as would appear from the Austro-Hungarian Government's note just mentioned to be the case. However, the Department inclined believe this fact will not result in any serious inconvenience to the vessels of each country. Since act took effect, representations have not been made to Department respecting any such inconvenience on part of ships of other maritime nations with which agreements have been made respecting the abrogation of treaty stipulations in conflict with act, nor have complaints been made to Department that any action taken by authorities of this Government in connection with the administration of act has been at variance with established rules international law. Department of opinion Government of Austria-Hungary will find no cause for such complaint in behalf their vessels. However, in case a satisfactory understanding cannot be arrived at for the abrogation of treaty stipulations between this Government and Austria-Hungary affected by the act, other provisions of the treaties in question remaining in effect, it would appear that a solution of this matter can only be found in the denunciation of these treaties in their entirety. Other provisions of this act are not consistent with the principle of international law, that the regulation of the terms of contract (existing) between the crew and the master only concerns the state of registry. As the legal affairs of the German seamen on German ships are regulated by the German Seaman's Act, the Imperial Government can not acknowledge an encroachment of American jurisdiction upon this sphere.

The Secretary of State to Chargé Grew

No. 3671

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, November 9, 1916.

SIR: The Department encloses herewith a copy of an act of the Congress of the United States, approved March 4, 1915, entitled—

An Act To promote the welfare of American seamen in the merchant marine of the United States; to abolish arrest and imprisonment as a penalty for desertion and to secure the abrogation of treaty provisions in relation thereto; and to promote safety at sea.

It is deemed appropriate that an explanation be made of the origin of the legislation and the causes operating to move Congress to pass the Act of March 4, 1915.

The improvement of the condition of seamen, to bring it into harmony with the enlightened spirit of personal freedom of the modern age, had long been the studious purpose of the Congress of the United States. By the Act of Congress of December 21, 1898, the penalty of imprisonment for desertion of seamen from American vessels in domestic ports and in near-by ports was abolished. That act covered more than nine-tenths of the seamen on American vessels and antedated by twelve years the resolution of the International Seamen's Congress at Copenhagen in August, 1911, favoring the abolition of imprisonment for desertion wherever prescribed by the laws of maritime nations.

Again, many events occurred immediately prior to the present legislation which have profoundly influenced and moulded public sentiment in favor of stricter regulation of overseas traffic, in relation to the safety of passengers, and in relation to the necessity for the protection of seamen in their natural rights as a class of laborers, theretofore discriminated against in comparison with all other classes of workmen. The terrible disaster to the steamship Titanic, with the resultant loss of human life, attracted universal attention to the need of further legislation to promote the safety of passengers and seamen. The burning of the Volturno, with its disclosure of the lack of life-saving appliances, drilled crews, and of other defective conditions, added to the forces operating to secure remedial legislation. As a result of these tragedies on the high seas, and of the agitation engendered thereby, two great political parties of the United States which express and move public opinion and policy, adopted in their platforms of 1912 declarations respecting the subject. The platform of one contained the following statement:

We urge upon Congress the speedy enactment of laws for the greater security of life and property at sea; and we favor the repeal of all laws, and the abrogation of so much of our treaties with other nations as provide for the arrest and imprisonment of seamen charged with desertion, or with violation of their contract of service. Such laws and treaties are un-American, and violate the spirit, if not the letter, of the Constitution of the United States.

The platform of the other contained the following:

We favor the speedy enactment of laws to provide that seamen shall not be compelled to endure involuntary servitude, and that life and property at sea shall be safeguarded by the ample equipment of vessels with life-saving appliances and with full complements of skilled, able-bodied seamen to operate them.

As a consequence of the public sentiment thus manifested, a bill was introduced in the House of Representatives on May 2, 1912, providing among other things, for the better protection of life at sea, and abolishing involuntary servitude imposed upon seamen in the merchant marine of the United States while in foreign ports and involuntary servitude imposed upon seamen of the merchant marine of foreign countries while in ports of the United States. As indicating the views of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries of the Congress of the United States, to which the bill was referred, the following extract from its report is quoted:

There is no other portion of our citizens or residents who can be compelled, under penalty of imprisonment, to fulfil a civil contract to labor. The seamen alone remain as the last remnant of serfdom.

It is needless in this age to argue for the right of men to be free. It is an established fact in our fundamental law and should be applied to seamen as well as others. You can not control man's labor without controlling the man himself. If he is to be free, he must have the right to labor or not, as best suits his own judgment or convenience. Labor power is a part of man; it is generated within him and can only be exercised and utilized through his brain power and will. To compel him to use it against his will is to make him to all intents and purposes a slave.

This bill relieves him from that condition. By relieving the seamen from any criminal proceedings for violating a contract to labor, leaving only the civil process as a remedy, you place him exactly in the same position as other workmen, and the result will be to gradually improve the standard of the men who go down to the sea, not only of those in our own shipping, but of those in all ships entering our ports, until it has reached the same standard as that of workmen on land.

The bill above referred to, which was not enacted into law, contained in substance the amendments to the navigation laws of the United States subsequently incorporated and passed in the Act of March 4, 1915.

Section 4 of this act, which is applicable to seamen on foreign vessels while in the harbors of the United States, provides, among other things, for the enforcement of certain specified rights of seamen respecting their wages and declares that the "courts of the United States shall be open to such seamen for its enforcement."

Sections 16 and 17, contain provisions abolishing the arrest or imprisonment of seamen for desertion from merchant vessels of the United States in foreign countries or from foreign vessels in American waters and authorizes the President to take steps looking to the termination of treaty stipulations between this country and other nations providing for the arrest and imprisonment of seamen deserting or charged with desertion.

It appears that Article 13 of the Consular Convention concluded December 11, 1871, between the United States and the German Empire, Article 10 of the Treaty concluded May 1, 1828, between the United States and Prussia, and Article 9 of the Treaty of Commerce and Navigation concluded December 9, 1847, between the United States and Mecklenburg-Schwerin, which contain stipulations relative to the jurisdiction of consular officers over merchant vessels, are affected by Section 4 of the act. And it appears that Articles 13 and 14 of the Treaty with the German Empire, Article 11 of the Treaty with Prussia and Article 9 of the Treaty with Mecklenburg-Schwerin, which contain stipulations relating to the arrest and imprisonment of deserting seamen, are affected by the terms of Section 16 of the act.

The application of the fundamental principles of the Act of Congress to alien seamen within the territorial jurisdiction of the United States involves an abrogation of such treaty stipulations as are inconsistent therewith. It is hoped that an understanding regarding this matter may be reached with but little inconvenience by a willingness on the part of the Government of Germany to consent to such abrogation as will leave intact all the other provisions of the treaties in question.

It is obvious that the Government of Germany is aware that sooner or later an amelioration of the legal status of seamen and the practice with regard to their treatment must have come, as a concomitant to the general advance of human liberty in other pursuits, to modify the strictness of the letter of municipal and conventional law existing for centuries in statutes and treaties. That national legislation has been the first to respond to this humane impulse is presumably due to the greater ease of amending local laws; but it is to be expected that international conventional arrangements will not long stand opposed to the complete release of seamen from the artificial restraints on their personal liberty and pursuit of happiness peculiar to their calling. That so little has heretofore been done in their behalf may be ascribed to the fact that the nature of their calling removes the circumstances and conditions of their lives from the view of the greater body of their fellow countrymen in whose regard generally reposes the welfare of individuals.

You are therefore instructed to bring this matter to the attention of the Minister for Foreign Affairs and you will explain to him that the President, using the discretion which he deems is granted to him under the Act of March 4, 1915, instructs you to propose an arrangement between the two Governments which will effect the purpose of the act by the abrogation of the treaty stipulations above referred to.

It is believed that the general observations made in a previous part of this instruction will convince the Government of Germany of the wise and humane purposes toward which the legislation in question is directed. That Congress did not contemplate the least infringement of the rights of foreign Governments respecting the control of their merchant marine while in the ports of the United States in a manner inimical to those Governments is evidenced by the reports from the various committees to which the bill was referred before its passage. It is likewise clearly shown by Section 16 of the act that the intent of Congress was not to disturb the valuable treaties now existing between the Government of the United States and other countries, negotiated from time to time with much care and with much patience, but by appropriate legislation to correct and regulate the long existing and varying methods of procedure in matters affecting seamen. That such methods of procedure and standards of conduct towards seamen generally have not advanced as they should have, coincident with the improved treatment of other classes of labor, is believed to be so well established as to need no comment, and the President feels, therefore, that when all the facts and circumstances attendant upon the passage of the act are fully considered by the Government of Germany, no serious difficulties will be found to delay or to prevent an agreement for the mere abrogation or omission of the respective articles found to be inconsistent with the provisions of the act.

The President, although deeply anxious that an agreement be reached with the Government of Germany on this subject, is not concerned as to the particular method by which it may be consummated, whether by exchange of notes or by a short treaty annulling the treaty stipulations heretofore referred to which are affected by the act. The former course seems preferable because more easily effected. In case no satisfactory understanding can be arrived at for the abrogation of the treaty stipulations affected by the Act of March 4, 1915, other provisions of the treaties in question remaining in affect, it would appear that a solution of this matter can only be found in the denunciation of these treaties in their entirety.

In bringing this matter to the attention of the Minister for Foreign Affairs, you will hand him a copy of this instruction and express to him the earnest hope of this Government that the sympathetic consideration which the Government of Germany will undoubtedly bestow upon its proposal may result in an understanding as to the abrogation merely of those treaty stipulations which are affected by the Act of Congress of March 4, 1915, with as little disturbance as possible of the conventional relations now happily existing between the two countries.

SIR: The Department has received your despatch No. 324 of July 8, 1915, with which you enclose a copy of a note from the Italian Minister for Foreign Affairs acknowledging notice on the part of this Government of the denunciation of the Italo-American Consular Convention of May 8, 1878.

The Department greatly regrets that in its instruction to you of May 29th last, you were inadvertently directed to give notice of the denunciation of the Consular Convention of May 8, 1878, between this Government and Italy, in its entirety instead of being directed to give notice of the intention of this Government to abrogate the Convention concluded between the two Governments February 24, 1881, and Article XIII of the Treaty of May 8, 1878. You will so inform the Italian Government and in this relation further communicate with it in the sense of the following:

It had been previously pointed out to the Italian Government that the application of the fundamental principles of the Act of Congress to alien seamen within the territorial jurisdiction of the United States involves an abrogation of such treaty provisions as are inconsistent therewith, and that the Act makes it mandatory on the President, within ninety days after the passage thereof to give notice to the several governments, respectively that so much as hereinbefore described of all such treaties and conventions between the United States and foreign governments will terminate on the expiration of such periods after notices have been given as may be required in such treaties and conventions, the period thus established terminating on July 1st next.

It appears that Article XIII of the Treaty of May 8, 1878, between the United States and Italy is affected by Section 16 of the Act of Congress, and that Article I of the Treaty concluded between the two Governments on February 24, 1881, which article was by this agreement substituted for Article XI of the Treaty of May 8, 1878, is affected by the terms of Sections 4 and 16 of the Act.

The Government of the United States, therefore, pursuant to the provisions of the Act of March 4, 1915, which have been made known to the Italian Government, hereby gives notice of its intention to abrogate the Treaty of February 24, 1881, and this Government hopes that such abrogation may take effect on July 1, 1916, the date on which it was intended to have it take effect when the inaccurate notice was given to the Italian Government.

The Government of the United States likewise pursuant to the provisions of the Act of March 4, 1915, also hereby gives notice of its intention to abrogate Article XIII of the Treaty of May 8, 1878, to take effect likewise on July 1, 1916.

Inasmuch as treaties are contracts between governments, they can only be varied in whole or in part by mutual agreement or special consent. It is the hope, however, of the President, that such an agreement can easily be reached as will leave unaffected all parts of the treaties with foreign governments not inconsistent with the humanitarian and progressive provisions of the Act.

While recognizing that denunciation of a portion of a treaty may not, according to international practice, be made, the President, nevertheless, using the discretion which he deems is granted to him to interpret the Act of March 4, 1915, in the sense contemplated by Congress, instructs you to propose an arrangement between the two Governments which will effect the purpose of the Act by the mere omission of Article XIII of the Treaty of 1878, and by the nullification of Article I of the Treaty of January [February] 24, 1881, which in a sense is a part of the Treaty of 1878.

It is believed that the general observations made in the communication previously laid before the Foreign Office by you regarding the purposes of the Act of March 4, 1915, will convince the Italian Government of the wise and humane purpose toward which the legislation is directed. That Congress did not contemplate the least infringement of the rights of foreign governments respecting the control of their merchant marine while in the ports of the United States, in a manner inimical to those governments, is evident from the reports of the various committees to which the bill was referred before passage. It is likewise clearly shown by Section 16 of the act that the intent of Congress was not to disturb the great and valuable treaties now existing between the Government of the United States and other nations, negotiated from time to time with much care and with much patience, but by appropriate legislation to correct and regulate the long existing and varying methods of procedure in matters affecting seamen. That such methods of procedure and standards of conduct toward seamen generally have not been advanced as they should have been, coincident with the improved treatment of other classes of labor, is believed to be so well established as to need no comment, and the President hopes, therefore, that, when all the facts and circumstances attendant upon the passage of the Act are fully considered by the other governments whose treaties may be affected in parts, no serious difficulties will be found to delay or to prevent an agreement for the mere abrogation or omission of the respective articles found to be inconsistent with the provisions of the Act.

The President, although deeply anxious that an agreement be reached with foreign governments on this subject, is not concerned as to the particular method by which it may be consummated, whether by signed protocols of conferences or by mutual exchange of notes, as is a common practice in the conduct of many diplomatic affairs of this character. The latter course seems preferable because more easily effected. It will not be necessary to refer to the Senate of the United States for its advice and consent such an agreement by an exchange of notes, and this method of procedure will be regular and effective because of the authority already granted to the President by Section 16 of the Act to abrogate the portions of the treaties inconsistent therewith. Hence it will be perceived that the intent of Congress may be fully realized by informal agreements between the Government of the United States and other Powers, and that in this way the various important treaties now subsisting may remain in full force and effect with the exception of certain articles relating to seamen.

This Government hopes that the sympathetic consideration which the Government of Italy will undoubtedly bestow on its proposal may result in means being found to effect the abrogation merely of those treaty stipulations which are inconsistent with the Act of Congress of March 4, 1915, with as little disturbance as possible of the conventional relations now happily existing between the two Governments.

MR. SECRETARY OF STATE: Your excellency was pleased to send me in your courteous note of March 29 last the text of a direct communication to the Ambassador of the United States at Rome dated the 23d [25th] of that month relative to the notice previously given in the name of the American Government to terminate the Italo-American Consular Convention of May 8, 1878. In that communication your excellency stated that the earlier denouncement was to be understood to be limited in the intention of the American Government to Articles 13 and 11 only of the Convention and, for the last named Article, the Treaty of February 24, 1881, whose one article superseded that very Article 11.

Your excellency will certainly have now heard from the Embassy of the United States at Rome that the King's Government has taken formal note of that communication by which it stands understood that from the 1st of July of this year just the 13th and 11th articles of the Italo-American Consular Convention of May 8, 1878, and for the last named Article, the Italo-American Treaty of February 24, 1881, are abrogated.

At the same time, I have, in pursuance of instructions received, the honor to notify your excellency that the King's Government denounces as of July 1 next, the whole Italo-American Convention of May 8, 1878, which, as provided by its Article 18, will remain in force for one year's time until July 1, 1917.

I shall therefore be thankful to your excellency if you will please make formal acknowledgment to me of the denouncement by the King's Government through me as of the 1st of July next of the whole Italo-American Consular Convention, the said denouncement maturing on the 1st of July 1917.

MR. EXCELLENCY: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note of June 29, 1916, in which, referring to the notice given by this Government of its desire to terminate, on July 1, 1916, the Treaty concluded between the United States and Italy on February 24, 1881, and Article XIII of the Treaty concluded between the two Governments on May 8, 1878, you state that your Government has taken formal cognizance of this Government's notice, and that it is now understood that these treaty stipulations are terminated from July 1, 1916.

You further give notice in behalf of the Royal Italian Government that it denounces, from the date of July 1, 1916, the whole of the Convention concluded between the United States and Italy on May 8, 1878, which will remain in force until July 1, 1917. In accordance with the request contained in your note, I herewith make formal acknowledgment of your Government's notice of denunciation of this treaty, Article XIII of which ceased, as indicated above, to be in effect on July 1, 1916.

I may observe with respect to Article XI of the treaty of May 8, 1878, to which you refer in your note, that this article, as of course your Government is aware, was annulled by the Treaty of February 24, 1881.

SIR: The Department has received Mr. Jay's No. 525 of June 30 last, enclosing a copy of a note from the Italian Minister of Foreign Affairs, making acknowledgment of your Embassy's note advising the Italian Government of the desire of the United States Government to terminate the Convention between the United States and Italy of February 24, 1881, and Article XIII of the Treaty of May 8, 1878, between the same contracting Powers.

Reference in the note addressed to you by the Minister for Foreign Affairs to an Article XI of the treaty concluded between the United States and Italy on February 24, 1881, apparently is an inadvertence since the treaty contains but two articles and since in the Department's instructions of March 23, 1916, you were directed to give notice to the Italian Government of the intention of this Government to abrogate the entire treaty.

For your information the Department encloses herewith a copy of a note of June 29, 1916, received by it from the Italian Ambassador at Washington and a copy of the Department's reply.

The Italian Ambassador to the Secretary of State

[Translation]

No. 1662

ROYAL ITALIAN EMBASSY,
Washington, June 11, 1917.

MR. SECRETARY OF STATE: By a note dated June 29, 1916, after stating that by reason of the communications made by the Government of the United States to the Italian Government with respect to the Consular Convention of May 8, 1878, the King's Government had taken note that from the first of July 1916, Articles 13 and 11 of that Convention and instead of the last named article the additional Convention of February 24, 1881, were abrogated, I gave your excellency notice that the Royal Government through me denounced the whole Consular Convention of 1878 from the first of July 1916. By note of August 2, 1916, your excellency was pleased to make formal acknowledgment of the denunciation.

The purpose that moved the King's Government to denounce the Convention of May 8, 1878, was, as I had the honor orally to remark to your excellency, to substitute for the Convention another covenant which would better meet, to our mutual interest, the changed exigencies of consular tutelage.

Since the existing consular convention was negotiated the relations between Italy and the United States which call for the intervention of the respective consular offices have grown so much in numbers and become so complex that a revision and modernization of the rules that govern the powers and duties of the said officers appeared to be of manifest mutual advantage. The conditions of life, circumstances, business relations and the whole complex atmosphere in which consular duties are now performed and will be in the near future are plainly different from those which prevailed at the time when the existing convention was concluded and it does seem appropriate that the rules which govern those duties should also be modified accordingly. The Government of the United States surely shared that view and evidently proceeded to put it into operation, if only in part, when it had to ask the King's Government to consider as abrogated two of the articles of the said convention because of their being antiquated and no longer meeting modern exigencies.

The present anomalous political juncture, which demands every attention, has however made it impossible to prepare, since the convention was denounced, a new instrument which could be substituted for that now in force with any advantage. And even though the studies set on foot on the subject by the King's Government had taken the concrete form of convention articles, there would not be enough time left before the first of July to discuss the said articles with the Government of the United States and to sign and ratify the instrument. Nor can it be foreseen when all the various stages in the conclusion of a new treaty can be thoroughly covered.

Under the circumstances the denunciation if allowed to stand unaltered before a new and more suitable convention comes into existence, would purely and simply mean the abrogation of the existing convention. And until a new convention could be put in readiness, Italy and the United States would be left without a covenant empowering and guiding their respective Consuls in the discharge of their official duties. And this for obvious reasons cannot suit either party. Besides the objectionable consequences it might bring in practice, the want of a covenant of the kind herein considered would not be consistent with the relations of staunch friendship happily existing between the two countries. A modification of the denunciation as made, if by so doing the exigencies of the moment and the object for which it was originally made are met, thus appears to be entirely to our mutual advantage. And since the objectionable features of the denunciation made on June 29, 1916, would be found in the fact that it is to take effect on a set date which is that of June 30 next, then, the solution that offers itself naturally is to do away with any fixed term and reduce it to a simple declaration of the intention of the Royal Government to denounce the existing convention at a convenient time and place.

And inasmuch as the King's Government took the initiative of serving the notice of June 29, 1916, so it now behooves the same Government of the King to ask the Government of the United States that it be withdrawn so that the existing convention may remain in force until further notice.

The reasons and motives of this step are such as to lead me to hope that the Government of the United States will readily accede to it in the general interest of the two countries and in the special interest of the functions of their respective Consuls. And being confident thereof, I take pleasure in begging your excellency kindly to acknowledge that the King's Government has formally withdrawn, with regard to the Government of the United States, as I hereby have the honor to do, the denunciation notified on the 29th of June 1916 and that consequently, and until further notice, the Consular Convention concluded between the two Governments on the 8th of May 1878, barring its Articles 13 and 11 and barring, for the last named article, the additional Convention of February 24, 1881, remains in full force and effect.

For which I extend my thanks to your excellency and beg [etc.]

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,

EXCELLENCY: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note of June 11, 1917, in which you refer to your note of June 29, 1916, wherein, referring to the notice given by this Government of its desire to terminate on July 1, 1916, the Treaty concluded between the United States and Italy on February 24, 1881, and Article XIII of the Treaty concluded between the two Governments on May 8, 1878, you stated that your Government had taken formal cognizance of this Government's notice, and that it was understood that these treaty stipulations should be terminated from July 1, 1916, and wherein you further gave notice in behalf of the Royal Italian Government that it denounced from the date of July 1, 1916, the whole of the Convention of May 8, 1878, such denunciation to take effect July 1, 1917.

You call attention to the reasons which prompted the Italian Government to denounce this treaty and state that, since it has been found impossible to prepare, as your Government has taken steps to do, a new instrument which could be substituted for this treaty by July 1, 1917, a proper solution of the situation is to withdraw the notice of denunciation of the treaty and to reduce it to a simple declaration of the intention of the Royal Government to denounce the existing convention at a convenient time and place.

You, therefore, request that the Government of the United States acquiesce in the withdrawal of the notice given by your Government under date of June 29, 1916, and that I acknowledge that the King's Government has formally withdrawn, as is done in your note under acknowledgment, their notice of June 29, 1916, and that consequently, until further notice, the Consular Convention concluded between the two Governments on May 8, 1878, with the exception of Article XIII and Article XI, the last mentioned of which was annulled by the Treaty concluded between the two Governments on February 24, 1881, remains in full force and effect.

In accordance with your request, I have the honor to say that the Government of the United States acquiesces in the withdrawal of the denunciation of the Treaty of May 8, 1878, notified by your Government under date of June 29, 1916, and I hereby make formal acknowledgment of such withdrawal with the understanding that the Treaty of May 8, 1878, with the exception of Articles XI and XIII, remains in full force and effect.

DEMONSTRATION OF FRIENDSHIP TOWARD THE UNITED STATES BY THE GOVERNMENT AND PEOPLE OF BRAZIL

[Telegram]

AMERICAN EMBASSY,
Rio de Janeiro, July 5, 1917, 11 a. m.

A remarkable demonstration of friendship for the United States and a further step toward cooperation with the cause of the Allies marked the commemoration yesterday of Independence Day by the Brazilian Government. The President of the Republic visited the flagship of Admiral Caperton's squadron and on the initiative of the Minister of Marine there was a street parade of marines and blue-jackets in which the crews of the American, French and British war vessels in Rio de Janeiro Harbor participated in the company of a Brazilian naval contingent, a total of 2,600 men. Our boys received a popular ovation which was as sincere as it was spontaneous.

SIR: On July 5 the Embassy informed the Department by telegram that a further step toward affiliation with the cause of the Allies and of approximation toward the United States had marked the commemoration of Independence Day by the Brazilian Government.

At noon on July 4 the President of the Republic, accompanied by the Minister of Marine and the members of his military and civil household, a party of a dozen persons, visited the U. S. S. Pittsburg, the flagship of Admiral Caperton's squadron. In the Admiral's cabin toasts were exchanged between the Admiral and the President, over cups of Brazilian coffee, in the sense of the first enclosure to this despatch.

During the afternoon a contingent of marines and bluejackets, numbering about 2,600, composed of a portion of the crews of the four American, two British and one French cruisers in the harbor, and a considerable body of Brazilian marines and bluejackets, marched through the principal streets in the center of Rio de Janeiro, led by Admiral Francisco de Mattos, Commandant of the Brazilian Division of Dreadnoughts. The parade was reviewed by the President and the diplomatic representatives of the Powers represented in the contingent. The crowds were so great in the Avenida Central that the police were obliged to clear a way. Cheers and hand-clapping greeted the contingent while marching; and flowers were thrown upon them from balconies and windows. Our boys especially received a popular ovation which was as sincere as it was spontaneous. The photographs which accompany this despatch, as a second enclosure, indicate both density of the crowds and the good appearance of the men while marching.¹ Subsequent to the parade a numerously attended reception was held at the Embassy which was open to all comers.

On account of the parade, the usual sports and garden party were postponed until July 5, when, with the cooperation of Admiral Caperton's sailors, the program was carried through successfully. The opinion of the oldest inhabitant is valuable in regard to the observation of national holidays. The testimony from that source is to the effect that Independence Day was never more heartily, more appropriately, or more gratifyingly commemorated than it was in the current year, in Rio de Janeiro.

VISIT OF THE PRESIDENT OF BRAZIL TO THE U. S. S. PITTSBURG, FLAGSHIP OF ADMIRAL CAPERTON, U. S. NAVY

The Admiral said to the President:

I feel highly honored by the presence of your Excellency on the flagship of the fleet which has come to bring a message of cordial friendship to the Government and the people of Brazil. I am delighted with your country and with your people, and I am sorry that my stay cannot be prolonged.

The President replied:

It gives me great pleasure indeed to come aboard this ship and bring my felicitation for the United States of America, in the first place; and for the Ambassador and the Admiral in the second. I regret that the officers cannot make a longer stay among the Brazilians with whom the officers and the men of the fleet have made a splendid impression. He added: It is common knowledge among my people that the enlisted men of the fleet appear to be of a very high class, and their comportment has been admired by everybody.

This exchange of courtesies was followed by the serving of coffee, in the Admiral's quarters, as the national drink of Brazil and the Brazilian product which has done most toward the commercial approximation of the two countries. Allusion to this fact by the Admiral and the Ambassador appeared to be most pleasing to the President, and was followed by about twenty minutes of very cordial and friendly conversation.

SIR: The visit of Admiral Caperton, Commander-in-Chief of the Pacific Squadron, with the four vessels of his command, the Pittsburg, South Dakota, Frederick, and Pueblo, from June 26 to July 6, was gratifying both to the Brazilian Government and people which expressed its appreciation not only by a number of entertainments but by signs and indications which are more eloquent than the series of fêtes which usually commemorates the visit of a squadron. The bonhomie and desire to please which the Admiral and his officers indicated were in harmony with the spirit which animates the Brazilians toward the United States, and were particularly acceptable on that account. The enlisted men of the squadron, most of whom were between the ages of 18 and 22, conducted themselves with propriety and their popularity was proved by the remarkable cordiality with which they were greeted, not only during the naval parade on July 4, but also on the frequent occasions on which they visited this city. Although about 2,000 of them came ashore every day I have yet to hear of an instance where they abused the hospitality which was shown them or disturbed public order by thoughtless or rude acts.

The naval parade on July 4, in which a contingent of American, English, French and Brazilian marines and sailors participated was a remarkable spectacle which produced a deep impression on all who saw it and committed the Brazilian Government to a further step on the political ladder toward approximation with the United States and her European associates in the War of 1917.

The newspapers were most favorable in their comments. An article in A Noite, the leading evening paper in this city, remarked upon the good humor and generosity of our boys which was displayed on many occasions in a gratifying manner. Before sailing for the south Admiral Caperton paid official calls upon the Ministers, associations and newspapers, an act of courtesy which was commented upon with approval in the public press.

CENTRAL AMERICA

DENUNCIATION BY NICARAGUA OF THE TREATY OF DECEMBER 20, 1907, INSTITUTING THE CENTRAL AMERICAN COURT OF JUSTICE. RENEWED ATTEMPT TO FORM A UNION OF CENTRAL AMERICAN REPUBLICS

EDITORIAL NOTE.—The five Central American States, Guatemala, Honduras, Salvador, Nicaragua and Costa Rica, then known as Guatemala, declared their independence in 1821, and were for a time incorporated in the Mexican Empire during 1822. Upon the declaration of a Mexican Republic they broke away from Mexico, and in July 1823 formed the Republic of the United States of Central America, which lasted until 1840. In 1842 an attempt to reunite was made which resulted in the Union of Guatemala, Honduras, Salvador and Nicaragua. This union was dissolved in 1845. In April 1845 Salvador and Guatemala proposed a conference for the purpose of forming another union. The conference did not take place. In October 1847 another attempt for union was made by Honduras, Salvador and Nicaragua; it also resulted in failure. In 1852 Honduras invited Salvador and Nicaragua to send delegates to a National Diet. Union was decreed under the name of the Republic of Central America. Nothing seems to have been accomplished. In 1862 Nicaragua invited Honduras, Salvador and Guatemala to form a union. Nothing came out of this attempt. In 1885 Guatemala and Honduras attempted to form a union by the use of force, but they were defeated by the combined forces of Salvador, Nicaragua and Costa Rica. In 1886 Guatemala proposed a congress to formulate a union. The Congress met at San José, Costa Rica, in 1888, and made a pact for a provisional union under the name of the Republic of Central America. Revolutions and strife broke out in Salvador and Guatemala and the attempt for union again resulted in failure. In June 1895, a pact was signed at Amapala by representatives of Honduras, Nicaragua and Salvador forming the Greater Republic of Central America. This Union was recognized by the United States on December 24, 1896. (For. Rel. 1896, p. 367.) The Department was advised of the dissolution of the Greater Republic of Central America on November 29, 1898. (For. Rel. 1898, p. 172.) In 1907 the five Central American Republics signed a number of treaties at the Conference of Washington. (For. Rel. 1907, p. 692 et seq.) The Central American Court of Justice was instituted in accordance with one of the above treaties. As Nicaragua refused to accept the decisions of the Court in the matter of the Bryan-Chamorro Canal Treaty between the United States and Nicaragua (For. Rel. 1916, p. 888), the treaty instituting the Court of Justice was denounced in 1917 by Nicaragua, and an attempt was made in that year to reunite the five Central American States as shown by the following correspondence.

MR. MINISTER: I have the honor to transcribe the following telegraphic communication, confirmed today by letter, which was addressed to the Governments of Central America, relative to the Central American Court of Justice.

MANAGUA, March 9, 1917.

MR. MINISTER: Article XXVII of the Convention for the establishment of a Central American Court of Justice, signed in Washington December 20, 1907, provides that said Convention shall remain in force for the period of ten years, counting from the last ratification, which was that of the Government of Guatemala, dated March 11, 1908. The motives which there is no occasion to explain at this opportunity, among which I may cite as of principal consideration, that of the heavy expenses which the signatory governments are obliged to make for the maintenance of that Tribunal, without doubt for the most high purposes, expenses which are now incompatible with the difficult economic situation, because it continues to prevail throughout Nicaragua, these motives move my Government, with much pain, to make to your excellency, as it now makes, its withdrawal from the said Convention for the establishment of a Central American Court of Justice, in compliance with the cited article of the Convention which establishes the period of its enforcement, or also it may be at this moment the time to declare the intention of one of the parties with respect to the caducity of said Convention. In bringing the former to the knowledge of your excellency, I make haste to inform your Government that this declaration in no respect alters the sentiments which inspire my Government with the most keen and sincere feeling of fraternity for the Government of your excellency, availing myself at this time of the opportunity to reiterate to you the assurances of my most cordial and distinguished consideration with which I sign myself, your excellency's obedient servant,

Tomorrow being the end of the period allowed by the Treaty, it was necessary yesterday to make the above inserted withdrawal in the form just expressed.

[Inclosure 1—Telegram—Translation]

The Salvadorean Minister of Foreign Relations to the Nicaraguan Minister of Foreign Relations

SAN SALVADOR, March 16, 1917.

I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your excellency's esteemed telegram of the 9th instant, in which you are pleased to inform me that, according to Article 27 of the convention for the establishment of a Central American Court of Justice, the said convention shall remain in force for the term of ten years counted from the last ratification, which was that of the Guatemalan Government, on the 11th of March, 1908; and that, for reasons that need not be fully set forth on this occasion—but among which you cite the most important, to wit, the heavy expenses occasioned by the maintenance of the Central American Court, which expenses, you say, are already insupportable in face of the economic conditions under which Nicaragua is laboring—your Government regretfully denounces to this Government the said convention, in conformity with the above-cited Article that fixes the term within which the convention is to remain in force.

In reply, Mr. Minister, my Government begs to express to your excellency's Government the deep pain with which it has received the notification of the latter's intention to hold as rescinded the convention in question, at the approaching conclusion of the term prescribed in Article 27 thereof, because my Government considers the fact to be most momentous that that sister Republic should place itself outside the international concert of Central America which was created in 1907 by the Conventions of Washington (conventions that my Government is confident will be adhered to by the other signatory republics), and consequently outside the system which the Republics of the Isthmus established by those conventions for the pacific settlement of their disagreements and controversies—a highly beneficent system which the prominent men of America have recognized as being a most advanced step in the progress of international institutions. This act is the more regrettable when it is considered that just now all peoples are anxious to provide for their future well-being by seeking to protect themselves from the calamities of war by means of what must be acknowledged as one of the best methods, the adoption of a system of the kind that by good fortune has been established in Central American States; a system that makes it easy to disadjust their agreements by the peaceful and honorable application of the principles of law and justice. This conception of the Central American Court of Justice must of necessity become more and more popular from now on, and the tribunal must come to be accepted as a wise and far-sighted measure that will reflect glory, not only on the Republics of Central America, but on the United States and Mexico, under the auspices of whose Governments was born that august international institution, the first of its kind.

For the reasons set forth, my Government believes that your excellency's Government will contract a very grave moral responsibility if it carries out its intention of holding as rescinded the convention in question. Wherefore, in the most friendly and fraternal spirit, my Government has the honor hereby to address to the Nicaraguan Government, in the distinguished person of your excellency, the most respectful expression of its hope that the Government will generously strive to overcome any obstacles to its adherence to that pact and retire from its determination to withdraw therefrom, in order that it may continue, in unison with the Governments of its sister Republics, to enjoy the benefits of the stipulations agreed to at Washington, the object of which is that Central America should form an international nucleus guided, in the relations of its five States, by the canons of justice, law and peace.

If, in spite of the considerations above suggested, your excellency's Government decides to insist upon its determination, I must inform your excellency's illustrious Government that my Government understands that the stipulation contained in Article 27 of the Convention for the Establishment of a Central American Court of Justice, and prescribing the term within which it is to remain in force, cannot be availed of as justification in holding that convention alone to be rescinded whilst holding to be in full force and vigor the General Treaty of Peace and Amity that was concluded at Washington on the same date, because the first and most important of the stipulations of the latter pact provides, as the means whereby peace and the most complete harmony among the signatory Republics is to be maintained, that every difference or difficulty that may arise amongst them, of whatsoever nature it may be, shall be decided by means of the Central American Court of Justice. That stipulation constitutes the most essential provision of that General Treaty, and, consequently, my Government considers that its force and effect is wholly bound up with the life of the treaty itself. From this it must naturally be inferred that so long as one of the High Contracting Parties does not signify its intention to put an end to that treaty, in the manner prescribed in its 19th Article, the convention for the establishment of a Central American Court of Justice cannot be held to be rescinded, even though the term fixed in Article 27 of the latter may have elapsed. That term is merely a repetition of the identic term prescribed in Article 19 of the General Treaty, but it is unaccompanied by the provision granting power to denounce the convention separately at the end of the period.

My Government, Mr. Minister, takes refuge in the firm hope that the Government of Nicaragua will do all that may lie in its power to maintain in force the Treaties of Washington, and in thus giving expression to these most fervent hopes, it remains only to assure your excellency that the sentiments of my Government towards that sister Republic are inspired by the liveliest sympathy and the most sincere desire for the preservation of the friendly relations that happily exist between the two countries.

I beg [etc.]

R. ARRIETA ROSSI

[Inclosure 2—Memorandum]

The Government and people of El Salvador consider that the existence of the Central American Court of Justice is of vital importance to the maintenance of peace in Central America, since, in their opinion, that court is the fundamental basis of the General Treaty of Peace and Amity which was concluded at Washington on the 20th of December, 1907. They are also of the opinion that the contemplated rescission of the convention that created that court, if allowed to be consummated, will effectively carry with it the rescission of the other pact, because, conversely, so long as the General Treaty remains in force, it would be impossible to hold that the convention that gave life to a court which is called upon to settle peacefully all disagreements that may arise among the Central American States is not also in force; and that, therefore, if the Government of Nicaragua persists in the determination of which the Salvadorean Foreign Office has been given notice, by telegram of March 9, then also must stand without force and effect the vitally important stipulations contained in these Treaties of Washington that were concluded under the auspices of the Governments of the United States and Mexico.

[Inclosure—Translation]

The Nicaraguan Minister of Foreign Relations to the Salvadorean Minister of Foreign Relations

MANAGUA, March 20, 1917.

I have the honor to again address your excellency referring to your courteous telegram of 16th instant, in which after being pleased to acknowledge the receipt of my despatch of 9th instant you express the pain with which the most excellent Government of El Salvador has read the sentiments of my above despatch, which has occasioned the considerations expressed in your excellency's telegraphic communication which I have noted and which ends with assurances of amity and fraternity for that most excellent Government, which it is my high honor to represent.

It is not my purpose, Mr. Minister, to enter into any controversy on this point, but simply to bring to the attention of that most excellent Government, through the worthy medium of your excellency, the opinion of my Government with respect to the questions raised by your excellency.

Nicaragua considers that the General Treaty of Peace and Amity of 1907 which establishes grounds for the general relations of the Central American countries and stipulates by way of recommendation certain essential points which were the object of special Conventions, constitutes an instrument entirely independent of the other Conventions signed on that same date, which are in their way separate and complete treaties, as each one of them appears in the correct form for that kind of documents, and as each one of them also contains its respective clause of a different period of time for its sole and own caducity, without having other bond or legal dependency than the high and generous spirit which dominated at its celebration.

Confirming by comparison that which precedes, I cite the case of the withdrawal from another of the treaties of the series on future Central American Conventions made by my predecessor, Don Diego M. Chameorro, on December 16, 1913, without there being made at that time observations of any kind regarding the consequences of the withdrawal.

In reality there truly was no necessity in the present case for the formal procedure of the withdrawal, so long as Article 27 of the respective convention conclusively declares, without other provision similar to that of the other treaties of the series, that "it shall always be considered in force for the period of ten years", the fatal provision to which my Government has submitted for the purpose of its notification of the 9th of this month, as much to comply with a provision of the Convention itself, as to avoid possible objections relative to the period of enforcement of the General Treaty of Peace and Amity. In other words, it is an act which is fulfilled by itself alone, without Nicaragua's contracting special responsibilities, and which if it leaves unstable the first clause of the General Treaty of Peace and Amity in nothing does it disagree with the entirety of the others, as neither has it been affected by the instability which existed in fact in Articles IV, V, XII and XIII of the General Treaty itself, except by this circumstance that it forms a separate matter, notwithstanding its importance, in the series of the Conventions of Washington, this country ceases to take part in the international concert created by such conventions signed and observed by Nicaragua, which not only has not been exempt from contributing to the maintenance of the Central American Court of Justice, but also rendering all homage to that High Tribunal it always maintained its representative, and recently sent as its attorney to treat of one phase of the question on account of its high importance no one less than the President of the Judicial Power and of the Supreme Court of Justice of this Republic.

My Government pleased to return in full the friendly and fraternal sentiments of your excellency expressed in your message of reply, sentiments which have always united both Republics from the days of the Independence, as the then Minister of Foreign Affairs of that country, Dr. Manuel Castro R., expressed them in a telegram of reply to this Department of February 6, 1911, hopes that they will continue bound by an indestructible union between our peoples and Governments, and that both nourished and inspired with such sentiments of true Central-Americanism they shall prevail above every other consideration for the maintenance of mutual respect and reciprocal confidence, the base and support of a strong, close and well understood friendship, as that which happily unites our Sister States.

Omitting referring for want of space to the other points, which I consider of secondary character, in your courteous telegraphic communication, I have the honor of renewing to your excellency the assurances of my very high esteem and most distinguished consideration with which I am pleased to sign myself.

[Translation]

NICARAGUAN LEGATION,
Washington, April 14, 1917.

MOST EXCELLENT SIR: I have the honor to inform your excellency that I have received from my Government a special instruction to lay before you the following statement:

On December 20, 1907, there was signed in this city by the representatives of the five Isthmian Republics a series of Conventions aiming to draw closer the relations between the Central American countries, the said series beginning with the General Treaty of Peace and Friendship, which establishes conditions favorable for unalterable peace and promoting the relations of those nationalities; it further recapitulates the matters that were the subject of special and independent conventions and fixes its term and the manner of terminating it, namely, through notice of one of the parties to the others one year before the expiration of the term of ten years, counted from the date of the exchange of ratifications.

One of these conventions is that which created the Central American Court of Justice, it having been concluded separately from the General Treaty of Peace and Friendship, and in the making of which all the requisites were observed that give it the character of a distinct convention, however much all of them may appear to spring from the original, lofty and noble idea which, in the first treaty of the series, embodied the various prerequisites for that mutual respect and reciprocal cordiality which ought to prevail among all those nationalities.

Article 27 of that Convention stipulated as its unquestionable object that "the high contracting parties will always consider in force during the term of ten years, counted from date of last ratification," which term for the purposes of the denunciation expired on the 11th day of the month of March of this year, and which my Government had to observe in good time to give to the signatory Governments notice of its intention, which, furthermore, was unnecessary seeing that the clause just mentioned sets forth in an inevitable and conclusive manner the term of its life without other formality than that described, for instance, in the General Treaty of Peace and Friendship, which I have mentioned above and has been adopted by the Department of Foreign Relations in Nicaragua, both to settle elementary duties of courtesy and to avoid any objection that might be made on the erroneous assumption that the two treaties are inseparable.

There is so little doubt as to the distinct and complete nature of every one of these Conventions of various duration that the last one of the series, to save any of the argument concerning further Central American Conventions whose term was set at five years with a possible extension of six months when "one of the parties had notified the others of its decision to withdraw from it", was denounced by the former Minister of Foreign Relations of Nicaragua, don Diego Manuel Chamorro, on December 16, 1913, without arousing any protest whatsoever based on the suggestion or recommendation which is made of it, as of the others, by the above referred to General Treaty of Peace and Friendship.

My Government wishes to impress your excellency with the assurance that Nicaragua is not in any way opposed to arbitration as the method par excellence recommended by civilization for the peaceful settlement of disputes among States, as is proved by its having contributed in preference to the maintenance of the Central American Court of Justice notwithstanding its harrowing economic condition, and the other fact no less eloquent that it lately sent the President of the Judiciary and of the Supreme Court of Justice to the said Court as Nicaragua's counsel, who, although he carried instructions to deny the jurisdiction of that Court over the matter in dispute, proved by his mere presence beyond doubt, a patent and marked evidence of respect and consideration as also of brotherhood for that institution and the honorable justices, designated by the sister Republics, according to the justice loving words of the President of the Court, Doctor don Angel Bocanegra, in the special reception granted to our representative.

Nicaragua regards it as a matter of regret to put on record here the deplorable truth, that the Central American Court of Justice, far from responding to the lofty purposes of its creation, degenerated plainly after a long period of inactivity into a center of lively intrigues of the Central American Governments incited against Nicaragua in connection with the signing of the Chamorro-Weitzel Treaty which was not carried into effect, and more particularly the Bryan-Chamorro Convention of 1914.

Through this Convention entered into in the exercise of the sovereign and inalienable powers that belong to Nicaragua and of which it will never tolerate the slightest impairment, an action was brought against my Government first by that of Costa Rica on March 24, 1916, later by that of Salvador on the 28th of August of the same year, after a well known crusade for the preparation of the minds for concerted action by the capitals of the Isthmian Republics, the consequence being that both awards of the Court invariably adverse were given in plain violation of justice and on questions forbidden to its jurisdiction before first attempting conciliation between the Governments to which express reference is made in Article I of the Convention that created the Court.

It is a preeminent matter of self respect to maintain intact the sovereign rights of the State, the mere discussion of which would detract from the national dignity; on the other hand, the undisguised prejudices of the Court against most important international negotiations of Nicaragua in which not only its public and sovereign faith is pledged but that also is involved which it has believed to be since the beginning its high and natural destiny; a prejudice which, in all likelihood would give rise to new compromising situations, painful and unusual, with the other sister Republics of Central America and which does not fit in with "the purpose of effectively guaranteeing their rights and maintaining unalterable peace and harmony in their relations", as set forth in the preamble of the Convention; and finally the motive, set forth in document of modification, which clearly is none the less sincere and compelling, forced my Government to arrive at that final decision as to the present organization and functioning of the Central American Court of Justice.

I shall not give any time, deeming it unnecessary in the presence of the papers already produced in both cases, to demonstrate the palpable injustice of the two judgments rejected by Nicaragua, in as much as with respect to the plea of Costa Rica, the provisions of the Jerez-Canas of 1858 and of the Cleveland Award of 1888 are definite; and with regard to that of Salvador, as it not only violates the rules of international law in its application to the Gulf of Fonseca but leaving intact the territorial rights of Honduras in the waters of the said Gulf, declares condominium with Nicaragua in the said bay, notwithstanding the fact that Honduras lies between Salvador and Nicaragua and the boundary between the first and last of those States was fixed by the said award.

It is fit to record here that when Salvador instituted its demand of condominium, it met with a vigorous protest from Honduras, which frankly stood against the claims of Salvador and that not long ago, a few days before the recent action was instituted, there was signed a Convention, which has not yet been ratified and of which I enclose a copy,⁴ between the representatives of the above cited countries under which Salvador gave a manifest recognition of the territorial rights of Honduras in the Bay of Fonseca, thereby granting full merit and justice to the firm ideas of the protest above referred to against the claims of condominium, which Convention won the praise of his excellency, the Minister of Foreign Relations of Honduras, as seen in the report of his Department of 1915-1916, which also contains the text of the said arrangement, which clearly amounts to the Government of Salvador rectifying its opinion.

It is, therefore, on the strength of the foregoing and from a sense of national dignity for the safeguard of the interests of the country and because the heavy contribution is manifestly inconsistent with the nature of the Courts agency that my Government, observing the unfortunate termination of its power, denounced altogether, rightfully and advisedly the convention on the subject, which while it leaves Clause I of the General Treaty of Peace and Friendship without force does not affect the remainder as a whole, as they have not been affected by the termination of Articles IV, V, XII and XIII of the same General Treaty.

Before closing this note, I must comply with the recommendation of his excellency, the Minister of Foreign Relations of Nicaragua to present to your excellency his personal compliments, and I avail myself of the opportunity of renewing [etc.]

MOST EXCELLENT SIR: By reason of the present Government of Nicaragua's denunciation of the convention which created the Central American Court of Justice, my Government, interested in conserving for the Central American countries the beneficent influence of that high tribunal, has made known to the other Governments of Central America its desire that a Central American Conference be held for the purpose of considering and proposing the form and conditions in which the Central American Court of Justice shall continue at the expiration of the period set in the Regulations of 1907.

And taking into consideration the fact that the Conference that gave birth to the high tribunal above referred to was held on the friendly initiative of the Governments of the United States and Mexico, and the great effect of the moral support of the two friendly nations on the practice of the principles and the performance of the purposes adopted at the said conference, my Government, as a token of its debt of gratitude, has given me special instructions to say to your excellency that it would be highly pleased if your Government would send representatives to the contemplated conference in the event of its being held.

Hoping that your excellency's Government will favorably entertain my Government's initiative and gladly lend it its friendly assistance in bringing to a happy conclusion the labors of the contemplated conference, I reiterate [etc.]

SIR: Referring to your telegram dated August 22, 5 p. m., I have the honor to send enclosed herein copies and translation of the note of the Minister of Foreign Affairs of Costa Rica dated July 17, 1917, and first published here on August 22, 1917, and of the note in reply from the Minister of Foreign Affairs of Honduras dated July 31, 1917, and first published here on August 23, 1917.

The Costa Rican note embodies the suggestion that the Washington Treaties be revised and extended, particularly that creating the Court of Justice, at a conference of plenipotentiaries to be held in this city September 15th next, and that if Nicaragua is unwilling to recede from its denunciation of the treaty that she be left out but the road left open to her to join at a later day whenever she admits the jurisdiction of the court in the recent suit of Costa Rica against her over the Bryan-Chamorro Treaty. The Honduras note accepts the invitation to the conference of plenipotentiaries but proposes that the primary subject of the conference be the embodying into a treaty of the union of all the Central American States, stating its willingness to enter into an extension of the treaties, but apparently only on the condition that Nicaragua also joins, in case the project for union fails.

A further report in compliance with your telegraphic instructions referred to above will be sent at an early date.

The Minister of Foreign Affairs of Costa Rica to other Central American Republics except Nicaragua

DEPARTMENT OF FOREIGN RELATIONS,
San José, July 17, 1917.

MR. MINISTER: I have the honor of informing your excellency that this Chancellery, in view of the note dated March 9 last which was sent to it by his excellency, the Minister of Foreign Affairs of Nicaragua, in which he gives notice of the denunciation, on the part of his Government, of the Convention of December 20, 1907, which created the Central American Court of Justice and which was signed in Washington by the Plenipotentiaries of Costa Rica, Honduras, Guatemala, Salvador and Nicaragua, thinks it necessary to hasten to bring about an exchange of impressions in the matter, in order wisely to decide what will be most to the interest of these Republics under the circumstances.

The Government of Costa Rica, inspired by the most cordial sentiments of fraternity, would observe with the greatest pleasure that the Government of Nicaragua, considering its denunciation as having been made within the spirit of Clause XXVII of the Convention, saw fit to accept the extension of the life of the Court for a new decade in view of the advantages which the maintenance of that institution brings to our nations in the midst of whom it fills the high mission of solving pacifically and in a civilized manner by rules of law the controversies or differences of an international character which might arise between them.

In a word, in the judgment of this Government, the Central American Court of Justice, in which are traced the noble principles of arbitration, is an important conquest of progress in these countries and it would be sad indeed to see it disappear exactly at a time in which the spectacle of the World War imposes on the human conscience the absolute necessity of banishing the cruel recourse to force as the solution of the contentions between nations.

The right of denunciation exercised by the Government of Nicaragua before the other signatories of the convention to which I refer imposes the reorganization of the Court by the other States agreeing with the idea that it should be preserved; and to provide for the unexpected contingency that that Government persists in its present position of closing its ears to all effort directed to induce it to desist, it is the lively and sincere desire of Costa Rica, and in this sense I hasten to communicate it to your excellency, that in the new treaty the steps be pointed out that are necessary so that at any time our sister Republic can join as high contracting party when it shall see fit to do so, after having changed its attitude.

The Chancellery has made efforts in the sense of inducing the Government of Nicaragua to desist from the denunciation made, because our greatest desire is to assure the extension of the institution alluded to in all its integrity; and we do not doubt that the Government of your excellency regards the case in conformity with the views expressed and will therefore permit us to suggest the advantage of employing your good offices with the Government of Nicaragua in order to arrive as soon as possible at the objective indicated.

But if the Government of our sister Republic should not accede to the request that it desist which is made of it, the Government of Costa Rica believes that in order to preserve the international unity, that is the fruit of the Treaties of Washington, it would be well to proceed by common accord of their signatories to the total or partial revision of these pacts in a new Conference of Plenipotentiaries of Central America which might meet, let us say, the 15th of September, next.

In proposing respectfully to your excellency this project I hasten to tell you that my Government as a pledge of its aspiration for the cordial settlement of the difficulty created, highly honors itself in offering, without more ado, the hospitality of the Republic for the conference mentioned, with the feeling of certainty that once removed the difficulties in the way of a good common understanding that today exist, it will be possible for Central America, at the expiration of the term of the denounced treaty or upon the substitution of one or more of those signed at the same time, to renew a system of international life in accord with its aspirations and interests, within the fraternal spirit which our history and solidarity of interests demand.

I am confident, Mr. Minister, that the delicate negotiation which I permit myself to initiate in the present note will be pleasing to the Government of your excellency and I avail myself [etc.]

CARLOS LARA

[Inclosure 2—Translation]

The Minister of Foreign Affairs of Honduras to the Minister of Foreign Affairs of Costa Rica.

TEGUCIGALPA, July 31, 1917.

Mr. Minister: * * * (Omitted portion merely acknowledges receipt of note from Foreign Minister of Costa Rica, dated July 17, 1917, and repeats to a great extent its contents.)

In answer I have the honor to inform your excellency that my Government takes up with enthusiasm of the liveliest kind the initiative undertaken by the distinguished Government of our sister Republic and that with the greatest satisfaction it will be represented by its plenipotentiary at the conference projected for the total or partial revision of the Treaties subscribed in Washington or to extend by means of a new treaty the convention which established the Central American Court of Justice, if, as I do not doubt, the other Governments of Central America, impressed with the high and noble end sought by the Government of your excellency, accept the fraternal initiative.

The denunciation of the convention which created the Central American Court of Justice by the Government of Nicaragua is really not what will end it, because with that denunciation or without it, the convention would terminate at the completion of the term of years fixed for its existence, if before then it is not prorogued by means of a new pact between the high contracting parties.

In Article XXVII of the Convention the high contracting parties declared that, for no reason, nor in any case, shall this convention be regarded as annulled; and, consequently, they shall always regard it as in force during the period of ten years counted from the last ratification.

The fixing of this term without the right of prolongation within the terms of the convention itself, as is the practice in treaties of a permanent character, suggests the idea that the Central American plenipotentiaries had in view at the time of subscribing to the Washington Pacts in 1907, that these pacts were in the way of preparation for the fusion of the Central American nations into one single nationality, as was expressly declared in the preamble of the Convention on Future Central American Conferences. And without doubt they thought that to realize this great and longed for ideal of patriotism the period of ten years would be enough.

If this was the thought which inspired our plenipotentiaries in the Conferences of Washington to fix in Article XXVII of the Convention creating the Central American Court of Justice a fixed period for the treaty to endure, then today, when this period of time is about to expire, a meeting of plenipotentiaries of the five Central American States is required, for the purpose of considering whether, as my Government believes, the moment has arrived to agree by pact upon the union to which the several peoples aspire, or, if the contrary is the case, to prorogue the convention which created the court, since, while the General Treaty of Peace and Friendship is in force, the Republics of Central America are obligated to solve by means of that Court, every disagreement or difficulty which may arise between them; and since the spirit which governs the Conventions of Washington taken as a whole, in agreement with the general sentiment, counsels the maintenance of the high Tribunal of Justice in its established form, as long as the union of Central America is not realized.

My Government, most excellent Sir, faithful to the great ideal of the unity of Central America which it has ever loved, avails itself of this happy occasion in which the peoples and Government of the Isthmus confirm in an unequivocal manner their sentiments of confraternity, to propose the ideal as the theme of first importance for the Conference of Plenipotentiaries initiated by the Government of your excellency.

The difficulties of all kinds that surround at the present the weak Republics in which the fatherland of our elders is divided and the certain forecast of future dangers, which in their isolation threaten each of them in the international disequilibrium that will exist in the world whatever be the result of the present formidable war, are other considerable reasons for accomplishing, once for all, by means of union, our historic destiny.

The very Government of Nicaragua, which perhaps has reasons for not accepting the initiative of your excellency by reason of its having been the actor in the denunciation of the treaty which created the Central American Court of Justice and of having maintained its denunciation notwithstanding the efforts made by the Government of Guatemala to bring about its reconsideration, would perhaps find no objection to subscribe with the other Governments of the sister Republics the Treaty of Union, demanded to-day more than ever by Central American patriotism.

My Government, confident of the good will of your excellency's, whose high views are reflected in the note to which I have the honor to refer, proposes to you this project and would like to have your illustrious opinion in order to present it to the other Governments of the sister Republics, who have on all occasions shown the most lively and sincere Central Americanist feeling.

The labors to realize the union of Central America would have sufficient time in which to be carried on in order to arrive at the most solid bases before the celebration, and with the idea of their being concluded before the time of the memorable date upon which is completed the centenary of our political independence, so that this date would find us already united in one single Republic—we, the five fractions of the Central American Isthmus.

Glory, unmeasurable glory, Mr. Minister, will be attained by the present governors of Central America, if, as I do not doubt, they place at the service of this great ideal their patriotic efforts.

If the proposition which is made above, which, with special instructions of the honorable, the President of the Republic, I present to the illustrious consideration of your excellency's Government, is not deemed practicable nevertheless this will not change the good will of my Government which will attend the conference which your excellency has proposed, for the ends expressed in your important note, and for every other high purpose directed to maintain the most perfect harmony and fraternity among Central American States.

I avail myself [etc.]

San Salvador, August 27, 1917, 5 p. m.

Department's August 22, 5 p. m. When Nicaragua denounced, with intention of terminating Washington Convention which provides for Central American Court of Justice, Salvador opposed her position and advised first with Honduras and Costa Rica regarding Central American conference to discuss renewal of Washington Convention especially one relating to Court and exhorting Nicaragua to reconsider. Costa Rica then assumed the initiative by inviting Honduras and the other Central American States in notes dated July 17, to Central American Conference at San José to be held September 15. Honduras added to her note of acceptance suggestion that reunion of Central America be discussed at conference as the main question. Minister of Foreign Affairs told me yesterday that Salvador favored the conference to discuss Washington Convention and favored principle of a united Central America but had instructed her representatives at Mexico City and Washington to sound Mexican and American Governments to ascertain if they would attend the proposed conference at San José and pending reply advised Costa Rica of action taken stating Salvador was disposed to accept but would first have to hear what position United States would take as she had not recognized present Costa Rica Government.

SALVADOREAN LEGATION,
Washington, August 31, 1917.

MOST EXCELLENT SIR: Under date of the 23d of this month I had the honor to send to your excellency a note conveying to you my Government's wish that the Government of the United States be represented in the Central American Conference which will undertake to propose and study the form and conditions of a continuance of the Central American Court of Justice. I have lately received notice by cable that the said conference will be held on October 12 next and my Government taking into consideration the great moral importance of your Government being represented at that important event wishes to know whether your excellency's Government accepts the invitation above referred to; wherefore, I venture to trouble your excellency with a request that you deign to favor me with a kindly answer.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, September 5, 1917.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note of August 23, 1917, in which you inform me that your Government, moved by what you refer to as the action of the Government of Nicaragua in denouncing the convention which creates a Central American Court of Justice, has made known to the other Governments of Central America its desire that a Central American Conference be held for the purpose of considering and proposing the form and conditions under which the Central American Court of Justice shall continue at the expiration of the period stated in the Convention of 1907. You further inform me that your Government has given you special instructions to say to me that it would be pleased if the Government of the United States would send representatives to the contemplated conference in the event of its being held.

In reply I have the honor to express my sincere appreciation that the Government of Salvador has seen fit to make this suggestion. It appears, however, from your note that the conference, if held, will be participated in by those persons who are now purporting to exercise governmental authority in Costa Rica. These persons who recently overthrew by force the Constitutional Government of Costa Rica are not recognized by this Government. You will therefore, I am sure, appreciate the motives actuating this Government when I express its very real regret that it cannot, in view of the circumstances above alluded to, act favorably on the suggestion which your Government has done this Government the honor to make.

The state of affairs is not encouraging. General dissatisfaction prevails partly because of unprecedented official corruption, lack of policy and authority; partly because of great influence of Japanese clique over the Government. There is a probability of renewed revolution by way of either separate movements of various motives [provinces?] and revolutionary leaders entailing dissolution of the state or a united young China movement ousting reactionary Mandarins and monarchists from power and support [ing?] President Li and Parliament. Tang Shao-yi and Sun are planning southern revolution with pro-Japanese, Pan-Asiatic and anti-foreign bias but they fortunately have no influence. All in all there is serious cause to fear trouble unless public action can be given a new direction.

Should the United States declare war it is highly improbable that China will not follow at an early date.² There is a chance that this would improve the situation especially if that action were taken without entanglement and expressly as being similar to that of the United States. The tactical international position of China would then be more independent and the progressive constitutionalist [constitutionalism?] in the Government and country would be strengthened accordingly.

There is a probability of very serious trouble. The Prime Minister favors declaration of war but Parliament insists that Cabinet be first reorganized in order to prevent control by reactionary elements. The Prime Minister plans to dissolve Parliament, the President resists.

¹Continued from For. Rel. 1916, p. 51.

²The United States broke off diplomatic relations with Germany February 3, 1917, and on the same day invited the neutral Powers to take similar action. China took this action March 14, 1917.

Yesterday, hired mob assailed halls of Parliament, additional troops are being brought to Peking. Should Parliament be suppressed a revolution is inevitable. I have told the Premier that the use of unconstitutional means would make injurious impression, British Chargé d'Affaires has made similar intimation.

The matter of renewed assurance of Chinese integrity and abstention from seeking territorial and preferential rights has again come up. Suggesting that such a declaration would clear the air and remove suspicion, I discussed the matter with the Japanese and French Ministers and the British Chargé d'Affaires; they and other Ministers are asking for favorable instructions by cable. Such a declaration at this time would favorably affect the domestic situation and might afford a means of reconciling Premier and Parliament.

I hope you will approve this action and have honor to suggest discussion of the situation with other Governments particularly the British, French and Japanese.

Today the President issued a mandate relieving the Prime Minister, appointing Wu Ting-fang acting Premier. General Wang, Chief of Staff, has assumed responsibility for the local military and police. All depends on what sort of men the President will select and be able to secure for the Cabinet. After this shall have been settled the decision in favor of war is likely. Your June 2, 6 p. m. Communicate textually to the Foreign Office the following:

The Government of the United States learns with the most profound regret of the dissension in China, and desires to express the most sincere desire that tranquillity and political coordination may be forthwith reestablished.

The entry of China into war with Germany, or the continuance of the status quo of her relations with that Government, are matters of secondary consideration. The principal necessity for China is to resume and continue her political entity and to proceed along the road of national development on which she has made such marked progress.

With the form of Government in China, or the personnel which administers that Government, the United States has an interest only in so far as its friendship impels it to be of service to China. But with the maintenance by China of one central, united and responsible Government the United States is deeply interested, and now expresses the very sincere hope that China in her own interest and in that of the world will immediately set aside her factional political disputes, and that all parties and persons will work for the reestablishment of a coordinate government and the assumption of that place among the Powers of the world to which China is so justly entitled, but the full attainment of which is impossible in the midst of internal strife and discord.

If possible communicate substance of the above through unofficial channel to leaders of military party opposing the President.

The Department is proposing to Britain, France and Japan identic representations to China to restore national unity and maintain internal peace as of first importance to itself and to the world and to relegate the question of relation to the world war to secondary place.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Peking, June 5, 1917, midnight.

Without any previous intimation of such action, the Minister for Foreign Affairs, Dr. Wu Ting-fang, has requested me to communicate the following appeal to the President:

In view of the present dangerous situation and the attitude of the rebellious Tsuchuns, I earnestly request that President Wilson, as the defender of the cause of democracy and constitutionalism all the world over, be moved to make a public statement on the subject of the American attitude toward China and earnestly supporting President Li Yuan-hung as the constitutional Chief of the State to whom all western nations look for the safety of their interest in China.

The effect of such a public statement coming from America at this juncture would undoubtedly be effective and immediately cause all law-abiding men to rally round President Li Yuan-hung besides at once discomfiting the Tuchuns.

Furthermore, urge the American Government to consult the allied powers at once, particularly England and France over whom America has great influence today, owing to the extent to which they are financially and morally indebted to America, and request them to support the same attitude at once in China. It should be pointed out clearly and unmistakably that it has largely been the false assumption of the rebellious generals that the Allies were backing them that the present crisis which threatens to rend the country and ruin trade for ever [sic]. Rapid action is necessary if the war issue initiated on the invitation of the American Government is not to make in China the same fatal result as in Greece and Roumania.

Parliament is still functioning in the capital of the country despite the menacing attitude of the rebellious generals. The Vice Chancellor [Vice President?] at Nanking does not support generals' action, but situated as he is, he is not in a position to actively oppose the generals at the present moment. All the southern provinces are loyal to the President and to parliament and have strongly denounced the revolt of generals, and there is not a single class or section of the commercial and civilian population throughout country who are voluntarily supporting the generals.

AMERICAN LEGATION,

SIR: I have the honor to transmit for the information of the Department a copy of a declaration of the President's policy issued by him on May 31.

There is also enclosed a newspaper account of the conflict between the republican and military parties.⁴ The main points in the situation as it stands at the present time are as follows:

The revolutionary Tuchuns (military governors) are gaining confidence through a more complete organization of their party and on account of the inaction of the President. The seat of their counsels is in Tientsin; the leaders of the military party, of the Chin Pu Tang, of the pro-Japanese party, as well as Liang Shih-yi and his followers, are at present congregated there. They are trying to form a provisional government. As far as personnel is concerned they could probably form a stronger government than any other combination.

The present plan of the militarists is directed toward the object of isolating and strangling Peking. They are in control of the railways leading here. They are preventing the shipment of foodstuffs. They are planning to send troops to be stationed at Fengtai, outside of Peking.

Meanwhile the President and what remains of the constitutional Government are paralyzed, through the lack of military and financial support. As the declaration of the President shows, he has taken a conciliatory and pacific attitude, being firm only when it came to resisting illegal measures. He has relied largely upon the advice of General Wang Shih-chen, Chief of Staff, who is a quiet, just-minded and highly respected man. The President has at no time used tactical advantages through which he might have overthrown the Tuchuns and confounded their counsels. He has quietly relied on the justice of his cause but has not been supported by an organized group of men. The Government itself is thoroughly disorganized; the Ministries are in charge of inferior officials; there are only two substantive Ministers left, the Minister for Foreign Affairs and the Minister of the Navy.

Should the militarists be successful in entirely overthrowing the President and his Government, no permanent solution will be afforded. The southern provinces are all opposed to the militarist action and would probably create a separate republic. Even in the north the action of this party would offend the senses of the people and would have the support only of the men actively engaged therein. No permanent government can therefore be expected of the reactionary policy represented by the militarist organization. As they are, however, the only existing powerful organization in China, they have to be reckoned with in any settlement to be made.

PAUL S. REINSCH

[Inclosure]

DECLARATION BY THE PRESIDENT OF HIS POLICY

[From the Peking Gazette of June 1, 1917]

President Li Yuan-hung has made his attitude clear in regard to the present situation in a long telegram, which he sent to the provinces last night. He reviews the past events and repudiates one by one the accusation brought against him and Parliament and then takes the Tutchuns soundly to task. Attention is called particularly to the closing part of the telegram, in which the President announces what he would do if the Tutchuns should insist on provoking hostilities. The following is a full translation of the said telegram:

Extra urgent. To the Vice President, Tutchuns, Governors, Inspector General Chang Hsun, Inspector General Lu Yung-ting, etc., etc., and all newspaper offices. Recently baseless rumors have been diligently spread and unscrupulous people have tried to fan up ill feelings. It is a great surprise to me that high provincial officials could have been misled by such rumors into taking arbitrary steps without considering the correctness or otherwise of the same. Provincial authorities are trustees of the Central Government, with which they are closely and vitally connected for the defence of the country and the protection of the homesteads. There is no reason why they should not plainly give their views if they have any doubts to clear. Yet they have sought to further swell the wave and stir up the already troubled seas by joining in the same cry. Can anyone imagine what the dangerous consequences will be?

Against my wishes I have been thrown into the troublous times at an old age. The reason why I did not refuse to accept the great responsibilities that were thrust on my shoulders was because that after the great disturbances the people were looking for a new lease of life, that the military men were all my bosom friends and that the Premier was my colleague in tribulations. In view of such intimate relationships how could it be possible for there to be any partitions between us? During the last year I have been humbling myself to listen to the advice of others. Even when difference of opinion arose between my office and the Kuo Wu Yuan regarding administrative questions I have never refused to stoop down and accept others' views in order to bring about harmony. I used to say that the straightforwardness of Chih-chuan (Tuan Chi-jui) should prove an excellent counterpart for my sincere appreciation.

Upon the diplomatic rupture suddenly taking place political crises have followed one another. Cabinet Ministers broke up from inside while Parliament pressed from without. The cries for the reorganization of the Cabinet increased in volume but according to my own conscience it should not have been so. On the other hand I vainly looked for methods to maintain the situation or settle the dispute. My fear was that if the tension be allowed to last too long the difficulty would increase in intensity. The arbitrary behaviour of one person finally caused cries to arise from every quarter. If the steps were retraced at a critical point, confidence and prestige would have been damaged, while if I had departed from the regular track discipline and order would have been cast to the winds. No matter in which direction I should turn I was bound to place Chih-chuan in a difficult position, which would be contrary to my intention of love and sympathy for the ex-Premier. I believed therefore that it would be preferable to remove him temporarily from office in order to enable him to retain and increase his prestige. Since his merits would then remain in the memory of the people it would not be long before we would hear his golden advice once more. Furthermore, it was my duty to see that the old vacated their office and was succeeded by new. It would be better for me to bear the responsibility of slightly offending my friend as it would not be difficult to amend in the future. It is my view that in truthfulness and sincerity your affection for Chih-chuan does not come up to that of mine.

As to the question of counter-signature by Cabinet Ministers, it was merely following precedents. And since Parliament had already lodged an interpellation, the reply of the Cabinet should be waited for. As it was a point of law a solution could certainly be arrived at. It is unfair therefore to insist that it is a violation of law. Again, the dismissal of the Premier vacated also the post of the Minister of War. And since all eyes are turned to the capital, where peace and order must be maintained, it was necessary to have a person, who possessed high prestige and commanded real respect, to act as the head of the troops and to pacify the minds of the people. The establishment of the Office of Precautionary Measures was an emergency step. It would be promptly abolished as soon as the Cabinet could be organised. What suspicion could there be between the Central Government and the provinces so that it has necessitated the latter to send troops to watch the former at a distance? There is really no need for argument in this connection.

Ever since the reassembly of Parliament numerous political banners have been set up. Little has been achieved but a good deal of quarrel has taken place. Recently on account of the excessive restrictions for the making of the Constitution, certain persons have endeavoured to pass measures by utilizing special opportunities. People became exceedingly indignant and considered Parliament to be the source of trouble. The Tuchuns, being unwilling to allow laws to be made for prejudiced purpose, asked to have the same amended. The far sighted views of the veteran statesmen agreed perfectly with that of mine. How could I have differed with you since I was directed by my patriotism? My view was that there were still a good many wise persons in Parliament, and as the discussion of the Constitution was still proceeding, there was hope of attaining our view if we simply endeavoured to exchange views. So long as we could compel the members to reconsider their views even at the eleventh hour there was no need to rob their cow because it treaded a field. It was for this reason that I shelved the petition (of the Tuchuns). I made this clear personally to Tuchuns Tsao Kun and Meng En-yuan. Yet I am insistently accused for partiality to the M. P.s and slighting the provincial officials. When law is tied down how could the administration proceed? Can you imagine that I am so stupid as this?

Rumors whispered at roadsides even go farther than this. They allege that it was my intention to inflict punishment on those who disobeyed my words and to dismiss half of the provincial authorities. In relationship with you I am officially a public servant but privately a member of the same family with you. I am not only bound to you by the duties of the State but also by the tie of brotherhood. What was harmful to you must be harmful to me and what was beneficial to you must also be beneficial to me. In addition to this it must be remembered that you came from a far distance to give me advice. Your words might have been too hot but they were sincere and patriotic. At this time of world war I must rely on you like the Great Wall. How then could I have entertained the idea of cutting you off like severing my limbs for no reasons whatsoever, and on whom should I rely if this were done? You say the mandate was given to the Bureau for publication: then it will not be difficult to ascertain the truth by looking up the registry. If you say the mandate was kept at my office, pray how came it to be known to people outside? The saying is that rumors stop at the door of the wise. I am surprised to know that such high and responsible persons like the Tuchuns could have been misled by a few unscrupulous people.

Dangers lurk in every corner as the diplomatic question is not yet decided. Wide stretches of land lie scorched like a desert between the Huai River and the Yangtse. Famine sufferers are to be seen everywhere while robbers in hiding still lurk here and there. These facts alone are sufficient to tell us what the situation is before us. The reason why the State employs officials is for the benefit of the people. It is impossible for us to do too much even if we worked to our very best ability and perfect harmony. How are we to explain ourselves if we indulge in selfish war against all sense of order and discipline? How can we depend on our military force as support and use baseless rumors as war cry? The members of Parliament are accused of being desirous of dividing the country into federal states, yet you are literally occupying each a province for the purpose of defying the Government. You accuse the cabinet of violating law, yet, with the assistance of a military force, you endeavour to disobey the orders of the Government. The only goal such acts can lead to is partition of the country like the five Chi and making the country a protectorate like Korea. In which case both restoration of the monarchy and the establishment of the Republic will be an idle dream. You may not care for the black records that will be written against you in history but you ought certainly to realize your own fate. The uprising at Kiangsi and Nanking were for the purpose of uniting China. The revolution started in Yunnan was for the protection of the Republic.

Now if your declaration for independence is to uphold the constitution then I must remind you that the said law is yet in the stage of the second reading. If your declaration is against the Chief Executive then you must confess that I have committed no acts of treason.

If on the other hand the declaration of war by the several commanders of troops has been made for the reason that a single person has been removed from office, then the war is without a just cause and the honour of the person who has vacated office will surely be blackened. It is not only a crime against the public but also returning good with evil. What is there in it that you are so willing to harm yourselves as well as others? Is it possible to believe that you are so unwise?

I am an old man. Like the bean stalk under the leaf I have always been watching for any possibility of not seeing and understanding aright. Yea, I walk day and night as if treading on thin ice. I welcome all for giving me advice and even admonition. If it will benefit the country I am ready to apologize.

But if it be your aim to shake the foundations of the country and provoke internal war, I declare that I am not afraid to die for the country. I have passed through the fire of trial and have exhausted my strength and energy from the beginning to the end for the Republic. I have nothing to be ashamed of. I will under no circumstance watch my country sink into perdition, still less to subject myself to become a slave to another race.

Of such acts I wash my hands in front of all the elders of the country. These are sincere words from my true heart and will be carried out into deeds.

[Telegram]

AMERICAN LEGATION,

Peking, June 6, 1917, 6 p. m.

Commenting on the message of the Minister for Foreign Affairs communicated in my cipher telegram June 5, 12 p. m., I beg to say that movement of the military governors against the President has gained some strength by reason of the accession of certain more responsible and constructive politicians, such as Liang Shih-yi, yet the Provisional Government set up by them at Tientsin appears incapable of establishing itself, because its reactionary tendency is distrusted by the people in general, but particularly in the south, and because opposition to the existing parliamentary régime is the sole element of coherence among its factions. Moreover, the movement appears to be controlled by the extreme reactionaries like Ni Ssn-chung while the wiser leaders like Tuan are less active. Its success in overthrowing the President and ousting Parliament could hardly fail to result in the secession of the southern provinces and a scramble of personal ambitions for the control of the remainder of the country.

While it is a fact that the most mature motives of self-interest have led to the defection of the military governors, it is nevertheless unfortunately true that cleavage between them and the constituted authorities of the Central Government found its occasion in the question of entering the war against Germany and that the reactionaries have had to force the issue ostensibly on that point and have so far succeeded as to have created the general belief that their movement has the tacit approval of the Powers at war with Germany. The issue thus ostensibly presented is in fact fictitious inasmuch as parliamentary party is actually no less sympathetic with the cause, having indeed taken the initiative in associating China with the action of the United States in severing relations with Germany: but it has been reluctant to give a free hand to the military party in the adoption of that policy not only because it distrusted the political use to be made of the situation but still more because it had reason to suspect that the reactionaries had planned to commit this country to participation in the war upon terms that would make China dependent on Japan.

The result of these intrigues has been that the reactionary rebels are making capital of their fictitious identification with the cause of the Allies and that the constituted authorities who are in fact more in sympathy with our aims are on the defensive against us and fearful that in the desire to get China on our side and to stifle German trade, the Allies will sacrifice unity of the country and whatever progress it may have made towards constitutional government. Quite apart from any Chinese domestic question, and with a view merely to the possibility of usefulness of this country to the Allied cause, I venture to state conviction that it will be impossible to count even upon the moral support of China as a nation unless the Allies dissociate China's interests from those of the military clique and make it evident that participation in the war in their behalf is not to be used as a pawn in Chinese domestic politics.

From conversation with British Chargé d'Affaires I infer that this Government while not itself free to take advantage of, regards apprehensively the [apparent omission]. Allied interests have been perverted by domestic intrigues here and would be glad if our Government would take the initiative in dissociating such interests from the reactionary program. Although the French Minister has heretofore been blindly zealous to involve China in the war at all costs, a recent change in his attitude suggests that his Government is aware of the danger of forcing this country into the conflict at the cost of anarchy. The only nation to profit by disintegration of China would be Japan, which would scarcely oppose the action suggested if agreeable [agreed to?] by Great Britain and France as being not an interference in Chinese politics but an effort to dissociate Allied interests from their unreal admixture with such questions.

The above comment which had already been drafted is sent for your fuller information despite the receipt of your telegram of June 4, 3 p. m., providing for action adequate to the crisis.

[Inclosure]Consul General Heintzleman to Minister Reinsch

No. 23

AMERICAN CONSULATE GENERAL,
Canton, June 6, 1917.

SIR: I have the honor to state that during the agitation in Peking and elsewhere throughout the country over the question regarding a declaration of war against Germany the influential commercial guilds and the press generally in Canton opposed the Government's policy of entering the war, while several of the minor political parties only were inclined in favor of war. The officials as a rule appear to be indifferent in the matter.

None of the southern provinces, which, it will be recalled, were leaders in the revolutions of 1911, of 1913 and of 1916, have declared their independence from the Central Government. The natives generally throughout this province view the movement in the north against the Central Government with strong disfavor; indeed, it may safely be stated that the people and the provincial assembly, the party leaders and former revolutionists are so completely on the side of the President and Parliament as to give the provincial authorities no cause for apprehension as to the local situation. The local press, too, regardless of party, is supporting the President and the Parliament. I am assured on every hand that no disturbance is to be feared in South China, so far at least as the lending of military assistance to the Tuchuns in the north would be conducive of such a result.

The attitude of this province in the present crisis is indicated by recent telegrams which the provincial assembly has despatched to the President and to the provincial governors. The telegram to the President denounced the conduct of the rebellious Tuchuns as lawless and urged him to uphold the national dignity and safeguard the rights of the citizens by punishing those who disobeyed his orders. The circular telegram to the provincial governors called upon them to act in accordance with the constitution and obey the Central Government. It recalled the fact that most of them took an active part in the second revolution for the re-establishment of the Republic, and pointed out that their manifest duty was to subordinate personal or party feeling to the general interests of the nation, which required that they should uphold the law and support the Central Government.

As showing how completely the governing body of the province supports the Central Government, it may be noted that both the military and civil governors have telegraphed the Vice President invoking his assistance in the immediate suppression of the seceding provinces. General Lu Yung-ting, Inspector General of the Two Kwangs, has also telegraphed the Vice President, as well as General Chang Hsun, asking that they attempt to persuade the seceding provinces to refrain from military action and wait for a peaceful settlement. This action on the part of Civil Governor Chu Ching-lan is all the more remarkable as he is a northern militarist and a henchman of the retired Premier, Tuan Chi-jui.

I gather from conversations with leading Cantonese that they are fearful lest the President and Parliament, in their eagerness for peace, will yield to the demands of the northern Tuchuns and thus sacrifice the principles underlying the Republic. General Chen Ping-kun, the newly appointed acting Tuchun of Kwangtung, in conversation yesterday during an official call, told me he hoped that the southern provinces would be able to arrange peace by serving as an intermediary between the Central Government and the seceding provinces. He stated that the south would insist in preserving the republican form of Government, and that centralization was necessary to any adequate reform.

In approaching the rival factions with the object of having them compose their differences, an important element, apart from the tendency of the Chinese mind for compromise, is the ever present fear of foreign interference. The high provincial authorities here believe that all parties will be finally brought to see that, should their activities lead to the establishment of two separate governments, the ensuing turbulence would easily be provocative of foreign interference, with all that is comported with such a condition; and that China's best hope in preserving her integrity lay in presenting a united front.

Whether peace and order will be eventually restored through the agency of the high officials of the southern provinces, as they fondly hope, is difficult to foretell. It is significant, however, that in the meanwhile the leaders among the former revolutionists and republicans of South China are in communication concerning means for opposing the military party in the north, and supporting the President and Parliament. Generals Chen Chiang-ming and Hu Han-ming, former governors general of this province, as well as former Viceroy Tsen Chun-hsuan and Li Lieh-chun, radical southern leaders with large followings in Canton, are expected to meet here soon to discuss the situation and consider means of lending, if necessary, armed assistance to the so-called liberal constitutional elements in the Central Government. These men, though absent, exert a dominating influence over this province.

In the present crisis, as was invariably the case in those of the past, the leading difficulty lies in the historical opposition between North and South. The successes of the three recent revolutions had been as much a victory of the latter as the triumph of another form of government. The higher ability and wealth of the southern maritime provinces had long chafed under the predominance of the less intelligent North. The situation was reversed and Canton triumphed over Peking. The hostility between this sectionalism presents an element of danger by offering the possibility of a divided China. The country is still so invertebrate, the means of communication as yet so scantily developed, the degree of civilization so diverse, that this peril is perhaps the most serious of all. The real question concerns less the title of the Government, its personnel, and the nature of the constitution than the ability of China in the presence of these disruptive forces to evolve without anarchy and disorder from its primitive condition toward that of a modern state.

4946. Your 6368, June 5, 10 p. m. This Government appreciates importance of China's entrance into the war, but China torn by civil strife would be unable to render assistance of any sort. The present revolt seems to threaten the overthrow of the Republic. To make entrance into the war an excuse for overturning the Republic would be most regrettable and inconsistent with pleas for democracy. It seems urgently necessary to do all possible to reconcile factions.

He stated that it is the belief of the Foreign Office here that the matter will be removed [settled?] by compulsory arbitration within a week. Today Asahi published a telegram from Peking stating that on the fifth the American Minister, acting on instruction from Washington, communicated with the Chinese Government in the sense of the proposed identic representation. ⁵*Mutatis mutandis* to the American Embassy at London.

The American Government is informed that the military party in revolt claims sympathy of the Allies. This is unfortunate since it will likely deprive us of sympathy of Chinese people. It is important in the view of this Government to disassociate our action from all instigation of revolt against recognized government. In fact the rupture of relations with Germany was first urged by the parliamentary party now identified with the recognized government.

This party still desires to be associated with the aims of the Allies but insists upon a Cabinet in sympathy with parliamentary majority as necessary to prevent use of situation to weaken or overthrow popular government. If the revolt succeeds in overthrowing the present government civil war, I fear, is sure to result. In such an event the allied cause would gain nothing.

Identic representations by the United States, France, Great Britain and Japan, urging the need of an amicable adjustment of difficulties would undoubtedly tend to bring about such adjustment and reunite all factions in support of the Allies.

Please urge a favorable response.

The general situation is not unfavorable to compromise as there is discord among the rebel generals and the wiser heads discountenancing violent measures; the communication of the American Government adds to the conciliatory influences. The war question has retired into the background giving way to the purely factional and personal rivalries which from the beginning animated the revolutionists. At present stage is occupied by General Chang Hsun. Upon the invitation of the President who was led to expect assistance from him he has come as far as Tientsin, 2,000 of his troops preceding him to Peking. Assuming role of arbiter in the last resort he is demanding immediate dissolution of Parliament. The President evidently shaken by his disappointment is weakening although he would appear to have a chance of uniting northern generals against Chang who is universally feared and hated. The latter proposes to come to Peking to-morrow.

Presence of his notorious troops here is not reassuring and the question arises whether the diplomatic corps should call on the Chinese Government to prohibit bringing up more of these troops. Understand their presence is unnecessary and threatens disturbances.

In conversation Japanese Minister inferentially gave me an insight into Japanese policy in its completeness at present juncture. Although only two months ago the Japanese objected to stationing government troops along railway he now states it would be undesirable to make any objection to presence of bandit troops of Chang Hsun and similar contingents of the Manchurian Viceroy who has two thousand troops at Lanchow on Japanese-protected section.

Japanese Minister said that the last hope for peace lies in Chang Hsun's mediation, whereas it is well known that the success of Chang Hsun would cause a new revolution in the South.

Japanese Minister stated that it is desirable to get rid of Parliament as it is impossible to do business while that body is obstructing.

It is therefore apparent that after the Northern revolutionary element has been successful Japan will advance a loan and expects to receive privileges desired without check from Parliament.

The countenance given by the note of the American Government to the existing Government and institutions is represented by the Japanese press as an intervention. The action of this Legation has been to treat the Government to which I am accredited as rightful authority but nothing has been done to interfere or to court enmity of substantial men in the opposition. He stated he regretted that Japan had not been informed when the proposal was made, that virtually the same communication had already been handed formally to China. The Foreign Office view is that, while the United States may not have intended by the communication to take one side as against the other, the action in effect did so and was used by certain political elements in Peking to strengthen the position of the President. The Cabinet will discuss the matter tomorrow. I beg to suggest that if the proposal for identic representation is accepted by Great Britain and France the fact be cabled me for the information of the Foreign Office.

Today Asahi publishes a telegram from its New York correspondent giving the alleged text of the note to China which it states was made public by the Department June 8. Gist of the note is as follows:

China is the center of power in the Far East and should the quarrels of its several parties lead to revolutionary disturbances Japan will be obliged to despatch troops to China to protect her interests. It is feared that a separate peace may be concluded between Russia and Germany. Sooner or later Japan will be obliged to send troops to Manchuria on behalf of her Allies. Peace is necessary in the Far East in order to check Russia's separate peace movement. Japan maintains a large army at home and does not dare to move because she desires to prepare for any eventuality in the Far East. If she takes advantage of disturbances in China and sends a large army to Manchuria it may cause misunderstandings with Entente Powers, therefore maintenance of peace is a most urgent necessity. The United States is so deeply concerned for the reason that she wishes to allow Japan to reserve her freedom to mobilize at any time.

I have pointed out to the Foreign Office the incredibility of this alleged text but beg to suggest that I be authorized to give out complete denials.

Japanese newspapers here and local representatives of Japanese press are diligently circulating reports to the effect that this Legation has been actively interfering in the controversy between the President and the military governors. Both by printed reports and by interviews the agents of this apparently inspired propaganda are seeking to create belief in absurd stories of our activities such as that I intrigued with the President and even paid over large amounts of money to bring about the dismissal of Tuan as Prime Minister; that I have been instrumental in arranging large secret loans to assist followers; that I acted independently and without authorization of the Department in making to the Chinese Government the communication which was in fact your telegram of June 4, 3 p. m.

It would seem that the purposes of this propaganda are to impair American influence with the Chinese and to arouse in the minds of the representatives of other Allied Governments here such distrust as would prevent the possibility of complete cooperation with us in matters of joint concern.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Peking, June 14, 1917.

SIR: In continuation of my despatch No. 1496, of May 12,⁴ I have the honor to report on the further development of the political situation in China. On May 14 I had occasion to converse both with the President and General Tuan Chi-jui, the Premier. From the remarks which they made to me, I could gather that the contrast between them was practically insurmountable. The President took the ground that the Premier had lost the confidence of Parliament and could not possibly be trusted by them further. The bringing of the military governors to Peking particularly had destroyed the confidence of Parliament. On the other hand, the President expressed his firm belief to the effect that the military governors did not unconditionally support General Tuan. The Premier, in conversation, protested his desire to work with the President and Parliament. He claimed, however, that the attitude of Parliament had become so unreasonable that cooperation was well-nigh impossible. In the course of the conversation he stated that "he conceived it necessary for the Government to assume an attitude of friendliness toward the Japanese but that it was his purpose not to yield any essential rights." He then asked "what do you suppose would happen if the radical Kuo Min-tang would come into power?" and assured me that he had positive proof that Sun Yat-sen and General Tsen Ch'un-hsuan had both given written assurances to the Japanese Consul General at Shanghai that should either of them come into power they would conclude with Japan an agreement giving to the Japanese the equivalent of the arrangements contemplated in the famous Group V demands of 1915. I believe that General Tuan is sincere and that, while the pro-Japanese clique under Ts'ao Ju-lin has been cooperating with him, he has not committed himself to Japanese control.

The deadlock between Parliament and the Premier continued for another week. On Monday, the 21st of May, the President seems to have made up his mind to take a strong position toward General Tuan and the military governors. He expressed to some of the leaders who were calling on him quite decidedly the opinion that General Tuan should yield. Evidently the military governors were at this time somewhat frightened and confused. Several among them, particularly General Ni Ssu-ch'ung, were extremely unpopular on account of the extortions which they had practiced and it would be easy for a strong hand to topple them over. The majority of the Tüchuns left Peking hurriedly on Monday night, taking their course to Hsüchowfu where they intended to consult with General Chang Hsün. It was believed in Peking that this was rather a pretext to save their face and to serve as an excuse toward General Tuan, so that he might allow them to go freely.

On May 22 the President invited me to lunch, together with Doctor W. W. Willoughby, the American Constitutional Advisor. It was plain from his remarks that he had made up his mind to dismiss General Tuan. He asked Professor Willoughby some questions as to the legal form of the dismissal. On the same day Mr. Tsa'o Ju-lin called on me. He stated that the Tüchuns had sent him to express their regret at not having been able to make farewell calls, due to their sudden decision to leave Peking. He asked me whether I had any opinion to express with respect to the attitude of the Tüchuns. I told him that I did not. Immediately afterwards, the French Minister called on me and related that Tsa'o Ju-lin had visited him on the same mission as above. Mr. Tsa'o had, however, asked the French Minister whether any support could be given the Tüchuns by the French Legation. Mr. Conty stated to me that he had answered in the negative.

The mandate dismissing General Tuan was issued on May 23; it was countersigned by Doctor Wu Ting-fang, probably in his capacity as a member of the Cabinet. At the same time Doctor Wu was appointed as Acting Premier. The nomination of Mr. Li Ching-hsi as Premier was sent to Parliament for approval shortly afterwards and was immediately approved. The President placed great faith in Mr. Li, who is an official of long experience, belonging to the old school, a nephew of Li Hung-chang. As Mr. Li had before delayed to take up his active duties as Minister of Finance, to which office he had been appointed on May 2, so he now declined to take up the duties of the head of the Cabinet.

I saw General Tuan on the morning of May 23 upon a matter of business. He seemed quite unconcerned and talked on the matter involved in great detail without ever referring to the political situation. In the afternoon his representative, General Ching, came to see me evidently quite disturbed. I gave him a message of personal friendship for General Tuan. The latter left Peking for Tientsin the same night.

It was the general belief in Peking that General Li now had an opportunity of reconstructing the government with strong popular support. The Parliamentary party were eager to take action against the most corrupt and unpopular of the military governors. The President appeared to count on several factors: he believed that General Tuan was isolated, that the Tüchuns were divided and would not take common action, that the majority of them would support the President, that he could particularly rely on the Military Governor of Chihli Province, that he could also rely on the friendly support of General Chang Hsün and that either Li Ching-hsi or General Wang Shih-chen, the Chief of the General Staff, would accept the Premiership. Parliament was in a mood to accept a strong Cabinet regardless of party affiliations.

On May 26 General Ni Ssu-ch'ung, who was the most active among the military party, declared that the dismissal of General Tuan had been illegal, that his province (Anhwei) disapproved and would act independently of the Central Government. This was the crucial point in the development of the situation. I have been informed by men who were present at Hsuehowfu at this time that General Ni was in a desperate mood, knowing that action would be taken against him. The remaining military governors assumed an expectant attitude to see what would happen. It is stated that the Japanese present at Hsuehowfu encouraged General Ni to go ahead.

It is believed by the most expert observers that had the President immediately dismissed Ni and ordered his punishment, had appointed a junior commander in his place or, preferably, given the civil governorship of Anhwei concurrently to General Chang Hsun, the rest of the military party would have fallen away from Ni and the President should have been able to deal with them individually. Instead of taking this action, however, the President was persuaded to send a conciliatory letter to General Ni. The result of this was to establish the leadership of General Ni over the military party and to encourage the majority of the military governors to declare their independence. A so-called provisional government was set up at Tientsin with General Lei Chen-ch'un as its head. With respect to the inwardness of this government I have received the following confidential information. The older and wiser men of the military party, men like General Tuan Chi-jui and Mr. Hsü Shih-ch'ang, held themselves entirely aloof from it. General Ni Ssu-ch'ung was the leading spirit. By dint of force the so-called government helped itself to the deposits of the Chinese Government in the Tientsin branch of the Bank of China. A total of $900,000 was absorbed in this way. The offices of the government were deserted, although a long list of employees was drawn up. All political work was done by negotiations at the homes of the generals. The men greatly in evidence were the members of the pro-Japanese clique, Mr. Tao Ju-lin and his henchman Major General Hsü Shu-cheng, and General Tuan Chih-kuei. General Aoki, the Japanese Military Advisor to the Government, was also on the ground.

In Peking, meanwhile, a creeping paralysis seemed to affect the Government. The President relied on General Wang Shih-chen, the Chief of the General Staff, for control in and around Peking and for advice on the situation. General Wang is undoubtedly an honest, dutiful man, but his sympathies were with the military party and he counselled conciliation at every step. The acting Minister of Communications, at present thoroughly under Japanese control, issued orders to the railways to the effect that all orders of the military governors for transportation, etc., should be implicitly obeyed and that there should be no question of divided authority. The President himself showed his inherent inability to take decisive action, although he continued to protest that he preferred death to committing an illegal act.

Incidentally I may state at this point that when at this time and later the question of the movements of revolutionary troops, and the stationing thereof at Tientsin and along the railway came up, the Japanese Minister persistently took the position that it would be highly undesirable at this time to make any objection on the ground of conflict with the protection of the railway by foreign troops. This attitude was taken notwithstanding that within two months before the Japanese Legation had strongly objected to the stationing of a few government troops along the said railway.

About this time the President, presumably on the advice of Mr. Li Ching-hsi, issued a mandate inviting General Chang Hsün to come to Peking as arbitrator. It must be confessed that it is difficult to understand the reason for such action. But it is plain that the President had been made to believe that Chang Hsün would in some way give him support in the constitutional issue. This in the face of the fact that Chang knows nothing of and cares absolutely nothing for a constitution, and considers Parliament an unmitigated nuisance, a crowd of useless meddlers and busy-bodies; also that he is a notorious monarchist favoring the restoration of the Ching dynasty; not to speak of his character as a bandit chief. For some reason, however, the President believed that Chang could be used to keep the Tuchuns in check. This is probably true but with a reservation that General Chang would not be acting for any policy or principle of the President but for his own ends. General Chang Hsün arrived in Tientsin on June 7. To an American who saw him he expressed himself in the most confident spirit. He stated "everything is settled. I have told the President to dissolve Parliament and I shall be in Peking in a few days to settle the rest. Some of my troops have reached the gate of Peking. I have a message from them that they have the situation well in hand." His breezy and confident manner indicated that he believed himself not only the arbiter but the ruler of the destinies of China. There are undoubtedly in the character of this man rare qualities of leadership, but there is nothing of any understanding of modern government. He is, however, a nationalist and though the Japanese have tried their best to get a hold over him and have helped him to make many profitable investments he seems to have preserved his independence.

On June 11 President Li gave way to what he considered the inevitable and signed his mandate dismissing Parliament. The text of the mandate and of President Li's telegram are herewith enclosed. Doctor Wu Ting-fang, the Acting Premier, declined to sign this mandate, stating that as the Premier-designate, Mr. Li Ching-hsi, had advised its issue, it was fitting that he should come to Peking and assume office and responsibility. He, Doctor Wu, not being in favor of the act, saw no reason for signing the mandate. At 2 a. m. on the morning of June 13 Doctor Wu was roused from his bed and asked to sign a mandate designating General Chiang Ch'ao-tsung, the commander of the Peking gendarmerie, as Acting Premier and accepting Doctor Wu's resignation from that charge. Immediately after, in the same night, General Chiang signed the mandate. It had been represented to the President that should the mandate not be issued, it would be impossible to prevent violent acts in Peking.

Five of the southern provinces have already telegraphed their protest against the action taken through this mandate. Most of the members of Parliament have left Peking. C. T. Wang and the Speaker of the House escaped last night.

In a conversation with the Japanese Minister on June 11, reported in my telegram of June 11, 2 p. m., he stated "General Chang's mediation is the last hope of peace. It is desirable that Parliament should be gotten rid of because it is obstructive and renders the doing of business well-nigh impossible." Throughout the present affair there were indications of a Japanese policy to make friends with all the outs to incite their hopes and to endeavor to get from them commitments which would bind them to favorable action should they come into power.

Concerning the presentation, under your instructions of June 4, 3 p. m., of the note of the American Government to the Chinese Foreign Office, and concerning the reception and effect of this note, I shall have the honor to make a separate report.

There are enclosed herewith, the following: The official record of Mr. Li Ching-hsi, designated Minister of Finance and Prime Minister,⁴ and cuttings from the Peking Gazette containing the text of mandates and telegrams, as well as newspaper discussion.

The following is a full translation of the three mandates issued early yesterday morning in connection with the dissolution of Parliament.

[From the Peking Gazette, June 14, 1917]

JUNE 12.

Wu Ting-fang, Acting Premier and Minister of Foreign Affairs, has tendered his resignation. Wu Ting-fang is hereby relieved of his concurrent duties as acting Premier.

⁴Not printed.

Pending the arrival of Premier Li Ching-hsi, Chiang Chao-chung is hereby appointed to act temporarily in his stead.

In a mandate issued in June last year I, the President, expressed the view that the completion of the Constitution depended alone on the convocation of Parliament, and that in view of the fact that the Constitution had not been fixed and the great foundation of the land had not been laid although five years had elapsed since the establishment of the Republic, it was urgently necessary to convene the Parliament with a view that the Constitution might speedily be fixed. The principal aim of this session of Parliament is therefore the making of the Constitution. Some time ago, Meng En-yuan, Tu Chun of Kirin, and others stated in petitions,

"Among the several Articles of the draft Constitution already passed by the Conference on Constitution and its Committee meetings was one to the effect that in case a vote of lack of confidence being passed against the Cabinet Ministers by the House of Representatives the President may either dismiss the Cabinet Ministers or dissolve the House of Representatives but in case of the dissolution of the House of Representatives the approval of the Senate must previously be secured; another article says that for appointing or dismissing the Premier the mandates concerned shall not necessarily be countersigned by Cabinet Ministers; and yet another article says that resolutions passed by the two Houses shall have the same force as law. We are greatly shocked by these provisions.

"The practice in foreign countries shows that the making of the Constitution should not be placed in the hands of Parliament. Therefore, if China desires to have an excellent Constitution, remedy should be applied to the root or there could be no good result. Compared with ordinary affairs Parliament is of course more important but compared with the State, the State is more important. Since the present Parliament cares not for the interests of the State, we are compelled to pray that the President should weigh the importance and make his decision for the immediate dissolution of the Senate and the House of Representatives so that new ones may be formed to enable the making of the Constitution to be conducted on a new line at the earliest date. For by so doing can the Republican form of government be permanently preserved etc."

Recently a flood of telegrams and letters have been received from military, political, commercial and educational circles, and they are unanimous in voicing the same view. Nearly a year has passed by since the organization of the Conference on Constitution by the Senate and the House of Representatives yet the Constitution is not yet completed. The present situation is critical and every thing hangs by a hair. Yet members of the two Houses have resigned one after another, thus making it impossible to secure a quorum for the purpose of amending the articles referred to the Committee of the Conference on Constitution. It is apparent therefore that it will be impossible to satisfy the people of the land, who are eager to see the Constitution completed at an early date, unless a new plan be drawn up for the purpose. Stooping to comply with the demand of public opinion and in consideration of the foundation of the country, I, the President hereby approve the petition of the said Tuchuns and hereby order the Senate and the House of Representatives to be dissolved at once, and that a new election be held as soon as possible for the maintenance of constitutional government. The proper aim of this reorganization of Parliament is merely a means to realize our original decision to promulgate the constitution at an early date and not a measure to dispense with the legislating organ of the Republic. Let all of our people understand this point.

No. 773

AMERICAN EMBASSY,
Tokyo, June 14, 1917.

SIR: Yesterday I had the honor to telegraph you that the newspapers had been cautioned against further adverse comment on the American note handed to China June 5. I am of the belief that no further agitation will be permitted. It seems likely that the Japanese reply to our proposal for an identic representation will be the final closure of the matter, and there is reason to feel confident that this reply will make no demand for an admission of Japan's special and paramount position with respect to China. The episode, however, indicates Japan's increasing sensitiveness as regards that country and the stage of development to which her theory of paramount interests has attained.

The belief that the activities of the Legation at Peking were being exerted against Japanese interests and influence in China has been growing here during the past three years. The first open expression which came to my notice was in the autumn of 1914 in connection with the allegation, printed in Toyko, that Chinese officials were invoking American influence for the restoration of Kiau-chau, when a Tokyo newspaper made reference to the "deliberate ill-will" of the American colony in Peking and the "anti-Japanese propaganda of a certain Embassy Secretary." This distrust of our friendliness at Peking, then sufficiently vague, has since kept pace with Japan's growing nervousness where China is concerned. Since the question arose of the latter's entrance into the World War, the suspicion of American political activity in Peking has arisen, bolstered from time to time by indiscreet interviews given by American travelers and by a series of articles written by American journalists. The most noticeable example of the latter, perhaps, is one by Mr. Samuel Blythe published in The Saturday Evening Post, which has recently been copied here and has received very wide notice. I am informed that a Japanese translation of this article was prepared in the Foreign Office and that it has attracted the particular attention, among others, of the Premier.

To understand the present high degree of sensitiveness here, it must be remembered that the position of the Government in the past few months has been by no means an easy one. Since the formulation in November last of the Terauchi policy of conciliation toward China, there have been signs that certain elements of his own party are not wholly in sympathy with the Premier's programme and these have lent encouragement to the anti-Government forces which have seized upon every phase of the situation in Peking to condemn the Ministry. Moreover, the revolt of the northern provinces in China has been watched with mingled feelings in Tokyo, the strong military party here favoring the strengthening of the Tuchuns, and the business element of Japan, which stands for peace and strong relationship, fearful of conditions that might arise should the rebellious leaders gain the upper hand. The Foreign Office, meanwhile, has held, under increasing pressure, to its policy of ostensible non-interference. In this programme it could be sure of its ground, however, only so long as Japan's position in China (as she conceives this to be) was not seemingly jeopardized. And there is no doubt that the Foreign Office has begun to regard the American activity in Peking which popular Japanese opinion finds objectionable, as a menace to that position.

Conditions were thus favorable for the outburst reported in my telegram of June 1, 11 p. m., which made use of the vicious rumor that the American Minister in Peking had furnished the President with a large sum of money either to strengthen the opposition to the Premier or as consolation for his retirement. The fact that so many Tokyo newspapers gave currency to this story in identical telegrams from Peking makes it difficult to avoid the conclusion that this campaign had been determined upon and that the retirement of Tuan merely furnished the pretext for its inauguration.

The attitude of the Political Bureau of the Foreign Office, which apparently did its utmost to inspire general belief in the story, was most regrettable. Both Mr. Obata, the Chief of the Bureau, and Marquis Komura, Chief of the First Section, from evidence which could not be doubted, used the incident to foster in the minds of local newspapermen suspicion both of American motive and action. As soon as it appeared that this was going on, I took up the matter informally with Mr. Shidehara, Vice Minister for Foreign Affairs, who assured me that the telegraphed allegation was not credited by his Government and promised that he would investigate the situation in the Political Bureau. On receipt of the Department's telegram of June 5, 4 p. m., and in order to carry out its instruction, I again called upon him, when he told me that inquiry had been made and that he thought there would be no reason for further complaint of that nature. I may say, parenthetically, that both Mr. Obata and Marquis Komura are young men, who have not before this time shown anti-American leanings. The former, however, has spent ten years in China and is associated with the more radical and intolerant group in the Government which favor a strong policy in Chinese affairs.

Meanwhile I had received (June 6) the Department's instruction of June 4, 3 p. m., and had handed to the Minister for Foreign Affairs the proposal for an identic representation to China. On receiving it Viscount Motono read the text carefully and stated that the matter would receive careful study and that an answer would be returned as soon as possible.

Two days later the Tokyo papers announced the transmission to the Chinese Government by the American Minister at Peking, of a note in similar terms, and on the same day Mr. Shidehara expressed to me his surprise that this, if the report was true, had been done before the Japanese answer had been made to our proposal. He said that he had received a report of the note by cable from the Consul General at Shanghai; he doubted, however, that such action had really been taken and was inclined to think the note had not left Mr. Reinsch's hands, but that its contents had leaked. I pointed out the use of the word "identic", but he replied that such action lost force unless it were a joint one. I could readily see that he would regard the situation as one in which Japan was asked to follow the lead of the United States in an action for which the latter stood to receive all the credit from China. I am disposed to think that the irritation in the Foreign Office caused by the representation (which the published telegrams from Peking in the next two days made clear had been made) sprang mainly from this idea, rather than from the opinion that such an action, individually made, in itself constituted an interference in China's internal policies which could not be tolerated by Japan. The Department's telegram of June 8, 10 p. m., which I received on the evening of the 10th and conveyed to him next morning, did not, apparently, remove this irritation.

The situation was aggravated at this juncture by the publication in the Asahi of the false text of the note to China, which it was stated had been given out at Washington on the 8th. I at once saw Mr. Shidehara and said that, in view of the harm that might result from any wide currency of such a story, however inherently incredible, I hoped if the real text was in the hands of his Department, the facts might, so far as possible, be made known. He replied, however, that he was not in possession of the text and seemed inclined to think that what the Asahi correspondent in New York had telegraphed might have been—if not the note itself—based upon a statement given out with it by the Department. He said, however, that decision would not be made by the Cabinet on our proposal until the full text had been received by the Foreign Office so that no prejudiced action could be possible.

The Asahi's story aroused wide comment, particularly as the standing of the paper is high and its circulation large. Other newspapers, however, did not give the report credence, though joining in the chorus of unfriendly criticism. The unanimity of this criticism, in its various phases, taken in connection with confidential information which has been given me as to the discussion of the matter in the Cabinet, has led me to believe that it had at one time been practically decided to make use of the incident in an attempt to force the United States into line in an assurance of some nature which would virtually admit Japan's special and paramount position in China and that this plan was reluctantly abandoned in view of the opposition of Viscount Motono and of the present grave issues of the war.

On the 12th Mr. Shidehara told me that from that time on I would see, he believed, a continually bettering situation, and it was interesting to note that the editorial comment of that evening showed a distinct improvement. On the evening of the 13th I received the Department's telegram of June 12, 6 p. m., authorizing a complete denial of the Asahi's report. I at once communicated its content to Mr. Shidehara (as I had arranged with him to do) and an official denial was issued by the Foreign Office, which appears in all papers today.

The Japanese Government have submitted to their careful consideration the note of the American Chargé d'Affaires dated the 6th instant in which he conveys the proposals of his Government for an identical representation by the Governments of Japan, the United States, Great Britain, and France to the Chinese Government urging upon them the importance of maintaining one central united and responsible government in China. The Japanese Government fully appreciate the singleness of purpose which has animated such proposals and they desire to assure the American Government that no country is more keenly interested than Japan in the preservation of unity and peace in China. They regret, however, to be unable to bring themselves to the conviction that the moment is opportune for making a representation to the Chinese Government in the sense proposed. It seems to them that both the contending factions in China are equally anxious to set at rest the present difficulties without recourse to arms and that the situation is not quite as hopeless as all the alarming reports might lead one to believe. In any case the efforts now being actively made by the Chinese themselves to compose the differences at issue have not yet proved a failure while the lives and property of foreigners in the troubled country remain essentially unmolested.

At this stage of the internal strife in China, it is seriously apprehended that any foreign influence brought to bear upon her is liable to create misgiving in the sensitive minds of one or the other of the opposing parties and to do more harm than good.

Japan possesses paramount interests both political and economic in China and she would no doubt suffer more than any other country should the turn of events there present a grave aspect, but the Japanese Government holding to their avowed policy of non-interference in the essentially domestic affairs of China have scrupulously refrained from making any representation to the Chinese Government touching the present crisis. They believe that in the absence of untoward development of the situation, this course would serve the best interests in China as well as of all the other Powers and they feel it due to frankness to confess that they do not find themselves justified in joining in the proposed representation to the Chinese Government.

Yesterday Minister for Foreign Affairs addressing the Budget Committee of Peers and Representatives in reply to interpellation in regard to our note to China stated that, her policy being one of non-interference with China's internal policies, Japan had not been of a mind with the United States as to the proposal for an identic representation and had therefore communicated with Britain and France. The former had already concurred with Japan's opinion that representations in China at this juncture are not desirable and he had reason to believe that France also would do so. A great change however had taken place in Chinese affairs since the American proposal had been considered.

I am informed that such a reply on the part of Great Britain has been received from the Japanese Ambassador in London. Newspaper comment is now absolutely friendly. It is believed in official quarters that Viscount Ishii will be instructed to repeat [undertake?] conversations at Washington on the whole Chinese situation.

[Inclosure—Memorandum]

The Foreign Office to Ambassador Page

His Majesty's Government have not failed to give their careful attention to the memorandum communicated by the American Ambassador on the 5th instant conveying an invitation from the United States Government to His Majesty's Government to join in a declaration to the Chinese Government in connection with the state of affairs which has arisen in China. His Majesty's Government feel it hardly necessary to assure the American Government at once that their first impulse is to view with sympathy all proposals emanating from the State Department at Washington and that they are naturally prompted by motives of sentiment no less than by those of interest to endeavor to meet the wishes of the American Administration most particularly in those spheres where the policy of the two Powers is clearly animated by a common spirit.

As regards the specific issue, it appears to His Majesty's Government from such information as is at their disposal that though the question of the entry of China into the war, (which is in fact the immediate cause of the disturbed situation that has been created) has become overshadowed by the internal crisis, the future prosperity and international prestige of China, which means ultimately her unity, cannot be dissociated from her decision to range herself, or not, as the case may be, on the side of the Powers who are fighting for the liberties of the entire world.

His Majesty's Government thus consider China's entry into the war to be primarily to her own interest, and moreover, as far as they themselves are concerned, they feel it would be inconsistent with all the steps which they have taken to bring China in, if they were suddenly to qualify the importance which they have hitherto attached to that eventuality.

Again, they conceive the confused internal political situation of China to require their abstention from any step which might embarrass their Representative at Peking in such developments as may hereafter arise. A declaration, they feel, made by him to the de facto Constitutional Government might under existing circumstances be regarded as a slight to the rival party with whom as the then Government he had been working for China's entry into the war, and should political fortune eventually favour Tuan Chi-jui or his friends and bring him once again into power, he could hardly return to the same amicable relations with His Majesty's Legation as before. In this way even quite apart from the German question, His Majesty's Government—and they of course speak only for themselves—would not merely not have contributed to a unification of existing Chinese parties, but having regard to their traditional practice during periods of internal dispute in China of impartiality towards all such parties irrespective of political complexion, would have risked widening the breach between them by suddenly, after years of a different policy, appearing to favour one at the expense of the other.

In these circumstances, His Majesty's Government deeply regret that, though there can be no doubt whatever that in principle they are entirely at one with the United States Government as regards the objects to be attained, and though they warmly desire to cooperate with them in the matters at issue, nevertheless they conceive it to be more prudent and more in accord with their traditional practice in China for them themselves at this moment to abstain from the step proposed. At the same time they trust that the two Governments will continue to act in consultation as regards such developments as may occur and to frame their policy generally on a common basis.

[Inclosure—Translation]

The Minister for Foreign Affairs to Ambassador Sharp

MINISTRY FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS,
Paris, June 14, 1917.

MR. AMBASSADOR: By a letter under date of the 6th of this month your excellency was pleased to converse with me of the opportunity which there would be for France, Great Britain, Japan and the United States to make identic representations to the Chinese Government expressing their regret at seeing fresh discord arising in China and their hope of seeing a united and responsible central Government reestablish and maintain harmony.

Returning to this question by your letter of the 13th of this month, you were pleased to expound to me afresh the views with which the Federal Government was inspired when it formulated the proposition which I have just recalled.

Your Government estimates, in effect, that it is advisable that the Allied Powers, to whom the military party at present in revolt in China claims to belong dissociate their action from all idea of revolt against the established Government in China, while the parliamentary party which today mingles with the existing Government and which remains sympathetic to the views of the Allies, desires only the establishment of a Ministry favorable to the majority. It is to be feared that if the military party triumph civil war will follow and that thus the cause of the Allies will draw no benefit therefrom.

The Federal Government considers accordingly that identic representations from the Allies would be able to have the happy result of making all discord cease and of reuniting all the Chinese factions into a grouping favorable to the cause of the Allies.

I have the honor to make known to your excellency that as early as the 9th of this month I invited the French Ambassador to the United States to make known to Mr. Lansing that the French Government was ready to associate itself with the Government of the United States in making to the Chinese Government an overture recommending to it not to neglect any effort for preventing all disorder and for establishing the desirable harmony in the interior and exterior situation of China.

Mr. Jusserand was charged, on the one hand, to add that if the other Powers consulted by the Federal Government were of the same mind, conformable instructions would be addressed to the French Minister at Peking, on the other to present the following observations concerning the meaning of the proposed overture.

It did not, in fact, appear happy, as proposed in your excellency's letter of the 6th of this month, to say to the Chinese Government that we consider the entry of China into the war against Germany as of entirely secondary importance. From this point of view, it would seem preferable to say that "if the Powers continue to attach a real importance to the entry of China into the war against the Central Powers, they wish before everything else the reestablishment of order and of harmony in China, because they consider this as a necessity essentially preliminary to any action of the Chinese Government abroad."

Moreover, the French Ambassador was charged with pointing out to Mr. Lansing that it would appear opportune if the overture were to be made, that Italy should be invited to take part. This Power is in fact an Ally in the Great War and it seems that her interests in China give her the right to be associated with the suggested action.

Since the communication which I addressed to the French Ambassador at Washington, I have learned that the Japanese Government and the British Government did not show themselves at all favorable to the proposed action. Nevertheless, according to a telegram from Mr. Jusserand, dated the 9th of this month, the United States Minister at Peking is said, for his part, to have taken the identical step proposed without waiting longer.

Under these conditions, while renewing the assurance that the French Government is, on its part, disposed to join in a measure which would meet with unanimous concurrence, I would be very much obliged to your excellency to be good enough to confirm to your Government the sense of the communication which the French Ambassador was charged to make to it on the 9th of this month.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Peking, June 25, 1917, 1 p. m.

Your June 19, 4 p. m. Have to submit the following considerations: The claim made by Japanese Ambassador would imply that in 1915, Secretary of State had admitted that China had ceased to be an independent State and that diplomatic relations between the United States and China could be controlled by Japan. No matter how friendly Mr. Bryan's intentions, he could certainly not have admitted the existence of a Japanese protectorate over China at a time when China herself was successfully resisting far less radical inroads on her sovereignty. Even at present were the above claim to become known a storm of indignation would arise in China. While the European Powers have been forced through the exigencies of war to allow Japan somewhat of a free hand in China during the war, it is believed that there would be a day of reckoning should unfair advantage be taken of this opportunity. What is asked of the United States is far more than the European Powers have actually conceded, being a recognition on principle of a preferential and dominant position of Japan in China.

That such a recognition, involving abandonment of a national policy and a position gained through successful work of a hundred and thirty years, involving also the betrayal of a friendly country, should be claimed as resulting from an incidental note, shows that the Japanese are overreaching themselves in an effort to secure their object while the war lasts.

The note issued by the American Government in May, 1915, to both the Japanese and Chinese Governments negatives the implication now attempted to be fixed on the earlier note and leaves it plain that the latter could have referred only to the result of the specific concessions acquired by Japan in Manchuria and possibly to the territorial contiguity of Japan and China.

Only in this sense could a special position be recognized at that time, not in a sense of protectorate limiting freedom of diplomatic intercourse between the United States and China; and the assurance of good will toward the development of Interior [Inner] Manchuria given without quid pro quo was indeed sufficient warrant of friendship.

As the term "special position" has no definite connotation it might indeed have been used to indicate that Japan, like, for instance, Russia or Great Britain, through specific concession and contiguous territorial possessions, had certain relationships with China which give it special reasons to interest itself in developments there; that such interests were however not expected to extend to anything which would impair the full political sovereignty of China is abundantly clear from preceding and subsequent declarations of the American Government. In recognizing the existence of such relationships the Government of the United States at the most would indicate its good will toward the development of the specific interest involved and disavow any desire to obstruct or to raise difficulties for the neighbors of China. Revision and specification of the assurance given in this sense is certainly all that could be granted without disastrous consequences to our national interest, not to speak of vital interest of a friendly country. The United States has long since won a special position in China.

The note presented to the Chinese Government is in fullest accord with traditional American policy as directed not towards internal affairs but the maintenance of external unity and sovereignty of China. It is thus understood by all others in China.

My June 25, 1 p. m. Judged by the situation in China at the time of presentation the Department's note of June 4 seems to carry the assurance that the United States intended to use its influence in China in a manner friendly and not obstructive to the interests acquired by Japan and to its position as a neighboring country; but by no means to limit the exercise of independent diplomatic action by the United States. Such a manifestation of good faith would perhaps call for similar reciprocal fair, frank treatment of our interests in China by Japan.

The Japanese Ambassador on June 21 handed me a copy of a message received by him from Viscount Motono under date of June 19 as follows:

You are instructed to see the Secretary of State at the earliest opportunity and to assure him of the deep sense of gratitude which the Japanese Government feels upon learning that its frank and sincere expression of views has been received by Mr. Lansing in an equally friendly spirit. You will add at the same time that it has been my ardent desire, cherished for years, to establish a strong tie of mutual confidence between our two nations by eradicating all possible causes of misunderstanding and that for the success of my endeavors toward this end I deem it most essential to depend upon the sympathy and cooperation of the Secretary of State.

You will please say to Viscount Motono that his friendly message has been received with pleasure and that I share his ardent desire for the establishment of a strong tie of mutual confidence between our two nations by the eradication of all possible causes of misunderstanding. I am glad to cooperate with him towards this end; therefore to his frank and sincere expression of views I am making a reply equally sincere and frank and none the less inspired by the most cordial good will.

The Monarchist restoration movement, always present in the background, has suddenly become overt. Taking advantage of the general disorganization of Government the monarchist group under Hsu Shih-Chang, Chang Hsun, Kang Yu-weri, through Chief of Staff and General of Gendarmerie at 2 a. m. this morning initiated a coup d'état by calling upon the President to resign in favor of the Emperor. The President stated his readiness to resign but in favor of the Vice President. The indications are that a restoration will be carried out; that it will have the support of the Northern military, but the South will oppose and secede.

No. 1549

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Peking, July 3, 1917.

SIR: I have the honor to enclose for your information copies of the edicts issued yesterday in the name of the Emperor, Hsuan Tung, through which it was attempted to restore the monarchy. The edicts are forwarded in translation as prepared by Dr. Tenney, Chinese Secretary of this Legation. There are also enclosed copies of the translation, printed in the Peking Daily News of yesterday's date, of all these papers including a telegram from Chang Hsun and the reported interview with the same.

The coup d'état and attempted restoration appears to be the single-handed work of General Chang Hsun. The cooperation recited in the edicts and in the circular telegram, by way of memorials, alleged to have been submitted by such men as President Li Yuan-hung, Generals Feng Kuo-chang, Lu Yung-ting, Chang Hsun, Wang Shih-chen, Chiang Chao-chung, and Chen Kuang-yuan, is either purely fictitious or apparently based upon the hope that the men concerned will ratify the act after the event or upon intimidating and overriding the men here present. While no definitive account of this matter can be given at this early date, it would already seem that the personal action of General Chang Hsun does not have the approval of the weighty leaders such as General Tuan Chi-jui, Mr. Liang Chi-chao and Mr. Liang Shih-yi.

As there were exceedingly few plotters, the coup d'état could be carried out suddenly like the act of an individual. It is probable that the decision to carry through the coup at this time was taken within a day or two before the event, giving only sufficient time to prepare the edicts. General Chang Hsun, whose self-confidence has become enormous in consequence of the lack of opposition to his self-assertiveness, apparently decided with his most intimate advisers to go ahead, which accounts for the fait accompli; but this overprominence of his personal action in the matter will probably turn out to be the weakest point as it invites universal opposition.

There is also herewith enclosed a copy of a memorandum concerning the action taken by the foreign ministers here with a view to safeguarding the life of President Li.

MEMORANDUM

JULY 2, 1917.

Mr. Alston, British Chargé, called on me stating that the French Minister had proposed that the Diplomatic Corps should, in the name of humanity, address a warning to the de facto authorities holding them responsible for the safety of President Li Yuan-hung.

We proceeded to the house of the Dean, the Netherlands Minister, where were also present the Russian, French and Japanese Ministers. The above matter was brought up and it was agreed that, acting concurrently for the belligerent and neutral Ministers, the Dean should take the action indicated and call for that purpose on whomever might be in charge of the Foreign Office this afternoon. It was also agreed that proper reservation should be made to guard against any implication of recognition of the monarchical Government.

The form of diplomatic correspondence was alluded to and it was the consensus that diplomatic communications to the de facto Government should be given the form of memorandums.

The matter of the defense of the Legation Quarter, against irresponsible attacks on the part of Chang Hsun's troops came up and it was agreed that the commandants should be in readiness to meet any inroads, without taking any visible measures calculated to disturb the public.

IMPERIAL EDICTS

The 9th Year of Hsüan T'ung, 5th moon, 13th day.

Unfortunately We ascended the throne in our infancy and to our grief we could not endure great hardship. At the outbreak of the revolution in the Hsin Hai year (1911) the Ch'ing Empress Dowager (Lung Yü), being benevolent and compassionate, could not bear to witness the suffering of the people and so turned over the great heritage of our ancestors and the myriads of her people to the former Minister Yuan Shih-k'ai, allowing him to organize a provisional government. She relinquished her powers of government and treated the Empire as a public trust; hoping that strife would cease and the people would live in peace. But from the time of the change in the form of government, there was no cessation of strife, but there was continual clashing of spears. There was oppression and unjust exaction, and bribes were openly received. The annual income increased to 400,000,000, but was insufficient. Foreign loans increased to over 1,000,000,000 but there was no indication of a limit being fixed. Within the seas there was no peace and the joy of living was lost. So the abdication of the Empress Dowager, meant in pity of the people, only added to their misery. This was just contrary to the design of the Empress Dowager, and so the spirit of the departed could not rest in peace. We, living in the recesses of the palace, daily prayed to Heaven, in anguish and tears, not knowing what the result was to be. Recently parties have been at strife, so bringing on the calamity of civil war. The Empire was in confusion with no hope of settlement. Harmony was immediately lost.

Chang Hsün, Fêng Kuo-chang, Lu Yung-ting and others, because of this trembling of the foundations of the nation, and because the minds of men were turning toward the old system, memorialized together for the reestablishment of the monarchy, in order to save the lives of the people. So also Ch'ü Hung-chi and others, seeing that the country was in a dangerous condition, and the minds of the people unsettled, memorialized begging us to reascend the Throne and administer the government, so satisfying both Heaven and men. Li Yüan-hung also memorialized asking to turn over the government, for the good of China and the salvation of the people. On the perusal of these memorials, which were so earnest and full of forebodings, although we hesitated to assume the heavy responsibility of the welfare of the nation, we could not place our own comfort first and ignore the welfare of all the people. After careful weighing and consideration of duty to Heaven and to men, we had no alternative but to consent to the memorialists. On the 9th year of Hsüan Tung, the 5th moon, 13th day (July 1, 1917), we have ascended the Throne, assumed the government, resumed our powers, and made this radical change for the people. From now on we will make the wise teachings of morality our guide. We will remedy the confusion of the people's minds by the influence of the principles of propriety, righteousness, disinterestedness and shame. Those above and those below will mutually influence each other, and there will not be the mere fear of the law. The orders of the Government will be for mutual benefit and the correction of abuses and the nation will not be used for purposes of experimentation. At present all is emptiness; the original spirit of government is lost, and we are at the critical period of success or failure. We are timid and do not dare to think of pleasure in acting as sovereign or to allow ourselves any dissipation. All of you higher and lower officials must purify your hearts, correcting all former faults, thinking only of the welfare of the people. Thus, through care of the people, the fortunes of the government will be preserved. Thus, destruction can be averted, and the protection of Heaven secured.

The fundamental principles of the new government with its aims in the directions of conservation and change are as follows:

1. In accordance with the decree of the Empress Dowager Lung Yu, ultimate authority shall rest with the Throne, but the people shall have a voice in all the affairs of government. The Government shall be styled the Ta Ch'ing Imperial Government but will follow the forms of constitutional government as practiced by other nations.

2. The revenues of the Imperial House shall remain at the figure formerly fixed, viz, 4,000,000, which shall be paid annually but never increased.

3. The former edict of the Imperial House shall be enforced forbidding near directions of the Emperor from engaging in governmental affairs.

4. The regulations abolishing the distinctions between Manchus and Chinese shall be carried out and there shall be no reestablishment of the Manchu and Mongol offices already abolished. The matter of intermarriage and change of customs shall be reported on by the proper bureau.

5. All treaties and loan agreements regularly made prior to this 1st day of the 5th moon of the 9th year of Hsüan T'ung shall be respected.

6. The stamp tax shall be abolished for the relief of the people. Other vexatious taxes shall be carefully considered by the viceroys and governors of the provinces and abolished as found feasible.

7. All criminal laws which are contrary to the genius of the Chinese shall be abolished. For the present the criminal code published in the 1st year of Hsüan T'ung shall be temporarily in force.

8. All those who were convicted of political offences under the regulations forbidding party organizations are pardoned. Those who renounce their allegiance or who promote disorders we dare not pardon.

9. All the people may follow their own wishes as to cutting hair in accordance with the edict of the 9th month of the 3d year of Hsüan T'ung.

We swear to respect the above nine articles appealing to august Heaven and the profound Earth, and now issue this edict for the information of all.

Ninth Year of Hsüan T'ung, 5th Moon, 13th day (July 1, 1917).

Li Yuan-hung has this day submitted a memorial requesting to return the government of the country and praying that the Empire be re-established. He states that he was coerced by a mutiny of troops to steal the great office and to wrongfully take over the affairs of state, without attempting to save the situation, and he sets forth in detail all the malpractices which came in with the establishing of the Republic, praying that the Empire be re-established and that, to fulfil the wishes of the people, he be handed over for punishment.

We were filled with pity at the perusal of this statement which was put forth in all sincerity. Since he was only an accessory and did not act of his own free will, and since in returning the government he shows himself to know the right, in this time of national danger and general disturbance he has been the first of Our people to uphold Us. His work in settling China and saving it from destruction has been of a high order and has pleased Us well.

Li Yuan-hung is created a Duke of the First class in accordance with Our law, and will obey Our commands, thereby obtaining the favor of Heaven.

CHANG HSÜN
Grand Secretary

No. 1557

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Peking, July 3, 1917.

SIR: Referring to the Legation's despatch (No. 1525) of the 5th ultimo, I have the honor to forward herewith the following despatches concerning the political situation in the provinces as follows:⁴

⁴Not printed.

The dismissal of the Premier Tuan Chi-jui on May 23 (reported in my telegram of May 23, 9 p. m.) was followed by the secession of the provinces of Honan, Shensi, Shansi, Anhui, Fukien, Shantung and Fengtien under the lead of General Ni Ssu-chung, Civil Governor of Anhui Province, and the meeting of the Tuchuns of the Northern provinces at Tientsin.

General Chang Hsun does not appear to have been in accord with the Tuchuns from the time they visited him in Hsuechowfu after their convocation at Peking in May. Vice President Feng Kuo-chang from the first has been opposed to the secession of the provinces and has used his influence to try to maintain order and prevent actual hostilities. Feeling that his position as Vice President impeded him in his attempts at mediation and rendered his position somewhat equivocal, he resigned as Vice President on June 5, in order to resume his former position as Tuchun of Kiangsu province. His resignation, however, was not accepted by President Li.

In the meantime General Chang Hsun went to Tientsin to mediate between the Tuchuns and the Central Government. He finally demanded the dissolution of Parliament, which was ultimately forced upon the President on June 13.

The majority of the members of the dissolved Parliament almost immediately left Peking, the Kuo Min Tang members assembling at Shanghai, where a registration bureau was opened, and from where they sent telegrams to the provincial officials stating their views of the unconstitutionality of the President's mandate ordering the dissolution of Parliament.

The naval officers at Shanghai under Admiral Cheng Pih-kwan met on June 23, the day of the Dragon Festival, and expressed their loyalty to the President and the Provisional Constitution and signified their intention to support the constitutional government against the rebellious Tuchuns. The Legation is still without information as to what further steps the navy has actually taken.

The Southern and Western provinces, as was to be expected, declared for Parliament and the Provisional Constitution, and began military preparations to oppose the Northern generals by force.

A citizens meeting initiated by the local members of the Kuo Min Tang at Canton unanimously approved the following four resolutions:

1. The dissolution of the national Parliament shall not be recognized as valid, and a military expedition should be despatched forthwith to attack the revolting Tuchuns.
2. The members of the national Parliament should select immediately a suitable place for convening an extraordinary conference.
3. The officials of the Southern and Western provinces should speedily despatch military expeditions to attack the rebels.
4. The people of the whole country and Chinese overseas should be asked to subscribe to the military fund.

Hunan remained neutral during the secession movement. The brother-in-law of General Tuan Chi-jui, however, General Wu Kuang-hsin, declared martial law at Yochow, which was under his control.

The disturbances which have been disrupting the province of Szechuan for several months due to the rivalry between Generals Liu Ts'un-hou and Lo Pei-chin, and the general antipathy of the Szechuanese for the Yunnanese as well as the inability of the Central Government to restore order, still continue without any immediate prospect of a settlement.

The cancellation, at the request of General Chang Hsun, of their declarations of independence by the provinces of Chihli, Fengtien, Shantung, Anhui, Shansi, Shensi and Honan, and by the Commissioner of Shanghai, was reported in the Legation's telegram of June 22, 1 p. m.

The Foreign Office here believes there are now indications that the immediate situation in China will be relieved without serious fighting. The Vice Minister for Foreign Affairs states that reports from their Legation at Peking indicate that the monarchy has a very short lease of life; that Chang Hsun is nonplussed at the strength of the opposition even in the North, that he has moreover incurred the enmity of several of the most prominent members of the Imperial family who consider that his precipitate action has destroyed all hopes of a permanent restoration of the dynasty, and that realizing failure to be imminent he is seeking a way to retire with assurances that his life and property will be left him. Mr. Shidehara tells me confidentially that Chang has given Japan private assurances that there will be no fighting within the city of Peking and that Wang Shih-chen has guaranteed to Hayashi that all necessary protection will be afforded to foreigners.

Your cipher telegram of July 3, 5 p. m. In reply to my communication the Minister for Foreign Affairs has just handed me a memorandum reading as follows:

The Japanese Government highly appreciate the friendly spirit in which the American Government have sought their views as to the advisability of taking measures in the present crisis for protection of foreigners residing in China. As Doctor Reinsch has already been informed by Baron Hayashi, Japanese Legation guards at Peking, formerly consisting of two companies of infantry, have just been reenforced by another company dispatched from the garrison of Tientsin. In time of embroils those guards are prepared to afford due protection to foreign residents in Peking in cooperation with the American and other Legation guards and if necessary may be readily strengthened by further reenforcements. Reports so far received from Peking do not seem to warrant the conclusion that the troops actually maintained by foreign Legations there are quite inadequate to protect foreign residents more especially when no feature of anti-foreign character is involved in the whole conflict. As the matter stands at present the Japanese Government do not consider it is advisable to proceed immediately to further measures of military precaution which might create suspicion and misgiving among the Chinese.

Viscount Motono states that the Japanese reply makes reference only to Peking inasmuch as there are at present no indications that there will be a clash of forces in any other locality.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Peking, August 3, 1917, 2 a. m.

My telegram of July 15, 8 p. m. The Prime Minister has just informed me that the Cabinet has come to a decision to declare war against Germany and that acting President Feng has been formally notified of this step and approves of it. Before the decision is carried out various preparations [and ?] arrangements remain to be completed.

The adoption of this policy is prompted by a desire to strengthen China internationally, as well as particularly [protect?] the present Government against internal opposition which would probably, after the declaration of war, be treated as treasonable negligence. It is probable that parliamentary radicals of the South will resist the declaration. While they may appeal to general theory, and while the party in power is strongly militarist, yet specifically the case for the defunct parliament seems weak inasmuch as it was dissolved by the same authority that had reinstituted it in 1916 and a general national demand for its reinstitution is lacking. However, it is to be hoped that professions in favor of representative institutions made by the present Government will be lived up to.

General Feng upon his arrival yesterday formally requested Li to resume the presidency. The latter declined. Feng therefore remains Acting President for the unexpired term. The present administration represents strong elements of political, military, financial organization; political antagonisms of Tuan against Feng, Chin Pu Tang against [apparent omission], may be alleviated by war action. But whether national union can be completely upheld against the opposition of certain provinces inclined to espouse the cause of Parliament is doubtful though the Government seems to rely on war power and Allied support to accomplish this.

The Japanese have advanced yen 10,000,000 for urgent needs of the Government; participation will be offered other members of Consortium.

No. 1586

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Peking, August 9, 1917.

SIR: In continuation of my despatch No. 1549 of July 3 last, dealing with the attempted Imperial restoration, I have the honor to submit a more complete report.

As the monarchical movement instituted by General Chang Hsun was entirely his personal act, it came as a complete surprise to everybody, including the men whose names were recited in the proclamations as assisting him. It was a surprise even to men who were undoubtedly forced to assist, such as the Chief of Staff and the heads of the gendarmerie and of the police.

As reported in my telegram of June 30, 1 p. m.,⁴ Premier Li Ching-shi, who had been influenced by Chang Hsun, found himself isolated. As important men were unwilling to take office it appeared as if a period of stagnation lasting through the summer was imminent until a complete readjustment could have been effected.

It was this very situation which seems to have inspired Chang Hsun to take this radical step. He was disappointed that the results of his mediation should not have been more satisfactory. Kang Yeu-wei, who arrived in Peking on June 29, advised him that the salvation of China lay in the restoration of the Imperial family; this would immediately bring to the active support of the Government, all the military leaders who were notoriously imperialistic in their inner sentiments and who had at various times expressed themselves, in that sense, to Chang Hsun.

It was therefore assumed that if the step were taken the support of these powerful men could be implicitly relied on. It is apparent that specific encouragement had been received from Hsu Shih-chang, who is generally considered the leader of the Imperialistic party, although an ex-Premier under the Republic.

It is also known to me that Chang Hsun discussed the possibility of an Imperial restoration with the Japanese Minister. The latter expressed the opinion that if the movement were undertaken the support of the chief military leaders should be made sure of. As Chang Hsun felt sure of this support he evidently took the advice of the Japanese Minister as an encouragement, and believed that his movement would have diplomatic support.

On June 30 Chang Hsun had his intimate advisers, particularly Kang Yeu-wei, draw up the necessary Imperial edicts. In these it was recited that leading governors, like Feng Ko-chang, Lu Yung-ting and others of like prominence, had petitioned for the restoration of the monarchy. Lists of appointments to the highest positions in the Central Government and the provinces were also prepared. The existing military governors were in most cases reappointed. The most important men designated for positions in the Central Government were Hsu Shih-chang as Guardian of the Emperor, Liang Tun-yen as Minister of Foreign Affairs, and Chu Chi-pao as Minister of the Interior. Wang Shih-chen was retained as Chief of the General Staff.

The most amazing instance of presupposed consent is an Imperial edict which recites that President Li Yuang-hung has petitioned for the reestablishment of the Empire and which appoints him as a Duke of the first class.

When these various edicts had been prepared ready for launching, a dinner was arranged for the evening of the same day, to which the heads of the Peking military and police establishments were invited. The dinner took place at the Kiangsu Guild Hall. After great quantities of wine had been consumed, Chang Hsun broached his project for the salvation of China. He stated that all preparation had been made, that military and diplomatic support was assured and then, pointing at the Chief of Staff, said: "Of course you are supporting the movement". General Wang, completely taken aback, did not see his way to refuse—seeing that he was in the presence of an accomplished fact. The consent of General Chiang, head of the gendarmarie, and General Wu, head of the police, was obtained in the same way. The account of this affair by Premier Li Ching-hsi as given in The Peking Daily News, July 10, 1917 (herewith enclosed),⁴ is the best account of the events of this night.

When the enterprise had been thus launched, Chang Hsun directed General Wang and four others to proceed immediately to the residence of President Li, to wake him up and to obtain his consent to a memorial, asking for the reestablishment of the monarchy. Chang Hsun himself proceeded to the Imperial City. Not having been able to obtain the consent of the Imperial Dukes to his movement, he had lavishly bribed the eunuchs in charge of the palace. They opened the gates for him and his retinue and took him to the private residence of the young Emperor. Prostrating himself before the Emperor, Chang Hsun informed him that the whole nation demanded his return to the throne. He then immediately took the Emperor to the great throne room and, in the presence of his retainers and members of the Imperial family who had been summoned, formally enthroned the Emperor. Thereupon the edicts which had been prepared were formally sealed.

As may be imagined, there were some comic incidents. A rather distinguished man had been summoned by the Premier to discuss with the President his assumption of one of the cabinet portfolios. He was seen at the hotel by a Chinese friend of mine who had just heard of the restoration, about 10 o'clock in the morning. When asked what he had come to Peking for, he stated confidentially that he was now waiting for a carriage to take him to the President's Palace, and was greatly surprised when he was told: "The President is finished; this is now an Empire. The Emperor was enthroned at 4 o'clock this morning."

The assumption made by Chang Hsun, in the Imperial edicts issued on Sunday July 1, that practically all of the leading authorities of China approved of the restoration, deceived Peking for one day, as it had deceived the military chiefs on the preceding night. The population, as the news spread, showed an almost joyous excitement. The yellow dragon flags appeared everywhere, and soon the city wore a festive appearance. The population of Peking was easily made Imperialist, through its memories of past splendor. But the height of this movement was reached on the evening of July 1. From that time on it steadily went down grade.

Liang Tung-yen came to assume office as Minister of Foreign Affairs. He has always been an Imperialist, and was in the highest spirits, believing that at last China had been saved. He had been made to believe that the foreign diplomats would easily recognize the restoration. But on Monday, July 2, strong doubts as to the character of the movement appeared. Tuan Chi-jui did not figure in the official lists. When asked about this, Chang Hsun declared that General Tuan was unimportant, having no troops under his command at this time. When, about 4 a. m. on July 1, the news was telephoned to Tientsin, Liang Chi-chao was at cards with friends. He immediately proceeded to General Tuan's residence, where the latter was also engaged in a game of cards. General Tuan, being at that time thoroughly weary of public affairs, was difficult to rouse. He begged to be spared the trouble of thinking what might be happening in Peking. But as more details came in and it became apparent how absolutely a one-man affair the movement was, Tuan roused himself and took an interest. However, he was at that time actually only a private citizen without authority or command.

On Monday he and Liang Chi-chao proceeded to Machang where the 8th Division has been encamped since the attempt to overawe President Li Yuan-hung. It is stated that General Tuan felt rather nervous as to the outcome of his venture. Arriving at the camp, he called the commanders, stated to them that he had always been opposed to the restoration of the monarchy, and that it was now being attempted by the act of a single general. He therefore proposed to resist this act and to take command of the republican troops for that purpose. His action was successful, and he was recognized as the commander-in-chief. President Li, on his part, did not yield to the importunities of Chang Hsun, but issued an absolute denial of the statement that he favored the restoration. On July 2 he took refuge in the Legation Quarter, after having issued a mandate turning over the exercise of presidential powers to the Vice President and appointing General Tuan Chi-jui Premier and Commander-in-Chief.

On Tuesday, July 3, Liang Chi-chao published a vigorous denunciation of the restoration movement. As the action of General Tuan became known, doubts as to the permanence of the restoration increased. Chang Hsun had committed a great tactical blunder in taking for himself not only the Premiership but also the position as military chief of Chihli Province, reducing the actual military governor, General Tsao Kun, to the civil governorship. The latter, who would probably have supported Chang Hsun, with proper inducements, now followed the lead of General Tuan and prepared for troop movements against Peking. On July 2, a personal representative of mine saw General Tuan Chi-jui, who assured him that he already had complete control of the military situation and would be able to finish Chang Hsun inside of 10 days.

As hostilities threatened in and around Peking, and as the danger of looting was always present, I discussed the precautions to be taken with my colleagues, and agreed with the Japanese Minister that we would each bring a company of reinforcements from Tientsin. Meanwhile the movements of Tuan's troops had commenced and, to hinder their advance, Chang Hsun's men had broken the railway at about one-third of the way from Peking to Tientsin.

The question was discussed by the Diplomatic Corps. Some urged that we should give notice that no fighting should take place on or near the railways. I took the position that as we had made no objection to the bringing in of Chang Hsun's troops and to their stationing in Peking and along the railway we were not now in a position to object to the troops of the Government to which we were still accredited taking necessary action against Chang Hsun; that we could, however, insist upon the right of keeping the railway open. A demand was accordingly made on July 5 upon General Chang Hsun and General Tuan Chi-jui that the railway must be kept open and that at least one train must be allowed to pass in each direction every day.

On July 6, the reinforcements arrived in Peking—having been delayed by the necessity of reconstructing the damaged line. On July 7, the first trains passed between Peking and Tientsin—one of these trains passing between the armies during a battle. During these days fighting was going on between the troops of General Tuan, under direct command of General Tuan Chi-kwei, and Chang Hsun's forces in which, with a great deal of firing and small loss of life, the latter were driven back towards Peking. The troops of General Tsao Kun also advanced upon Peking from the West.

On Sunday, July 8, I discovered in the afternoon that through the mediation of a certain Colonel Hu, Chang Hsun had persuaded the French Minister to believe that the city was in imminent danger of looting, fighting and general disturbances, and that the only salvation lay in inducing Hsu Shih-chang to come from Tientsin to medi-ate. The French Minister induced his Entente colleagues to agree to transmit a note to General Tuan Chi-jui urging him to persuade Hsu Shih-chang to come to Peking as mediator. This action seemed to me to be decidedly ill-advised as it would mean that at a time when Chang Hsun was already thoroughly defeated he would be solemnly treated by an influential part of the Diplomatic Corps as entitled to dictate the terms and personnel of mediation. I expressed myself very strongly in this sense. * * * The British Chargé, who had then just received a telegram from his consul in Tientsin to the effect that General Tuan was absolutely opposed to any mediation, withdrew his consent, so that the action contemplated was not taken. Chang Hsun persisted to the last in his attempts to get the Diplomatic Corps to give him position as a party to a solemn mediation. The French Minister, originally disposed to support him in this, probably on account of his violent hatred of Dr. Wu Ting-fang, gradually came to see the unwisdom of such a policy when certain Germanic affiliations of Chang Hsun became known. The other ministers appreciated the difficulty somewhat earlier.

On July 8, Kang Yu-wei presented himself at my house seeking refuge. I had no alternative but to assign him rooms, where he still remains. He informed me that Chang Hsun had had the fullest assurances of support on the part of Hsu Shih-chang and other important monarchists.

Prince Tsai Tze called on me on July 9. He stated that the Imperial House had not been in favor of a restoration movement at this time; but he still hoped that the bringing of Hsu Shih-chang as mediator would help to preserve the favorable treatment agreement. He was greatly depressed and seemed to fear deep injury to his house.

On this day the Diplomatic Corps held a long meeting to discuss suggestions of mediation between the contending factions, or other means of averting disturbances in the city. I strongly opposed all suggestions of mediation. The Diplomatic Corps adopted a moderate resolution practically indicating its belief of the defeat of Chang Hsun, and the possibility of avoiding bloodshed by granting safe-departure to Chang Hsun's troops.

On July 10, I was approached by a representative of General Chiang, Chief of the Gendarmerie. He stated that it was desired to bring Chang Hsun into the American Legation, and that an agreement to this effect had been made between the different commanders. I stated that under the circumstances it would be best for the Diplomatic Corps to discuss what protection could be extended to Chang Hsun. An informal meeting was held at which the British Chargé agreed that he would receive Chang Hsun if he were brought in.

Late in the afternoon of July 11, the Legation received notice from General Tuan that during the night the troops would move against Chang Hsun's forces in the city and that bombardment of the Temple of Heaven and the quarters near the Imperial City held by Chang Hsun would begin at dawn on July 12. In concert with the commandant of the Legation Guard, I sent notice to the American residents in the quarters particularly affected directing them to seek safety. Eighteen refugees came to the Legation, where they were taken care of for the day at the students' mess.

At the beginning of the fighting a great many people out of curiosity went upon the city wall to see what was going on. When it became apparent that stray bullets were frequently falling on the wall, the commandant ordered the wall to be cleared. Unfortunately, several of these onlookers were injured, among them three Americans. While the battle was going on I received word from the Imperial tutors that the Empresses Dowager were preparing to bring the Emperor to the American Legation. I found later that ever since July 9 there had been a desire to remove the Emperor to this Legation for safety. While the Empresses and some of the Dukes desired this to be done, the eunuchs under Chang Hsun's influence were opposed to his removal. The Prince Regent, also under Chang Hsun's influence, took the same view. Thus on various occasions the eunuchs, whose existence had almost been forgotten, came out on the stage again in this curious affair.

Shortly before noon, Chang Hsun was brought to the Dutch Legation. He was accompanied by a German employee of the Chinese police. Chang Hsun had been persuaded almost by force to come, by his Generals. He was still under the illusion that he could mediate. When the Dutch Minister informed him that this was impossible he wanted to return to his troops. Chang Hsun is still in the Legation Quarter under the control of the Dutch Minister.

Firing was very violent from dawn until 11 a. m. The firing of field guns, machine guns and rifles filled the air with an enormous tumult. From 11 o'clock on the firing gradually diminished. It entirely ceased at 4 p. m.

After this I immediately proceeded by motor car to the various centers of fighting. I found that Chang Hsun's house had been struck by several shells, and that the indirect artillery firing of the Government troops had been managed with considerable accuracy. The human dead had already been removed from the neighborhood, although numerous dead horses remained. From there I proceeded to the Temple of Heaven. I was astonished to find Chang Hsun's troops there encamped with all their arms and artillery, all in the best of spirits, eating, drinking and talking. They told me that they had five men killed, whose bodies were still there. The absence of visible results of the enormous expenditure of ammunition witnessed during the day was astonishing. I found, however, that the method of fighting employed by the troops was to get as close as possible behind a high wall and fire into the air in the general direction where the enemy might be. Hence the danger to bystanders was rather greater than that of the combatants themselves. As a matter of fact, the total number of killed as a result of the fighting of July 12 was twenty-six (26); seriously wounded, seventy-six (76), more than half being civilians.

The Chang Hsun contingents in the Temple of Heaven had hoisted the Republican flag at 10 a. m. An agreement was arrived at by which they were to be paid $60 per man upon the delivery of their arms. Chang Hsun's troops about the Imperial City held out for a larger payment. To my astonishment I saw as late as Saturday, July 14, fully armed soldiers of Chang Hsun on guard at the central police headquarters. When I asked for the reason of this phenomenon (Chang Hsun's troops having supposedly been absolutely defeated in pitched battle on July 12) I was told that the commanders had not yet arrived at an agreement as to what these contingents were to be paid. Eighty dollars per man was finally agreed upon, and by July 15 Chang Hsun's troops, deprived of their arms and their pigtails, had left Peking with their money, entrained for their rural homes in Shantung.

It is not surprising that the Government troops also demanded a reward for the services which they had rendered. It was finally arranged that they should have one month's extra pay.

For one or two nights there was a little sporadic looting in various parts of the city. Nearly all shops remained closed. But the looting did not become general, nor was there a panic.

General Tuan-Chi-jui arrived in Peking on July 13. I saw him on the following day, when he told me that he would carry out his original foreign policy, and that he had complete assurance that the Vice President would come to Peking to assume the presidency.

The dragon flags disappeared on July 12, as suddenly as they had appeared on July 1, and the city quickly resumed its ordinary life.

The rapid failure of Chang Hsun's enterprise was not due to any inherent weakness of the monarchical sentiment in North China. In fact monarchist leanings of the Northern military party are quite well known. It had been assumed that such a movement would be launched; and if it had been more prudently planned and prepared it might easily have been successful, at least for a time. Its total failure was due entirely to the fact that Chang Hsun, counting on monarchist tendencies of the Northern military men, neglected to make those preparatory negotiations which would have turned the potential support into real strength. While the above is true, however, there can be no doubt that Chang Hsun's failure imports an enormous setback to the cause of monarchism in China. After two failures of a monarchical movement, ambitious men will think many times before embarking on such a venture again; and it will take a strong man and careful preparation indeed to assure even temporary success in the future. The Republican form of government in China has been greatly strengthened.

There are forwarded herewith a number of clippings from the Peking press containing documents and articles relating to the subject of this despatch.

July 1. To-day Inspector General Chang (Hsun) entered the city with his troops and actually restored the monarchy. He stopped traffic and sent Liang Ting-fen [Tun-yen] and others to my place to persuade me. Yuan-hung refused in firm language and swore that he would not recognize such a step. It is his hope that the Vice President and others will take effective means to protect the Republic.

YUAN-HUNG

As heaven does not scorn calamity so has the monarchy been restored. It is said that in an edict issued by the Ching House it is stated that Yuan-hung had actually memorialized to return the power of State to the said House. This is an extraordinary announcement. China changed from autocracy to a Republic by the unanimous wish of the five races of the country. Since Yuan-hung was entrusted by the people with the great responsibilities it is his natural duty to maintain the Republic to the very end. Nothing more or less than this will he care to say. He is sending this in order to avoid misunderstanding.

YUAN-HUNG

To Vice President Feng at Nanking

It is to be presumed that the two telegrams sent on the 1st have safely reached you. I state with deepest regret and greatest sorrow that as the result of my lack of ability to handle the situation the political crisis has eventually affected the form of government. For this Yuan-hung realizes that he owes the country apology. The situation in Peking is daily becoming more precarious. Since Yuan-hung is now unable to exercise his power the continuity of the Republic may be suddenly interrupted. You are also entrusted by the citizens with great responsibilities. I ask you to temporarily exercise the power and functions of the President in your own office in accordance with the provisions of Article 42 of the Provisional Constitution and Article 5 of the Presidential Election law. As the means of communication is effectively blocked it is feared that the sending of my seal will meet with difficulty and obstruction. Tuan Chih-chuan (Tuan Chi-jui) has been appointed Premier, and is also ordered to temporarily protect the seal, and later to devise a means to forward it on to you. Hereafter everything pertaining to the important question of saving the country shall be energetically pushed by you and Chih-chuan with utmost vigour. The situation is pressing and your duty is clear. In great anxiety and expectation I am sending you this telegram.

[From the Peking Gazette, July 4, 1917]July 3. To Vice President Feng, Tuchuns and Governors of the Provinces, Provincial Assemblies, Inspector General Lu:

I presume that the two telegrams dated 1st and one dated 3d inst. have safely reached your place. With bitter remorse to myself I now make the statement that the political crisis has resulted in affecting the form of Government. Tuan Chih-chuan has been appointed on the 1st instant as Premier; and the Vice President has been asked to exercise the power and functions of the President in accordance with law. Pending the formal assumption of office by the Vice President, Premier Tuan is authorized to act at his discretion. All the seal and documents have been sent to Tientsin, and Premier Tuan has been told to keep and guard the same for the time being. He has also been asked to forward the same to the Vice President. The body guards of the President's Office have suddenly been replaced and I have been pressed to give up the Three Lakes. Yuan-hung has therefore removed to a hospital. As regards the means to save the country I trust that you will consult and work unitedly with Vice President Feng and Premier Tuan. In great expectation, and with much of my heart not poured out. Yours,

JAPANESE OFFICIAL STATEMENT

[From the Peking Gazette, July 4, 1917]

President Li, accompanied by two members of his staff, came at 9.30 on the evening of July 2 to the residence of General Saito, Military Attaché of the Japanese Legation, and asked protection for him. He arrived in a spontaneous manner and without previous notice.

Under these circumstances, the Imperial Japanese Legation, following international usage, has decided to accord him the necessary protection and has placed at his disposal a part of the military barracks.

The Legation further declares that as long as President Li remains there, it will not permit any political action on his part.

VIEW OF THE DIPLOMATIC CORPS

[From the Peking Gazette, July 4, 1917]

The following is a translation of the Chinese version of the view expressed by the Diplomatic Corps regarding the situation in Peking as officially conveyed to the authorities concerned through the Netherland Minister: While it is not the intention of the Diplomatic Corps to interfere with China's internal affairs, the Diplomatic Corps consider it necessary to suggest a method by which the likelihood of bloodshed in Peking may be avoided. In the opinion of the Diplomatic Corps the most effective method is for General Chang, who has already resigned and his soldiers to surrender their arms to responsible authorities and at the time General Tuan should make a declaration guaranteeing the lives of Chang Hsun and his troops.

SIR: Referring to my despatch No. 1557 of the 3d ultimo, and to previous correspondence on the subject, I have the honor to enclose copies of the despatches⁴ listed below from the various consulates in China, in regard to the political situation in the provinces.

From these despatches it will be seen that the restoration movement brought about by General Chang Hsun did not receive the support of the provinces. While this was especially true of the southern provinces it was also the case in Hunan and Hupei, the military governor of the latter, General Wang Tsan-yuan, going to the extent of ordering the provincial officials to turn all revenue into the provincial treasury until a Republican Government should be restored in Peking.

The despatches from the consulate at Nanking give an account of President Feng's attitude during the campaign against General Chang and up to the time of his coming to Peking, while the despatches from Shanghai and Canton deal with the activities of the Kuo Min Tang parliamentarians.

The trouble in Szechuan is daily growing worse and the Peking authorities seem powerless to suppress the anarchy which has prevailed there during the last three or four months.

Your telegram of August 16, 6 p. m. No other Government has been organized in the south although Sun, Tang and Wang and other Kuo Min Tang members are still attempting to assemble parliament at Canton. Fighting between the north [and] south is not considered to be likely as the Canton military officials are not in full sympathy with parliamentary party. President Feng appears to desire an understanding and may even favor reconvening Parliament. Tuan is opposed to this. President and Prime Minister are professing harmony but divergence of policy is apparent.

The war proclamation of the Chinese Government has been accepted by the Canton local authorities. This would appear to be recognition of the Central Government.

Separatist feeling at Canton and parliamentary agitation may continue discord but compromise seems likely unless foreign assistance should encourage South. At present the Japanese support Tuan whose cabinet contains several pro-Japanese but Consul General at Canton reports that some Japanese financial assistance is probable there.

SIR: I have the honor to enclose for your information two despatches⁴ of the Consuls General at Canton upon the situation there with respect to the effort to reassemble Parliament and to set up a Provisional Government.

From the point of view of general principles the parliamentary element and such men as C. T. Wang deserve a great deal of sympathy in their efforts to maintain the popular rights of representation against the more autocratic forms of government. Moreover, while the dissolved Parliament was by no means ideal, yet it had made evident progress in experience and political understanding.

⁴Not printed.

The factors which oppose the success of the enterprise of the Kuo Min Tang leaders at Canton are as follows. The nation is not deeply interested in the dissolved Parliament, which had not impressed itself upon the people through ability, signal success or public service. Restoration of this particular Parliament is therefore not easily made a popular war cry. The most prominent leaders Sun Yat Sen and Tang Shao-yi are discredited through their extreme radicalism and for other reasons. The military authorities at Canton are reluctant to put themselves entirely under such leadership; they appear opposed to the idea of a separate government. The Navy, which supports the radical element for some reason or other, does not count for much in the sum total of national affairs. The main factor is undoubtedly that there is no large supply of money with which to finance a separate government and military expeditions. Although it is reported that some money was advanced through German sources before the declaration of war and although there had been negotiations for Japanese support, it is evident that large amounts have not been realized.

The attitude of the Peking Government is as follows. The Premier desired to prepare for military action against the South. The President on the other hand, who has put himself in control of the military situation in the Yangtze Valley, seems to prefer to pursue a waiting policy and appears to be making efforts for arriving at an understanding with the Kuo Min Tang leaders of the South, especially those of more moderate tendencies.

I beg to refer also to my telegram of August 21, 4 p. m. dealing with this matter.

[Extract]

No. 1598

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Peking, August 24, 1917.

SIR: I have the honor to report on the reception accorded the note of the American Government which, under your telegraphic instruction of June 5, I delivered to the Minister for Foreign Affairs on June 7.

In my interview with Doctor Wu Ting-fang, Minister for Foreign Affairs, on this occasion, I expressed myself with respect to the motives of the American Government in making this declaration, in substance as follows:

Having on February 4 addressed to the Chinese Government an invitation to take action similar to that of the United States in severing relations with Germany and having under date of February 9 received the assurance that the Chinese Government fully associated itself with the action of the United States, the American Government feels morally responsible that there should be no misunderstanding as to the implications of its invitation: that the United States and all other countries engaged in war against Germany would welcome the participation of China in behalf of the rights of humanity if such participation should be prompted by the interests, the conscience and the sympathies of the Chinese people as manifested by their constitutionally established executive and legislative representatives; but that the Government of the United States, conceiving the war to be one for the principle of democracy, would deplore any construction of its invitation which would lend itself to the idea that it contemplates any coercion or restriction upon the freedom of action of the Chinese people in determining through their appropriate and recognized national authorities their relation towards the issues at stake in the war.

Doctor Wu Ting-fang expressed himself as highly gratified that the American Government should, at a time of great internal difficulty, show its good-will towards China, not by openly or secretly supporting one or the other party, nor seeking to draw advantage from the troubles of China, but by prominently bringing to the attention of all factions the compelling need of national unity.

Through two personal messengers, Doctor J. C. Ferguson and Roy C. Anderson, Esquire, I brought the note of the American Government directly but unofficially to the attention of the opposition leaders then assembled at Tientsin. They also acknowledged the good motives of the American Government as well as the soundness of the advice. General Tuan Chi-jui stated on this occasion that he had totally disinterested himself in all policies.

The reception of the note by the Chinese press was equally favorable. There is herewith enclosed an editorial from the Peking Gazette of June 8, on this subject.⁴

At this time there came an irruption of excited criticism and invective directed against the American action on the part of the Japanese press in Japan and China. The burthen of their song was that the United States should have consulted Japan before addressing the Chinese Government and that the action of the United States constituted interference in the domestic affairs of China. This matter was reported in my telegram of June 12, 8 p. m.

The Chinese press quite unanimously repudiated the Japanese claims and accusations. The translation of a characteristic editorial from the Sin Wen Pao of June 13 is herewith enclosed.⁴ The general substance of such editorials was that the Chinese people welcome America's advice and recognize its timeliness; and that as China is not a dependency of Japan, that country has no right to ask explanations.

It is my belief that the American note of June 7 will have a lasting effect upon public opinion in China. When it is sometimes stated, as it has been in some of the European papers in the Far East and in practically all of the Japanese papers, that the note produced no result, it is thereby assumed that the note was intended to strengthen the hands of a party and to produce a direct result upon the distribution of political power in China. It has, however, by this time become quite perfectly plain and has been accepted by the public opinion of the Far East that such was not the motive which inspired the American Government.

The permanent good effect of the note was exercised in making abundantly clear that the American Government did not desire the war issue used for the purpose of enabling any faction or party to override the general and free determinations of the Chinese Government and people. This has made everyone more cautious in the manner of urging the war action upon the Chinese. The effect produced by the note has been to emphasize in the minds of the Chinese of all parties and of all provinces the primary importance of subordinating all other wishes to the maintenance of national unity and of representative institutions. In this way the note has contributed and will continue to contribute towards strengthening Chinese nationalism and the desire for an efficient and representative central government.

From all directions has come testimony upon the good effects of the American note. The Consul General at Canton, the political centre of the South, reports, "The note presented by the American Government to the Chinese Government deploring the internal dissension in China and urging the necessity for national unity was warmly welcomed by the Cantonese officials and press."

In a conversation which I had with President Feng Kuo-chang on August 22, he brought up the subject of the American note and spoke of the salutary influence which it had exercised upon public opinion in China. Far from being regarded as undue interference in Chinese internal affairs, the note is considered as an additional assurance by the Chinese people that the American Government desires to see China so well organized that no such interference from any source will be possible.

MEMORANDUM

BRITISH EMBASSY,
Washington, September 3, 1917.

The Japanese Embassy in London has communicated to His Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs a memorandum concerning the internal situation in China. The memorandum advocates the support of the Central Government and the withholding of encouragement or material assistance from its opponents.

His Majesty's Government being convinced that the adoption by all the Allied Powers of a policy based on these lines affords the best prospect of the restoration of order in China have communicated to the Japanese Ambassador in London their readiness to adhere to the policy outlined in his memorandum.

The Japanese Embassy to the Department of State

[Memorandum handed to the Secretary of State by the Japanese Ambassador, September 4, 1917]

The internal situation in China has not failed to engage the serious attention of the Japanese Government. While it does not seem at this moment to justify absolute assurance of the maintenance of general peace and security in that country, it has evidently shown a steady improvement since the downfall of General Chang Hsun in his abortive attempt at the restoration of monarchy. The Ministry formed under the presidency of General Tuan Chi-jui, with the co-operation of the leaders of the Progressionists, did not in its earlier stages evince a sufficient degree of stability. Everything seemed to depend upon the attitude of General Feng Ko-chang, Vice President of the Chinese Republic. His arrival at Peking and the definitive resignation of President Li Yuan-hung have cleared the situation. According to the intelligence which reached the Japanese Government, the new President and the Prime Minister of China are apparently persuaded of the importance which their loyal and sincere collaboration has for the good of the country. The fact of the declaration of war on Germany and Austria-Hungary may be taken as a proof of the harmonious accord existing between these two statesmen. At the present moment when all nations at war with Germany are confronted with such grave responsibilities, when China has just ranged herself on their side, nothing would be more prejudicial to their interests as well as to the interests of China than the continuance of domestic troubles consequent upon the absence of a strong and capable authority in Peking. Without anticipating the course of events, the Japanese Government are of the opinion that, under the existing condition of affairs in China, the present Government at Peking enjoy an authority sufficiently strong and capable for the maintenance of order and tranquility in that country. The Japanese Government have no intention of showing, nor have they any reason to show, any preference for either of the political factions in China. They are, however, convinced that all the foreign Powers ought in their common interest to lend their sincere and effective support to that government which represents the sole legal authority in China at present and that it is of the utmost importance for them to withhold any encouragement or material assistance to individuals or associations seeking to overthrow the Government at Peking. The Japanese Government confidently hope that the United States Government will share the views above indicated.

MEMORANDUM

The Department of State has received from his excellency the British Ambassador a memorandum dated September 3, 1917, stating that the Japanese Embassy in London has communicated to the British Government a memorandum concerning the internal political situation in China and advocating the support of the Central Government by cooperative measures among the Allied Powers. The Department of State notes that His Britannic Majesty's Government have given adherence to the policy outlined in the Japanese Ambassador's memorandum.

A memorandum apparently similar to the one communicated to the British Government by the Japanese Ambassador in London has been handed to the Department of State and that Department is disposed to favor in principle the proposals of the Imperial Japanese Government as set forth in its memorandum. Furthermore, the Department of State suggests that the principal Powers at war with Germany ought at once to confer together and agree upon the best method of supplying to the Central Government of China the effective support to which the memorandum of the Imperial Japanese Government refers.

MEMORANDUM

The American Government shares in principle the views expressed by the Imperial Japanese Government in the memorandum handed to the Secretary of State by His Imperial Japanese Majesty's Ambassador on September 4, 1917, stating that the Japanese Government have no intention of showing nor have any reason to show any preference for either of the political factions in China and that they are convinced that all the foreign Powers ought in their common interest to lend their sincere and effective support to that government which represents the sole legal authority in China at present and that it is of the utmost importance to withhold any encouragement or material assistance to individuals or associations seeking to overthrow the Government at Peking.

The American Government moreover is of opinion that the principal Powers at war with Germany ought at once to confer together and agree upon the best method of supplying that effective support to which the memorandum under acknowledgment refers.

*Not printed.

on the situation in the provinces which are not at present in accord with the Central Government, that is Szechuan, Yunnan, Kwangtung and Kwangsi.

The following facts are detached from information which has come to me through conversation with the Acting President, the Premier and other high officials and from other sources.

The factors present in the exceedingly complicated situation in the South of China are the following: The Kuo Min Tang members of Parliament, led at present by Sun Yat-sen whose personal influence is however said to be on the wane, so that it is considered likely he will have to give way to less radical leaders. General Lu Yung-ting, who while keeping up his connection with the Central Government is supporting the principal demands made by the South; he is believed to be aiming for the Vice Presidency in the next election but the Premier stated to me that this was out of the question on account of the origin of Lu Yung-ting (he began his career as chief of a robber band). General Chen the military governor of Kwangtung and the two civil governors of Kwangtung and Kwangsi are in communication with the Central Government, although at the present they seem to have been induced to give a certain amount of countenance to the Provisional Government of Canton. The situation in Szechuan is so confused that it defies analysis. I have been informed by a prominent member of the government that the Chin Pu Tang members of the Cabinet are particularly involved in the situation in these two provinces, which they desire to use for the purpose of maintaining their importance in the Government. The most violent opposition was made on the part of Southern leaders generally against the appointment of General Fu Liang-tso as Tuchun of Hunan; though the Consul General at Canton, General Chen informed me that the demands with respect to the convocation of Parliament and the restitution of Acting President Li might be discussed, but there must be no mistake about the dismissal of General Fu Liang-tso. It was also reported from Hunan that there would be local opposition to his appointment. Both the Acting President and Premier, however, upheld his appointment stating to me that he had been selected on account of his good standing in Hunan of which province he is a native. When I asked why the South directed special opposition to him, I was told that this was done because it was feared in the South that General Fu Liang-tso would prevent the Province of Hunan from becoming a pawn in the political game played by the South. Those who believe that there is a secret but intense rivalry between the Premier and the Acting President hold that each one is trying to utilize the factors in this complicated game for the advancement of his interests. Meanwhile it appears that Mr. Liang Shih-yi on the part of the so-called Communications party, represented in the Government by Mr. Tsao Ju-lin and Mr. Yeh Kung-cho, respectively Minister and Vice Minister of Communications, is trying to make a combination with the moderate elements of the Kuo Min Tang party in Canton.

The above summary will appear far from intelligible, but it corresponds to the existing situation in which a great number of incongruous political and personal factors are present which are utilized in a rivalry for political power between the Northern military party, the Chin Pu Tang and the Kuo Min Tang, each in turn subdivided by personal groupings. Such national questions as the convocation of the Parliament, finance and military policy are viewed from the prospect of the approaching Presidential election and of the Parliamentary elections which will have to precede this. Every factor is closely calculated in its bearing upon this political contest. The efforts to obtain funds from abroad are also stimulated by the desire of all parties to get control of the proceeds of foreign loans. In this, of course, they frequently work at cross purposes on account of their conflicting interests. Thus a loan obtained and administered by the Minister of Finance (Chin Pu Tang) will be bitterly decried by the Kuo Min Tang and will not be welcome in that form to the Northern military and the Communications party; and vice versa for all the stated combinations.

SIR: I have the honor to enclose copies of a translation of the Mandates issued on September 29, which provide for the convocation of Parliament, the summoning of a preliminary National Council, and the punishment of Sun Wen, Wu Ching-lien and others concerned in the establishment of a provisional military government at Canton.

[From the Peking Daily News, October 2, 1917]

The following three mandates, dealing with the preparation for the convocation of Parliament, the calling of the National Council and the punishment of Sun Wen, Wu Ching-lien, etc., which were sealed by the President and countersigned by the Cabinet Ministers on Friday [September 28, 1917], were promulgated on Saturday evening and which we issued on Sunday morning as an extra:

CONVOCACTION OF PARLIAMENT

The convocation of Parliament is provided for in Article 53 of the Provisional Constitution. It is of paramount importance that with the revival of the republican form of government all those organs of the Government as are provided for therein should be established. The Ministry of the Interior is hereby instructed to establish in accordance with the precedent obtaining in the First Year of the Republic a special bureau for the preparation of the convocation of the National Parliament, so that all matters connected with the election of members can be facilitated.

NATIONAL COUNCIL AND ITS WORK

The original Parliamentary Organization Law and the law governing the election of members of the two Houses of Parliament were passed by the former National Council in the First Year of the Republic and promulgated by the late President Yuan Shih-kai. However, owing to the impracticability of these laws, many political upheavals have been caused during the past few years. Under the present circumstances it is most important that these laws should be speedily revised. The high officials of the provinces, Mongolia, Tibet and Chinghai are hereby ordered to elect and appoint in accordance with law members of the National Council so that they will be able to arrive at Peking within a month's time and organize the National Council for the purpose of revising and passing the Parliamentary Organization and Election Laws. Apart from this function, all other legislative duties shall be carried out by the formal Parliament to be convened in accordance with law, so as to emphasize the importance of the Legislature.

REBELS IN CANTON

Sun Wen, Wu Ching-lien and others have recently circulated a telegram throughout the provinces unlawfully stating that an extraordinary parliament had established a military government and elected Sun Wen as its generalissimo, and that the latter had assumed the said illegal office on the 10th of the present month. The telegram also announced the illegal appointment of various Ministers, a Chief of the General Staff, and a Commander-in-Chief, and issued many illegal orders calculated to incite the Army to rebellion.

A report has since been received from Chang Tso-ling, Tuchun of Fengtien, stating that several arrests have been made lately in his province of men appointed by Sun Wen to enlist the help of Hunghutze banditti in preparation for a general rising and that substantial evidence concerning the plot has been obtained, etc. It is therefore clear that the actions of Sun Wen, etc., are aimed at overthrowing the present legally constituted Government and precipitating anarchical conditions in the country. Unless such men are punished it is difficult to uphold the supremacy of the law. All high military and civil officials throughout the country are hereby ordered to effect the arrest of the said Sun Wen and Wu Ching-lien and to hand them over to the courts of justice to be dealt with in accordance with law. The said Sun Wen and Wu Ching-lien are hereby deprived of their Orders of Merit and decorations, and investigations shall also be conducted concerning those who are holding posts in the said illegal military government and others who are attending the extraordinary parliament as members, in order that they may also be severely dealt with accordingly.

No. 1664

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Peking, October 12, 1917.

SIR: I have the honor to report on the political situation as follows:

1. The election of members of the National Council is proceeding and it is expected that the Council will assemble at the appointed time (November 1). Preparations for the election of the succeeding Parliament have also begun to be made; although the definite arrangements will have to wait the determinations of the National Council with respect to the size and the mode of election of the coming Parliament.

2. The so-called provisional military Government under Sun Yat-sen in Canton thus far exists only in name. It could become of real importance only if the differences between the northern and southern military should not be settled, in which case the latter might fall back upon and utilize the organization attempted by Sun Yat-sen and his followers. For reference in connection with this, there is herewith enclosed despatch No. 42 dated September 13 of the Consulate General at Canton.⁴

3. The southern military party under the leadership of General Lu Yung-ting and Governor Chien Pi-kung of Kwangtung, is still maintaining its attitude of opposition to the Central Government. Military action even is taking place between troops of the two parties in southern Hunan. The questions which divide these parties are, however, largely personal. The southern Generals demand the removal of Governor Fu Liang-tso of Hunan, a representative of Premier Tuan; and the Central Government has held out hopes that General Fu might be recalled in a short time. The controversy therefore has little to do with public policy, and is rather one of personal differences involving rivalries among the different military factions and opposition on the part of the South to the strengthening of the personal control exercised by the Premier as Minister of War.

In this connection I have the honor to report that the Premier has in recent conversations explained to me his general policy. It is his purpose that the military power in China should be made national and unified in order that the peace of the country cannot be at all times disturbed by local military commanders. When the military power has been thus unified, it is the intention of the Premier to take it entirely out of politics and to devote it to its proper military purposes. It is his purpose that when the Army can no longer be used for factional disputes, to leave the public men of civil life entirely free to settle the questions of the Constitution of the Government including Parliament, and of public policy. This is undoubtedly an enlightend programme and if it could actually be carried out in the sense in which the Premier now presents it, it would unify China and liberate the activities of political life. I believe that the Premier is sincere in his efforts. His opponents, however, fear that a consolidated military power would after all be used politically to accomplish the reestablishment of Yuan Shih-kai's system of military dictatorship.

4. As the controversy between the northern and southern military centres about the personal influence and power of Premier Tuan, it was believed by many that the Acting President, General Feng Kuo-chang would have the forces in central China who support him, observe an attitude of neutrality while of course outwardly supporting the authority of the Central Government. It would appear, however, that the Acting President and Premier are continuing to cooperate. It is considered possible that General Tuan may temporarily withdraw for the sake of harmony; but his prestige and the confidence in his integrity are great and have been gaining in strength constantly, so that it would appear likely that General Tuan will surely continue to play a leading part, and that his withdrawal might be a step towards his accession to the Presidency at the next election. Younger men of great ability in the Government, who have little confidence in the power of the old-time leaders to do anything for China, look to General Tuan as the man under whose leadership they would have the greatest opportunity to build up the Government. The strength of General Tuan lies however, not so much in constructive ability or knowledge of men or administrative talent, in all of which he is not deemed eminent, but in wisdom and in honesty of purpose.

For your information, concerning the situation in Hunan, there are enclosed copies of despatches No. 165 and No. 166 from the Consul at Changsha. The former, and the last paragraph of the letter are specially informing.⁴

SIR: I have the honor to enclose for your information four despatches dealing with the political situation in disaffected provinces.⁴

The despatch from Canton (No. 45, of October 9) indicates that the southern military authorities have not yet taken up the so-called provisional military government organized under Sun Yat-sen. The acceptance of the post of Vice Minister of Foreign Affairs by Mr. Wu Chao-chu, would seem to indicate that the more responsible elements in China are ready to take some stock in the provisional government. Should the attempt of the provisional government to obtain funds be successful, the military leaders would undoubtedly be more ready to ally themselves with it. The despatch from Canton also indicates that the action of the southern military leaders is based not so much on opposition to General Fu Liang-tso but is animated by a general desire to escape the action of the Central Power in unifying military administration.

The despatch from Changsha (No. 171 of October 6) attributes the political confusion in that province to the constant desire of the provincials to have things their own way without interference from Peking; the Consul at Changsha therefore concludes that the previous authorities in Hunan are to be held responsible for the present unfavorable situation.

The despatch from Chungking (No. 49 of October 2) would seem to indicate that out of the inextricable confusion reigning in that province there is emerging a tendency of the forces at play to group themselves in a manner more favorable to the Peking Government.

No. 1749

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Peking, November 20, 1917.

SIR: I have the honor to report that on November 16, 1917, General Tuan Chi-jui, the Prime Minister, and his whole Cabinet, resigned. On November 17 extended meetings took place between the Cabinet and the President, at the end of which the resignations were withdrawn. Today it is again expected that the resignation of the Premier will very shortly be again presented. Even should he remain, it is likely that the Chin Pu Tang members of the Cabinet will resign.

As I previously intimated, it was not unlikely that the Premier would voluntarily withdraw in order to facilitate harmony between the North and the South, with the expectation that he would return to power later with a good chance of becoming President. The desire for retirement has come sooner than was anticipated. In the meantime the authority of General Tuan has been greatly weakened. His representative, General Fu Liang-tso, can not maintain himself as Tuchun of Hunan; as previously reported this official was made the subject of concentrated attacks on the part of General Tuan's opponents, who desired to test the latter's authority at this point.

The attempted dismissal of General Meng, the Tuchun of Kirin, proved unsuccessful. Orders given to General Lu, the officer in command at Shanghai, instructing him to give military support to General Fu Liang-tso, were disregarded by the latter, though of course in polite terms.

The result of these various instances of defiance of authority was that though the power of General Tuan's Cabinet rests avowedly upon a military basis, its military orders did not carry beyond Peking.

There is no question that General Tuan's authority was greatly weakened through the common conviction on the part of the Chinese that certain members of his Cabinet, particularly Mr. Tsao Ju-lin, the Minister of Communications, as well as General Hsu Shu-tseng, Vice Minister of War, had fallen completely under Japanese influence and were attempting to put through certain contracts and agreements highly unfavorable to China. The popular dissatisfaction on this score came to a head when the viceroys of the Yangtse River provinces addressed the Central Government with the demand to make explanations on that point. The nature of the charges currently made against the Cabinet of General Tuan will be apparent from the enclosed newspaper articles which cover the period of the past ten days.

The National Council, which has been convoked and had its inaugural meeting on November 10, has not strengthened the Central Government, and its existence has already become a negligible factor.

Foreign opinion was typified by the following statement made to me by one of the most experienced of my colleagues:

The universal disapproval of General Tuan's Cabinet is a promising sign, it shows that there is a limit to what will be endured by the Chinese people. Moreover, it proves that the attempt to govern by military power without regard to the underlying principles of the Constitution can not be successful. General Tuan's authority is so shaken that his retirement can be a question only of a short time. It is a pity that he did not surround himself with better advisers.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, November 26, 1917.

SIR: I have the honor to quote for your information and for such action as you may deem appropriate an excerpt from a despatch of October 9, 1917, from the American Consul General at Canton, China, regarding certain activities of the revolutionary government in that country:

The military government is in imperative need of funds. If it succeeds in obtaining $10,000,000 through the sale of its bonds, $2,000,000 is to be given to General Lu and a similar amount to General Tong. These leaders have always expressed the fear that the military government would prove a financial drain on their already practically depleted stock of funds. In being given this money they would see that the military government, instead of being a drag, is of material assistance. Three members of the Kuo Min Tang, including Sun Fo, the son of Sun Yat-sen, and Wong Chen-yun, a former commissioner of education of Fukien, left Canton on the 6th instant for Manila. They are holders of section six certificates, as travelers, issued by the local Commissioner of Foreign Affairs and visaed by me. These men plan to spend several months in the Philippine Islands, after which they will proceed to Java and the Straits Settlements, at all of which places they will endeavor to dispose of bonds to the Chinese residents.

The matter of the proposed sale in Hawaii of bonds of the new revolutionary government in South China was brought to the Department's attention some weeks ago by the Chinese Legation here, whereupon the Department advised the Departments of the Treasury, Justice, Post Office and Labor and suggested that they might wish to communicate with the proper officials of their Departments, with a view to preventing, if possible, the admission of these bonds to the United States or Hawaii and their sale to an unsuspecting public.

This matter is brought to your attention with the suggestion that you may possibly wish to take steps to prevent the sale of these bonds or the future importation of similar bonds in the Philippine Islands.

For your confidential information I have to state that the latest information which the Department has received from the Consul General at Canton and the Chinese Minister here indicates that the movement in the South has not resulted in the establishment of any responsible, independent government in that region.

Minister Reinsch to the Secretary of State

No. 1788

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Peking, December 7, 1917.

SIR: In connection with my despatch No. 1775 of December 3, relating to the new Cabinet, I have the honor to report that the hopes which have been entertained for a speedy compromise between the Northern and the Southern leaders have for the present come to naught. A conference was held at Tientsin on December 4, attended by the Northern Tuchuns, or their representatives, particularly General Tsao Kun of Chihli, General Ni Shih-chung of Anhwei, General Chang Tso-lin of Manchuria, and General Chan Huai-chi of Shantung. This conference decided that the military operations against the South should be continued with all energy, and that a force of 200,000 men should be sent against the South; moreover, that ample funds for this undertaking must be immediately provided. The latter is considered to be the gravamen of the action of this official conference. None of these generals, it must be stated, are noted for their military exploits. It is to be feared that they contemplate the hiring of large forces of coolies, primarily for the personal profit and power which will thereupon result to them individually. Aware of the fact that the finances of the country are likely to be improved by the temporary postponement of the Boxer Indemnity payments, and through further release of salt revenue, they desire to make sure that most of the funds secured in this manner by the Government will come under their control.

I have specifically reported on this matter because if any financial assistance—such as loans, postponements of payments due, etc.—is really to benefit China rather than to impose a burden or entail waste, it is necessary that precautions should be taken against the moneys being employed as contemplated by these Northern generals, partly for continuing internal war, partly for increasing their personal wealth and importance. The people of China are thoroughly weary of civil war, and it is to be hoped that the sane and patriotic thought of the nation will be given expression in an early arrangement for a re-united national government.

The most important men in China at present are all at the bottom of their hearts in favor of peace: General Tuan Chi-jui, Acting President Feng Kuo-chang, General Li Hsun of Nanking, and Lu Yung-ting of the South. The difficulty is in bringing them and others of like sentiments together in effective action.

SIR: I have the honor to enclose herewith despatches Numbers 49, 50 and 52, from the Consulate General at Canton,⁴ covering the period from November 2 to December 4, and reporting on the development of the political situation there. On December 13, the Consul General telegraphed the following information:

The acting Military Governor, Mo, had assured the Consul General that General Lu Yung-ting would resume complete allegiance to the Central Government on condition, as a sine qua non, that the dissolved Parliament should be reconvened and the provisional Constitution observed until the promulgation of the permanent Constitution. From this it is apparent that General Lu Yung-ting and the progressive parliamentary leaders at Canton, who have now been joined by Dr. Wu Ting-fang, have come together, and that General Lu is therefore emphasizing the reconvening of the old Parliament as an essential condition of peace. The punishment of the leaders who caused the dissolution of Parliament was also mentioned, but it was stated that only such punishment was desired as would discourage similar action in the future. It was suggested that all other differences could be placed in the hands of a peace commission.

The Consul General at Canton reports that Dr. Wu Ting-fang and other progressive leaders have intimated to him that in case of arbitration, the American Minister, representing the President of the United States, would be acceptable to them as mediator. The suggestion has been made in the North China Daily News (British) that mediation affords the only practical solution between the North and South, and that mediation by the British and American Ministers is desirable. These suggestions, as reported by the Consul General at Shanghai, in his despatches Nos. 1612 and 1646,⁴ are herewith forwarded. It goes without saying, that neither the British Minister nor myself have given any consideration to this matter, as we have not been officially approached.

SIR: In connection with the loan of the Continental and Commercial National Bank and in continuation of my despatch (No. 1295) of December 8th,¹² I have the honor to report as follows. I have had some conversations with His Excellency, the President of China, and with the Minister of Finance, in which they brought up the matter of the use of any funds which might be obtained from American loans in the near future. It is their intention that the major portion of such funds shall be used for the establishment of an industrial bank.

As to the organization of such a bank two alternatives are suggested. Either there could be organized a stock-company bank, organized in conformity with the legislation of both the United States and China: the capital would be subscribed by Americans and the Chinese Government; the directorate and management to represent both parties. Or the bank could be organized simply as a Chinese Government institution in which on account of the fact that the funds were supplied by an American loan, there would be appointed an American co-manager with full power of concurrent control over all important operations of the bank.

It is intended that the bank should supply funds for enterprises both public and private which deal with the development of the resources, colonization, agriculture and industry, the loans to be secured upon the property of the enterprises concerned. Among the constructive activities thus to be supplied with funds there would be the following, among others: municipal utilities, mining, agricultural colonization, forestry, cattle raising, the building of toll roads, iron works and other manufacturing industries.

The business of the bank would begin with cautious advances to enterprises which could give assurance of abundant returns for a prompt and regular repayment of the loan made. The latter would naturally be for a long term of years repayable in annual installments. In cases where machinery is provided for industries, the presence of the other elements necessary for successful operation would have to be demonstrated.

Any loan made to the Chinese Government for the purposes above stated would have as its security the general guaranty of the Chinese Government fortified more especially by the assignment of some special tax, such as the tobacco and wine tax, which is assigned for the Chicago loan; the security would further embrace the assets of the industrial bank and would therefore rest back upon every enterprise, the development of which would be facilitated through this organization.

¹¹Continued from For. Rel. 1916, p. 123.

In the above I have given the merest outline of the proposals which have been made by the Chinese Government. They have been made with a view to securing the cooperation of Americans who are known to be animated with a desire to help China organize herself and would not use an intimate connection for political advantage. These suggestions of the high Chinese officials have been made informally but I feel assured that should the American bankers take up negotiations along these lines the results indicated could be secured. If this banking enterprise were to be undertaken it would create an unequalled leverage for the upbuilding of Chinese economical well-being.

Should this matter be taken up the Legation will of course exert itself to supply the Department and the parties interested with the most complete information possible on every phase of the subject.

Peking, January 13, 1917, 8 p. m.

My despatch No. 95. [1295.] The President and Minister of Finance have expressed to me their desire to create a strong industrial bank devoting to it the greater part of proceeds of Chicago loan, now being negotiated.

The bank could be made joint Chinese-American enterprise incorporated concurrently in China and in the United States with joint management; or a Chinese Government institution having its capital created chiefly out of the loan, with an American co-manager during the life of the bonds which would be secured not only by general government guaranty and special taxes pledged but also by assets of the bank.

It would be the function of the bank to supply funds for public and private enterprises dealing with natural yields, colonization, forestry, municipal utilities and various manufacturing industries; such loans to be made on basis warranted by assets and definite prospects of enterprise. The bank might also float special industrial bond issues in China and the United States.

This project offers a means of assisting economic development of China along sound lines through an institution whose scope would expand as security and experience warrant. It is eminently desirable that the proceeds of any American loan should have some perpetual destination and that their proper application should be guaranteed through participation in management in order to avoid both international protests as to the purposes of the loan and an unprofitable expenditure of the resources thus supplied.

Japanese Minister has handed to Minister for Foreign Affairs note verbale urging that as the Bankers' Syndicate is considering making a loan the Chinese Government should not make any loans elsewhere and stating that the Japanese Group is ready to supply funds immediately for urgent needs.

Minister of Finance informs me that Odagiri, Japanese representative, stated to him that as the Bankers' Syndicate found it difficult to act at present the Japanese Bank was ready to loan immediately 10,000,000 yen on condition, however, that the negotiations with Americans be broken off. When questioned as to the attitude of the other members of syndicate Japanese representative stated Allies satisfied and Germany need not be considered. Minister of Finance dissented and stated that proposed action would be justifiable only if syndicate dissolved.

When Minister of Finance remarked that the sum mentioned would not be sufficient Japanese representative assured him that in a short time larger loan could be provided by syndicate. Minister of Finance believes that after having wrecked American negotiations and secured control Japanese would then offer participation to New York Group. He also fears that should he decline the Japanese offer influence will be exerted to oust him.

I regret to report such manifestations of an attempt covertly to abridge American opportunities and to make our action dependent on Japan. Present difficulty is the fact that all reports concerning alleged protests of the Allied Powers against the American railway and Chicago loan were sent out by Japanese agencies; unfortunately some persons in the United States appear to be walking into trap. Continued prompt independent action on our part is necessary to assure our position which is inherently very strong.

JANUARY 25, 1917.

The Japanese Ambassador called upon the Secretary of State and said that the British Ambassador had mentioned to him a conversation with the Secretary relating to cooperation between Americans and Japanese in loans and industrial enterprises in China.

In reply to an inquiry from the Japanese Ambassador the Secretary stated that the American Government was not opposed to cooperation between Americans and Japanese in China provided the parties interested desired to cooperate, that the United States had no political ambitions in the Far East and therefore had no reason to oppose such cooperation. He stated furthermore that the American Government welcomed such cooperation when free from political designs because it tended to the promotion of international friendship. Where cooperation, however, was sought to promote political objects it rather tended to arouse suspicion than to promote friendship.

One thing, the Secretary said, the American Government could not approve—that was the coercion of China.

The conversation was frank and friendly upon both sides.

The Ambassador inquired about the proposal to cooperate in railway building in Manchuria.

The Secretary replied that the Ambassador must be aware that the American Government recognized that Japan had special interests in Manchuria. Although no declaration to that effect had been made by the United States yet this Government had repeatedly shown a practical recognition of the fact and did not desire to do anything there to interfere with Japan's interests.

"But," asked the Ambassador, "was not the proposal made by the American Minister in Peking?" The Secretary said he did not know of it. "Was it not done then in accordance with instructions from the Department of State?" asked the Ambassador. The Secretary said that he did not recollect any such instruction.¹³

The Secretary called the attention of the Ambassador in this connection to the difference between Manchuria, where Japan's special interests were conceded, and Shantung where no such special interest was recognized.

The Japanese Ambassador said that Germany had claimed special interests in Shantung. The Secretary replied that the United States had never recognized such claim.

The Ambassador then asked what the attitude of this Government was towards the suggested cooperation of American bankers with the Consortium (the international group that made the Reorganization Loan of 1913).

The Secretary said that he could not approve such cooperation for the reason that it appeared to be a political combination interfering with China's sovereign rights. He believed that generally speaking international cooperation in China was a good thing but it should be free from political motives.

Yesterday at a luncheon given by Barons Goto, Shibusawa and Sakatani, Japanese Minister for Foreign Affairs asked me privately what I thought of his address to the Diet¹⁴ saying that it represented the sincere policy of the cabinet toward the United States and China. He said that he had been asked from London to consent to the reentry of the United States into the international financial group in China and had answered that he had no objection but that the operations of the group should be confined to political loans for administrative purposes strictly and that he thought the Government of the United States should back its nationals. He asked me whether this would be accepted. I told him I had no instructions but pointed out that our administration objected to the group on the ground that it infringed China's sovereignty and freedom of action and that there was public criticism because of the restrictions of participation to a limited group of financiers. He said that he understood this and that there was some trouble in England on the latter point. He repeated that he had no objection to the United States reentering the international group for political loans as stated but what he desired was to promote cooperation between American and Japanese financial and business interests in loan for the industrial development of China, and that he was ready to give active support to such a movement. It would be understood, however, that such joint operations should be for business purposes only and that no political advantage would be sought by Japan through them. He expressed the opinion that such cooperation would strengthen the friendly relations between Japan and the United States, allay suspicion in China and aid in her development. All this was predicated on the understanding that Japan claims special rights in Manchuria and Eastern Inner Mongolia which she does not waive. I told him I would cable for instructions. It is apparent that the policy of the Cabinet toward China will be much discussed in the approaching campaign.

Address of Viscount Motono in the Imperial Japanese Diet

[Handed to the Secretary of State by the Japanese Ambassador January 29, 1917]

You are aware that Japan has always preserved the most sincerely amicable relations with the Government and people of America, though from time to time there have been light clouds which have cast a shadow upon our relations though never so slight. These clouds have generally been dissipated by the common good will of the two Governments. There certainly have been questions about which the two Governments could not come to a complete accord, but that will be the case between even the best of allies. However, when one faces the most thorny questions in a friendly and frank spirit, with the will of solving them in an amicable and conciliatory manner, there will surely be found a way to an understanding. It is this end that the two Governments have always pursued to the great satisfaction of our two countries. It affords me great pleasure to state that there have been symptoms of more real sympathy manifested of late between the two countries. As one instance we have been approached by the American capitalists for cooperation in financial affairs in China. The Imperial Government are watching with lively interest the further development of the economic rapprochement between the two countries.

I would not speak of all the events that have come to pass in China in recent years, which must be still fresh in your memory. We must recognize that as the result of these events there has been created a certain atmosphere which is not altogether desirable. It is for the good of our two countries that this state of things should absolutely disappear. In view of the great political and economic interests which Japan possesses in China, it has always been the sincere desire of this country to see her neighbour developed along the paths of modern civilization and we have spared no efforts for that purpose. It was for that purpose also that we sent to China a number of civil and military advisors, and that we concurred with other countries in furnishing China with the financial means of accomplishing reforms of every kind and also that we undertook the education and instruction of the young Chinese students who are coming to Japan by thousands.

Nobody would contradict me when I say that China certainly is indebted much to Japan in her work of re-organization pursued for several years. Why is it that in spite of all our well meant efforts, China seems often to regard us with mistrust and even animosity? There may be many causes for that, but the chief reason, to my mind, is the tendency on the part of the Japanese towards interference in China's internal quarrels since the overthrow of the Manchu Dynasty and the establishment of the republican régime. There have since been formed in China a number of political parties for one or another of which parties there have been some Japanese who have expressed sympathy. These persons have developed marked tendency towards a desire to help these political parties to obtain power according as their own political opinions or personal sympathy dictate. I am persuaded that all these persons are perfectly sincere in their desire of helping our neighbouring friends, but the results were deplorable. To what did our attitude at the moment of the formation of the Republic lead, and to what did all the movements inimical to the President lead? You are aware of it so well that I need not dwell upon it. But what I have to state is that in the wake of all these acts we have had no other results than to invite, on the one hand, the animosity of our neighbours and, on the other, to cause other nations' misunderstanding of the real intentions of Japan. I do not hesitate to state that the present Cabinet absolutely repudiate this mode of action. We desire to maintain the most cordial relations with China. We desire nothing more than the gradual accomplishment by China of all her schemes of reform and we shall leave nothing undone in order to help her in the task, if she so desires. Endeavours shall not be wanting on our part to make China comprehend the sincerity of our sentiments toward her, though it must always remain with China whether she should have faith in us or not. We have not the least intention, I formally declare hereby, of favouring this or that political party in China; all we desire is the maintenance of cordial relations of amity with China herself and not with any political party. It is essential that China should develop herself smoothly along the path of progress and we dread nothing more than the possible disintegration of China through her continued troubles. We must put forth every effort to prevent that sad possibility, for nothing is more indispensable than that China should maintain her independence and territorial integrity. The other point to which the Government must call your attention is the special position occupied by Japan in certain portions of China. I am speaking especially of South Manchuria and East Inner Mongolia. Our special situation in these parts has been acquired at the cost of immense sacrifice and immeasurable efforts on our part and on the strength of this circumstance our rights and interests in these parts have been consecrated by treaties and arrangements. It is therefore the most elementary duty of the Imperial Government toward the nation to safeguard these rights and interests. In the same way it is necessary that China should comprehend that it is not only a matter of compliance with international duty that China should respect these rights and interests of Japan, but it would be nothing more than the realization of the good understanding between our two countries.

If China would continue, as we sincerely desire she would, relations of the greatest confidence and amity with Japan, it is necessary that she should follow the same lines of conduct as those we intend to follow with her. It is on this condition alone that anything like a firm understanding can exist between us. The Imperial Government have the strongest conviction that if the Chinese Government understood the pure and clear intentions of Japan, China would not have any objection to Japan's sincere policy of good understanding in the relations between Japan and China. Nobody certainly would dispute the fact that Japan occupies a peculiar position in China as well on account of her geographic position as her political and economic interests; but we must not any more ignore the fact that other powers have likewise immense interests in China. We must, therefore, while safeguarding our own interests there, take care to respect those of other nations. We must before everything try to move in accord with powers with which we are under the pledge of special arrangements and in a general way endeavour to reconcile our interests with those of others. We are firmly convinced that such is the line of conduct best suited to the common interests of all powers concerned. Japan has not any intention to follow an egoistic policy in China. It is her sincere desire to keep in complete accord with the countries concerned, and the Imperial Government firmly believe that with good will on both sides we shall be able to arrive at a complete understanding which will be for the best interests both of China and all other countries.

The American Government will be glad to see Americans and Japanese cooperate in industrial development of China and shares views of Minister that such cooperation should be for business only, not for political advantage.

Your statement of Department's attitude towards participation by American financiers in loans by consortium is approved. I agree with the Minister in the opinion that no question can arise between our two Governments that cannot by frankness and friendliness be satisfactorily solved.

THE LOAN AGREEMENT

The Bank of Communications of the Republic of China (hereinafter described as A) with the object of reorganizing its business hereby concludes with the Japanese Banking Group (hereinafter described as B) of three banks, viz: the Industrial Development Bank, the Taiwan Bank and the Chosen Bank a loan of five million yen (Y. 5,000,000). The articles constituting the agreement for this loan are as follows:

Art. 1: The proceeds of this loan shall be 5,000,000 yen (Y. 5,000,000) of Japanese currency.

Art. 2: The term of this loan shall run from the date of the signature of this agreement for fully three years; that is, it shall expire on the 19th day of the 1st month of the 9th year of the Republic.

Art. 3: The rate of interest on the loan shall be 7.5 per cent per annum; that is, for every 100 yen 7 yen and 50 sen shall be paid each year.

Art. 4: The first payment of interest on the loan shall be reckoned per diem from the date on which the whole amount of the loan proceeds is paid (to the Bank) up to the 19th of the 7th month of the 6th year of the Republic and the same shall be paid in advance. Thereafter on the 20th of the 7th month and the 20th of the 1st month of each year the interest for each half year shall be paid in advance.

Art. 5: On receipt of the securities mentioned in Article 10 of this agreement, B shall pay over the whole amount of the loan proceeds in full (with the exception of the deduction of interest for the first period). The proceeds shall be paid at Tokyo to the representative of A.

Art. 6: On receipt of the full amount of loan proceeds mentioned above, the representative of A may deposit the funds with the banks of B as deposit and may draw on them for use at any time.

Respecting the terms of deposit and remittance of the loan proceeds, the representative of A may discuss and arrange with B at Tokyo.

Art. 7: The proceeds of the loan shall be paid in full without discount or commission.

Art. 8: The repayment of the principal and payment of the interest of the loan shall take place at Tokyo.

Art. 9: A shall be permitted to repay the whole amount of the loan before the term stipulated for redemption, but in so doing A must notify B three months beforehand.

Art. 10: To safeguard the payment of interest and the repayment of the principal A shall submit the following collateral to B as security of the loan: (1) The loan bonds of the Lung-Hai Railway to the face value of $1,300,000. (2) Treasury bonds issued by the Chinese Government to the face value of $4,000,000. (3) Loan bonds issued by the Chinese Government to the Bank of Communications to the face value of $2,425,687.68.

Art. 11: In handing over the securities as mentioned above, A shall issue a certificate to B transferring the same to B as security. The same shall be handed over to B in Peking.

On receipt of the collateral mentioned above as security for the loan, B should issue a receipt for the same to A.

Art. 12: In the event of failure of the redemption of the principal or the payment of interest by A when the time becomes due, B shall have power to dispose at will of the securities mentioned in Article 10 for the redemption of the loan and the payment of interest.

Art. 13: In case during the currency of the present agreement A needs another loan, necessitating it to negotiate for the same from foreign bankers, it should first negotiate with B for the same on reasonable terms.

Art. 14: This agreement shall be submitted to the Chinese Government for official registration by A.

This agreement shall be made out in two copies in the Chinese and Japanese language each duly signed and sealed by the parties concerned. A and B shall each have a copy of the agreement in both languages.

Signed this the 20th day of the 1st month of the 6th year of the Republic of China; that is, the 20th day of the 1st month of the 6th year of Taisho [i. e., January 20, 1917].

Your telegram of February 15, 7 p. m. The Chinese Legation states that according to contract bankers still have few days before expiration of time within which they must say whether they will exercise option. The Minister has had several conferences with bankers endeavoring to expedite negotiations but bankers insist on four months extension of option and state impossible now to make advance.

The Department some time ago was informed by bankers that Japanese activities through American press criticising the five million loan would make difficult to float proposed larger loan. Today representative of bankers presented telegram from bank saying difficulty was not merely [apparent omission] but need of making exhaustive investigation before assuming obligation for so large a sum; that bank is thoroughly in earnest and means to do real business but existing circumstances require extension of time to enable bank to carry out successfully any undertaking it might assume. Telegram states that a director of the bank is now either in China or en route and although without official authority will make investigation which will be followed by more thorough investigation if extension of option granted. In that case one of the executive officers of the bank will likely be sent to China. You may urge extension of option and telegraph result.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Peking, February 26, 1917, 11 p.m.

Your February 21, 5 p. m. Financial situation of China, considering all circumstances, is good, but a moderate amount of support is essential in order to avoid control of China by Japan. Reports of Chinese troubles and insecurity spread in the United States through Japanese agencies are entirely unwarranted in fact. The Japanese are themselves now offering to the Chinese Government funds at favorable rates. Efforts as reported in my telegram of January 15, 6 p. m., are continuing unabated with the evident design of securing American money after Japanese political purposes have been accomplished.

With regard to Chicago loan, Minister of Finance, though unwilling to extend exclusive option, however is ready to continue negotiations for a reasonable time so as to allow representatives of the bank to inform themselves. It is most desirable that the bank send authorized representative immediately. He is willing to give assurance that the revenues pledged will be clearly separated from those affected by French loan and systematically organized and that power [enterprises?] created by industrial investments out of the proceeds of the loan be added to security. I feel assured that the security will be made indubitable. The Chinese Government wants the loan now and is willing to satisfy every reasonable demand of the bank.

Minister of Finance representing the prevailing feeling of the Chinese desires American cooperation and leadership. To preserve Chinese freedom and certain standing moderate American financial support of the Chinese Government is imperative.

Under the circumstances Chicago bank has a great opportunity for important profitable activity. It is to be hoped that it may act promptly but if it requires more time I have the honor to urge very strongly that to save the situation and assure freedom of action for several months a further loan advance be made by the Chicago bank or Lee, Higginson be allowed if possible to complete contracted loan immediately.

The American Group to the Secretary of State

23 WALL STREET,
New York, March 8, 1917.

SIR: In accordance with your suggestion, on the occasion of the visit this morning to you of Mr. Schiff and Mr. Davison, we enclose herewith a copy of the cable from London which was exhibited to you and which was the subject matter of our informal conversation then.

You will remember that the Six Power Group was formed on June 18, 1912, to undertake a so-called Reorganization Loan to China in the aggregate amount of 60,000,000 pounds sterling, and that the group was to terminate when this entire amount had been issued, when a majority of the six groups should decide not to go farther with the business, or when five years should have elapsed, whichever should first happen; the group would therefore expire by limitation of time on June 18 of this present year, if not before terminated.

A £25,000,000 series of the Reorganization Loan was issued by the British, German, French, Russian and Japanese Groups in May of 1913, the American Group not participating for reasons with which you are familiar;¹⁶ the American Group retained and still retain their membership in the Six Power Group however.

As security for this £25,000,000 loan, the Chinese Government pledged the salt gabelle, which the Government obligated itself to reorganize in the manner prescribed in the Loan Agreement; as a matter of fact, we understand that this reorganization has been so effective that the present annual collection of the salt gabelle far exceeds the amount required for the services of this loan, and of all other loans charged against the gabelle.

You will observe that the proposal of the British, French, Russian and Japanese Groups, as contained in the cablegram from London which we have enclosed, is that a supplementary Reorganization Loan in the amount of £10,000,000 to £20,000,000 be undertaken by these four groups in conjunction with the American Group, that a new Inter-Group Agreement be formed by the five groups thus undertaking the new supplementary Reorganization Loan, and that issue be made of the new loan, one-half in Japan and one-half in America; as security, it is proposed to ask for the surplus of the salt gabelle, and, in addition, for the land taxes, which it is proposed shall be administered under the supervision of a Japanese chief inspector. The details, as you will note, have not been more than suggested in the cablegram, but are left to a conference to be arranged if the invitation of the British, French, Russian and Japanese Groups commends itself to the American Group in principle.

Doubtless the proper administration and collection of the land tax would yield a large and regular income to China, additional to and possibly equalling that which has been secured by the reforms in the collection of the salt gabelle which were insisted upon by the lenders at the time the £25,000,000 loan was made by the banking groups of the five Powers; and doubtless this new revenue (together with any increase in the customs which may now be permitted by the interested Powers) would increase the country's borrowing power to an extent which might enable her safely to provide for her financial needs for many years to come. The American Group, however, having in the past expended a great deal of effort and some money in the endeavor to establish a permanent American business interest in China, would not, in view of these past experiences, be interested in the present proposals were it not that they believe them to offer an exceptional opportunity again to promote the legitimate commercial aspirations of our country in the Far East, and that they fear, if this opportunity be not availed of, that it will be more than could be hoped for that such favorable circumstances for the promotion of American commercial prestige in the Orient will again present themselves. We do not believe that a participation by the American Group in the international Group about to be formed is essential to the latter's success, and we believe that if the American Group declines participation the business will proceed, although, perhaps, to a smaller present amount; if this should prove to be the case, and if the available borrowing securities of China should be pledged to a new international Group not including the American Group, we fear that the successful promotion of an American interest in China in the future will be rendered very difficult.

For such reasons, then, and if the Department agrees with us in the opinions which we have stated, the American Group would be willing to signify to the other groups their acquiescence in principle to the suggestion contained in the cablegram now under discussion, hoping that a satisfactory procedure as to detail might be worked out at the conference which would then be called. The American Group would hope that during the course of the negotiations it might be arranged that the securities of the Hukuang Loan (a part of which was issued in the United States by the American Group in June of 1911) would be made more definite by the Chinese Government for the better protection of the American bondholders; also, the American Group would think it proper to propose, since the United States and Japan would be expected to provide the funds in the new supplementary Reorganization Loan, that they should share equally in the administration of the land taxes; and there are various other points of detail which we should hope to work out satisfactorily. Should we join the proposed new International Group it is probable that we shall deem it advisable to reconstitute our Group and invite others to join us.

If for the reasons above stated and with the expressed approval of our Government the American Group should eventually undertake a portion of the new supplementary Reorganization Loan, there would have to be no doubt either then or at any future time of our Government's sympathetic interest in and support of the project.

Morgan, Grenfell & Co., London, to J. P. Morgan & Co., New York

MARCH 2, 1917.

At conference British, French, Russian, Japanese Group held London, January 30, consider proposals for supplementary issue of the Chinese reorganization loan it was agreed embody these proposals in a series of resolutions to be submitted to principals of the French, Russian, Japanese Group for approval. Resolutions having now been confirmed, I have pleasure on behalf of British, French, Russian, Japanese Group convey to you an invitation to the American Group to participate in proposed issue in terms of following minute:

"It was proposed by the representatives of the Japanese Group, seconded by the French representative and unanimously agreed to that Messrs. J. P. Morgan & Company should be asked to reconsider the withdrawal of the American Group from the reorganization loan and to participate in the issue of the supplementary loan and also in the contemplated new Inter-Group agreement or failing that to designate some other American Group to take their place."

Main proposals are that loan should be for £10,000,000 to £20,000,000 to be issued half Japan, and half America and that in addition to surplus salt revenues the land taxes be pledged as security under the supervision of Japanese Chief Inspector. If invitation of the four groups commend itself to the American Group in principle, I would suggest a conference be immediately convened to discuss details.

CHICAGO, ILLINOIS,
March 14, 1917, 6.30 p. m.

In connection with the loan negotiations which this bank has been conducting with the Republic of China through Minister Koo, we have requested an extension of time until June 15 in which to send our representatives to China to make a full investigation and conduct the negotiations. While we understand Minister Koo has requested the extension we have received no advice that his request has been granted. We would be much pleased if you would take the matter up with the American Minister at Peking and endeavor to secure the extension for us.

[Inclosure 1—Memorandum

Minister Reinsch to the Foreign Office

MAY 1, 1917.

There are at present in Peking Mr. John Jay Abbott, Vice President of the Continental Commercial Bank, Chicago, and Mr. H. R. Platt, his attorney. Mr. Abbot represents his bank in the matter of the loan of $5,000,000, concluded between the Chinese Government and his bank in October, 1916.

The presence at this time of the representative of one of the strongest financial institutions in the world, is a fact of great importance, especially when it is considered that that institution, providing that the Chinese Government will do business upon a sound basis, is inclined to give its powerful support in the matter of issuing further loans and giving financial support to the Chinese Government.

The Continental Commercial Bank of Chicago is not seeking business with China. So great a number of most attractive proposals are before it at this time that it is manifesting an interest in China only from the point of view of offering its services in the interest of closer financial relations between China and America. It is, therefore, not to be expected that the representative of the bank will do more than to indicate what the bank is willing to do for China. The rest will depend upon the Chinese Government. It is open to it to take advantage of this unprecedented opportunity of getting extensive independent financial support from America.

I fear that the high officials of the Government are far from realizing the importance of this matter to their country.

It is also a highly unfortunate fact that in the solemn assurances given by the Chinese Government to the bank in the making of the original loan essential misstatements of fact occurred. Unless these misstatements are promptly corrected the most disastrous results will follow for the credit of the Chinese Government abroad.

The bank was solemnly assured that the Tobacco and Wine Sales Revenue, which was pledged for the loan, had not theretofore been pledged as security for any other loan. Unfortunately it turns out that this revenue is not clear from other claims upon it.

1st. The domestic loan of 1916, authorized amount $10,000,000, is specifically secured on this revenue.

2d. Under the language of its contracts the Banque Industrielle de Chine claims, through the French Legation, that it has a right to all taxes and imposts on tobacco and wine of whatever kind present and future. This claim, which on the face of it might seem unreasonable, is unfortunately to some extent borne out by the fact that in some cases, for instance in the province of Chihli, all tobacco and wine taxes have been consolidated under the form of the Public Sales Revenue. This would bear out the French claim, as their security could, of course, not be defeated by swallowing up the security in some other form of the same tax.

For the above reasons it is imperative that in order to save the public credit of China, arrangements should immediately be made for assigning unclouded security to the Chicago Bank until such time, at least, when both defects now attaching to the security actually assigned, can have been definitely and satisfactorily removed.

This latter can be accomplished only by the entire removal of the domestic loan of 1916 from this particular security, which could be done by providing funds for the taking up of that loan.

Secondly, it would be necessary to make an arrangement by which the claims of the French lenders will be distinctly limited and confined in such a way as to leave abundant security for the American loan. All this requires definite data upon the actual income received from these sources of revenue.

Furthermore the rectification of the defects in the present security will probably require some time, and in order that the good credit of the Government of China should be maintained at its present high standard in the United States it would seem to be most desirable, from China's point of view, to forthwith set aside as security for the present loan something which will be satisfactory to the Chicago Bank; and as it might be very easy for hostile interest to make it known in the United States that the security which the Chicago Bank at present has is not what the Government of China represented that it was, and which in turn the bank represented to its customers to be as the Chinese Government had stated, such statement would have a tendency to so demoralize the market for Chinese credit in the United States as might make it impossible for some time to come for the Chinese Government to raise independent loans in the States. The credit and financial independence of China is therefore at stake.

Should the difficulty above set forth be satisfactorily settled, the bank is then willing to support the Chinese Government further in the making of important loans in the United States. This fact is alone sufficient to safeguard the financial independence of China.

I regret to state that should my impression be correct that the Chinese Government does not realize what is at stake and that they propose to delay and procrastinate this matter, the representative of the bank will immediately return to the United States as he has no time to waste. In fact, should the negotiations not be seriously taken up in the course of this week, he will probably depart for Hankow and the South of China in order to join his steamer at Hongkong.

In that case it would be my unpleasant duty to take immediate strong action with the Foreign Office based upon the defects discovered in the security guaranteed to the bank by the Chinese Government in the most formal manner. In that case it will be inevitable for this disagreeable fact to become known to the great damage and, in fact, the destruction of Chinese credit abroad. The present matter involves the question as to whether in important international financial dealings the word of the Chinese Government can be relied on.

This agreement made in triplicate in the City of Peking in the Republic of China on this 14th day of May, 1917, between the Government of the Republic of China (hereinafter called the Government) and the Continental and Commercial Trust and Savings Bank of Chicago, in the State of Illinois in the United States of America (hereinafter called the Trust Bank), Witnesseth:

Whereas under date of the 16th day of November A. D. 1916, the Government and the Trust Bank entered into a certain contract in the City of Washington in the United States wherein and whereby the Trust Bank agreed to and did loan to the Government the sum of 5,000,000 dollars in Gold coin of the United States and the Government agreed to and did secure the repayment of said loan among other things by making the principal and interest of said loan a direct charge upon the entire revenues derived and to be derived by the Government from the Tobacco and Wine Public Sales Tax.

And whereas in and by such agreement the Government represented and guaranteed that the said security was free and clear of any other claims or charges whatsoever and that the said loan should always remain a first, and prior lien thereon and whereas other terms and provisions were contained in said agreement, to the original of which agreement reference is hereby made for the details thereof:

And whereas certain claims have been made by other persons or on behalf of other persons that certain other obligations of the Government are a valid claim or lien on the said taxes or on some part thereof prior to the claim of the Trust Bank on account of said loan.

And whereas it is desired by the Government—without admitting or passing upon the validity of such claims—to give to the Trust Bank for its benefit and for the benefit of all persons who now are or at any time may become the owners or holders of any of the Treasury Notes by which the obligation of the Government to repay said loan is evidenced, additional security which is and shall be entirely free from any conflicting claims of any sort.

Now, Therefore, it is agreed as follows:

Article 1. The Government hereby declares that the Treasury Notes described in the said contract of November 16, 1916, are and shall be secured by a direct charge upon the following revenues of the Government.

The Goods tax receipts from the provinces of Honan, Anhui, Fukien and Shensi, whether such receipts be in the nature of likin taxes, transportation taxes or other taxes or imposts of like natures. And for the purposes of further identifying the said taxes, the Government declares that the receipts from the taxes herein described for the fourth fiscal year are shown on the fiscal records of the Government to have been as follows:

Honan Goods tax.....	$721,483 in Chinese dollars
Anhui Goods tax.....	$1,703,000 " " "
Fukien Goods tax.....	$1,186,400 " " "
Shensi Goods tax between July 1, 1915, and March 31, 1916	$879,500 " " "

And the Government hereby agrees that so long as any part of the said Treasury Notes shall remain unpaid, the said taxes shall remain in force and shall not be diminished, repealed or released without the prior written consent of the Trust Bank, and that the revenues derived therefrom shall be at all times subject to the charge herein imposed and the Government represents and guarantees that the said revenues are not nor is any part of them pledged in any manner whatsoever, and that there is no charge thereon and that the lien thereon created by this agreement shall remain a first prior and continuing lien thereon for the further security of said Treasury Notes.

And the Government further represents that the said taxes are collected by the officials directly commissioned by the Government and are deposited when collected in depositaries selected by the Government and subject only to its order.

Article 2. The Government and the Trust Bank agree that nothing herein contained is intended to be or shall be construed as an admission that any other person has any charge upon or interest in the revenues under the said agreement of November 16, 1916, but it is stated that this supplemental agreement is made in recognition of the existence of the claims referred to but not in recognition of the validity of such claims.

Article 3. The Government and the Trust Bank expressly agree that nothing herein contained shall in any way limit or modify the obligations and undertakings of the Government contained in the said agreement of November 16, 1916, but that the agreements herein contained are in supplement of and in addition to the terms of such contract and the Government and the Trust Bank hereby reaffirm and agree to be bound by the terms of said contract and by the terms of this supplemental agreement and that the same shall be construed as an entire agreement binding so long as any of the said notes shall remain outstanding, provided however that when and as soon as all demands and obligations which may be claimed or appear to be prior or equal liens with said Treasury Notes on any part of the wine or tobacco revenues pledged under said agreement of November 16, 1916 shall have been fully paid and discharged or otherwise fully and legally released as a charge against such revenues, so that the said Treasury Notes shall be an undisputed first and prior charge thereon, then and in such event this supplemental agreement shall immediately be released and discharged.

Three copies of this agreement have been executed in English, of which the Government is to hold two copies, and the Trust Bank to hold one copy, and in the event of any doubt arising in regard to the interpretation hereof the English text shall govern.

In witness whereof the Government of the Republic of China has caused these presents to be signed by its Premier and the Vice Minister of Finance in charge of the Ministry of Finance acting under the express authority of the said Government and sanctioned by the President, and the said Trust Bank has caused these presents to be executed by John Jay Abbott, its Vice President, thereunto duly authorized by the action of its executive committee all as of the day and year first above written.

[Translation]

FRENCH EMBASSY,
Washington, August 4, 1917.

MR. SECRETARY OF STATE: My Government has been informed by the Ambassador of the Republic at Tokyo that the Japanese Government has declared its readiness to admit into the China Consortium a Belgium Group, subject to the following conditions:

1. The Consortium shall be reconstituted with the six Powers. France, England, Russia, Japan, the United States and Belgium will not give their support to any additional admission.

2. Belgium will not be admitted to the pending negotiations and will not take any effected part therein until after the War.

From information that has been filed with the Government of the Republic by the legation of Belgium to France, it appears on the other hand, that Japan has further asked Belgium to agree to the appointment of a Japanese financial adviser at Peking. As your excellency knows, the presence of a Japanese inspector in the land tax office was agreed to at the meeting of the groups held in London on January 30, last.

My Government would be glad to be apprised of the views of the Government of the United States in regard to the proposals laid before us by the Tokyo Cabinet toward which it is, for its part, favorably inclined.

In the first place, it does not consider it desirable to broaden the circle of nations represented in the Consortium: those which might apply for admission are either the enemy nations which we have agreed to exclude or Powers that have no financial interest in China. What is proposed is, not to create a new organism, but to cleanse an organism already existant; so it is legitimate to have this exclusively done by the original allied participants.

In the second place, Belgium cannot be better placed than France or England to take, before the end of the War, an effective part in a loan which should immediately be brought about.

My Government has acquainted the Belgian Government with its views on these two points and would be very glad to hear that they are shared by your excellency's Government.

Be pleased [etc.]

[Telegram]

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Peking, August 6, 1917, midnight.

[A certain Chinese official] yesterday in long conversation expressed the desire of the Government that American bankers should participate in future Consortium loans. He stated that it had become necessary for the Chinese Government to adopt attitude friendly to Japan because that country could cause China the greatest difficulty by stopping financial supplies through control over the salt industry and by stirring up or encouraging revolutionary movements, etc. On account of the unfriendly attitude [or the?] unfavorable situation of the European partners, the Japanese are now controlling Consortium finance. The entry of the United States into the Consortium, he stated, would restore the balance and accomplish more for Chinese actual independence than any other possible action.

On the other hand Japanese Minister also expressed to me the hope that the United States might enter Consortium because European partners temporarily unable to carry their shares. Japanese attitude may be due partly to desire to prevent independent action of the United States, partly owing to realization that Japan may safely join the United States in a formal maintenance of Chinese unity, independence, considering the existing opportunity for infiltration of Japanese influence through special arrangement with all local and central authorities.

Greatly changed circumstances consequent upon the war, carefully considered, appear to impose the conclusion that the participation of the United States in international public finance in China is the best method for preserving the international balance, Chinese national existence and full fruition of American enterprises, educational and economic. If, during the last three years, American financiers had taken a strong interest in China, constructive Republican elements would have been strengthened so as to assure free development. This opportunity has now passed away forever. Only by joining in the councils with other friendly nations will it be possible for the United States effectively to push its influence not only in behalf of efficient popular Government in China, but safeguarding of American interests. The entry of the United States into the war has made natural such cooperation in China through which the high principles of American war action will be advanced.

Cooperation in the Consortium should be free from any conditions which would impede independent action of the United States in the matter of industrial and banking loans or in extending direct Governmental financial aid to China on account of the war.

As a result of the war not only does international cooperation promise to be the mode of settling external questions but American banking interests have been prepared for joint action in foreign matters excluding invidious monopolies for special interests, both through the creation of the Federal Reserve Bank system and through united national action in the matter of the liberty loan. Under the new conditions both from an international and national point of view, cooperation with friendly nations offers the most likely solution of China's difficulties.

As the Minister of Finance informed me that the proceeds of the reorganization loan are to be used for disbanding troops, introducing gold standard, and converting the likin revenue until customs duties can be increased as per Mackay treaty, it would seem that a friendly restraining hand and expert advice will be much needed in Chinese finance unless the nation is to be loaded with a vast unremunerative burden. Also as most of the funds required will ultimately have to come from America, the United States might as well have a voice in the matter.

The British Chargé d'Affaires to the Secretary of State

[Memorandum]

BRITISH EMBASSY,
Washington, August 21, 1917.

The Chinese Government are requesting a loan of £10,000,000/0/0 for the reform of the currency, which is to be carried out by a special department under a foreign controller. The greater part of the loan would be held abroad as a gold reserve against gold notes, which would be issued for gradual circulation, whilst as security there will be the property of the mint and the profits on the coinage, including the melting of the copper cash, as well as, in case of necessity, the excess salt revenue. All the mints would be under the control of the new department under the supervision of foreign managers.

They desire a further loan, the amount of which is not specified, for administrative purposes, as well as to reduce the diminution of revenue caused by the gradual abolition of likin. This loan would be incorporated with the currency loan.

Furthermore, they desire an immediate loan of ten thousand [million ?] yen for administrative purposes.

His Majesty's Government views with considerable alarm these requirements. From a purely Chinese point of view the occasion seems very unpropitious for assuming so great liabilities, for the terms both of issue and of interest would, of necessity, be exceedingly high, and loans to the amount requested would almost certainly be made conditional upon some form of foreign control. They therefore intend to instruct their representative at Peking to point out to the Chinese Government that the Chinese financial situation ought shortly to be far more favourable than for a long time past, for the following reasons:

The Allies of their own free will have postponed the indemnity payments, whilst those same payments to the enemy Powers are suppressed. The Japanese Bank has paid them one million sterling. A large sum is being paid for the enemy ships in Chinese harbours. The customs duties have been raised to the effective rate of five per cent. The rise in silver has brought about a very great economy in the payments of interests on foreign obligations. Finally, a much greater income is being received from the saltpetre [salt?] industry.

Should they, however, persist in their requirements as set forth above, the only member of the Allied Governments which at present is in a position to furnish them with the money they desire is Japan, which would consequently acquire a predominant position in Chinese financial matters. His Majesty's Government suggests that the United States Government should send similar instructions to their representative in Peking.

The Department of State has received no official intimation of an application having been made by China for such loans as are mentioned in the memorandum handed to the Secretary of State by His Britannic Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires on August 21, 1917.

The Department of State shares the opinion expressed by His Britannic Majesty's Government that the time is inopportune for the assumption by China of such heavy financial liabilities as are contemplated in the proposed loans and that the relief likely to be afforded by the proposed suspension of indemnity payments, and the proposed increase in the rate of the import duties as well as by the improved revenue from the salt gabelle seem to make such large loans by China inadvisable under present world conditions.

The American Minister in Peking has been instructed in this sense and authorized so to state to the Chinese Government should they consult him in regard to the matter.

Your August 22, 4 p. m. The statement of British Chargé d'Affaires contains the following misconceptions: Indemnity payments have not been postponed; customs duties have not been raised to 5%.

The Allied representatives are ready to agree to indemnity postponement for five years without interest, with the exception of Russian Minister who has not yet received instructions. 5% effective customs duties in principle agreed upon, but several representatives make incidental counter demands, particularly French Minister who, I am confidentially informed, desires to obtain further special advantages in Yunnan.

The Chinese Government has a surplus of 7,000,000 dollars proceeds of customs duties, but though the other Ministers agree to release two millions Italian Minister refuses until certain irrelevant demands are satisfied. * * *

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,

5399. The Department is today sending to the British Embassy here the following communication:

On the twenty-first of August last His Britannic Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires handed to the Secretary of State a memorandum relating to the requests of the Chinese Government for certain loans for currency reform and administrative purposes aggregating a very large sum.

His Britannic Majesty's Government was stated to view these requirements with considerable alarm inasmuch as the terms of issue and of interest would necessarily be so unfavorable to China as to make such heavy financial obligations at this time seem very inadvisable. The Secretary of State was informed that His Britannic Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Peking would, therefore, be instructed to point out to the Chinese Government that the Chinese financial situation ought shortly to be far more favorable than for a long time past because of prospective suspension of indemnity payments, increase in customs duties and other additions to China's revenues.

The American Government was requested to send similar instructions to the American Minister at Peking. His Britannic Majesty's Government observes further that if the Chinese Government should persist in their requirements the only member of the Allied Governments which was in a position at present to furnish the money was Japan which would consequently acquire a predominant position in Chinese financial matters.

The Department of State replied to the memorandum of His Britannic Majesty's Embassy on August 24 stating that no official intimation had been received by the United States Government of the request for the loans to which the memorandum referred, but that the Department of State shared the opinion of His Britannic Majesty's Government that that time was inopportune for the assumption by China of such heavy financial liabilities as were contemplated and that the American Minister had been instructed in this sense and authorized so to state to the Chinese Government if they should consult him in regard to the matter.

The Department of State is, therefore, very much surprised to receive from the American Legation in Peking this morning a cable message stating that the Chinese Minister of Finance on Monday next will begin negotiations with the representatives of the international Consortium for a loan of approximately 200,000,000 Mexican dollars for the purpose of currency reform exclusively, the loan to be secured by the surplus revenues from the salt gabelle and the maritime customs and the Government's profits from seigniorage and from the smelting of copper cash. The Department of State would be glad to be informed whether His Britannic Majesty's Government has found reason to modify its attitude towards the proposed loan and whether the participation of the British banks will have the support of their Government.

Please confer with the Foreign Office and ascertain its views.

With reference to State Department memo of September 8,¹⁷ the British Embassy has the honour to state that in the Foreign Office telegram, the sense of which was communicated by the Embassy on August 21, Mr. Balfour suggested that in the event of the proposed representations to the Chinese Government proving without result, it would be a matter for consideration of the U. S. Government whether an American Group should not be placed in a position to participate in any advances required by the Chinese Government. This suggestion was communicated verbally and was not embodied in the written memorandum which dealt with the immediate question of granting the advances. It would seem to appear that the U. S. AMERICAN LEGATION, Peking, September 16, 1917, midnight.

Your September 13, 3 p. m. No advance for general purposes is now needed by China or could be made advantageously to its interests and those of the Allies unless so controlled as to assure its application to specific enterprises. What with cessation of German and Austrian indemnities and postponement of Allied indemnities, the Chinese Government will be in a more prosperous condition than for many years, even without the second reorganization loan now under negotiation with the Consortium as reported in my September 7, 5 p. m. Participation in that loan would have a value as affording counterpoise to the dominant influence of course [of Japan?] in the Consortium, which is exerted to curtail fiscal independence of China. Any independent loan could however be financially or politically justified by specific purposes to which it might be devoted. * * *

In considering any advances that may be made to the Chinese Government as at present constituted, it is impossible to ignore dangers of waste and of simple malversation. A fair share of control in such matters rests in the hands of persons who, in spite of the personal integrity of the Prime Minister, are unscrupulous and utterly indifferent to any considerations but their direct profit and the indirect advantage which they may anticipate from subservience to the particular interests of Japanese Consul [Government?]. Other elements of the Government may with equal confidence be expected to utilize every financial advantage to secure the position of the military clique as against the southern radicals. Adequate security and strict control of expenditures are the only safeguards against having our money played as a pawn against ourselves in international politics and against the parliamentary party in domestic politics. Under present conditions an unguarded general loan by us would be merely a means for compelling the northern party to play into the hands of Japan by resorting to her for supplies and for guidance, which in view of the platonic character of Japan's participation in the war would seem scarcely worth the price, and would assuredly arouse the resentment of the south against the association of our country with pecuniary assistance which would enable the northern military party to buy up the support of its more prominent opponents and otherwise to fortify its position. On the other hand, financial assistance for a constructive national purpose would increase the existing good will. In view of these circumstances I beg earnestly to recommend that no funds be freely given to the present Government to dispose of, but that all sums which our Government may be disposed to make available should be, first, charged against definite revenues; second, restricted to definite war purposes and controlled so as to remove them from the possibility of manipulation for the purposes of strengthening the military party against the Republicans and of strengthening Japanese influence as against American and foreign interests. Nor(?), I venture to suggest, should any advances be made for the Government of America without some understanding which would definitely and unequivocally commit the Chinese Government to the [assurance?] that it should make no undertakings or commitments inconsistent with its own political and territorial integrity or with the absolutely equal opportunity of Americans within that territory in economic and commercial enterprises. Also I venture to suggest that it would be salutary and advantageous to all concerned to insist that all obligations incurred by the Chinese Government should be communicated to all the Allies and made public at the request of any one of them within a specified period of say one month after conclusion.

Your September 7, 5 p. m. and September 16, midnight. The loan to China now under consideration by the American Government is intended as a substitute for the Consortium loan now under consideration in Peking. It is felt that of the Powers in the Consortium Group all are very heavy borrowers from the United States, except Japan, and not in a condition to furnish China money. If the Consortium loan should be made, Japan would be the lender and would have the backing of the Allied Group. This is undesirable.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Peking, September 24, 1917, 6 p. m.

Your September 20, 7 p. m. If independent financial assistance can be advanced to China the fundamental needs of the situation will be met. Participation by the Consortium was advocated only as a pis aller.

But in order that our Government may have a clear understanding of the situation I have to report the following facts: As the Chinese Government has delayed arrangement a movement is gaining strength and enlisting progressive Chinese support. Japanese influence over the Government exercised through the Minister of Communications, Minister of Finance, Minister of Interior, is apt to be developed into control. Spongi [Tuan?] is loyal, but so intimidated, stated in the presence of Admiral Knight that the Government did not dare to announce its readiness to send hundred thousand troops to Europe for fear of diplomatic complications. Japanese policy apparently is to discourage Chinese Government giving substantial military assistance in order not to strengthen Chinese army and national life generally. The Chinese are flooded with reports of Russian weakness. Recently they have been frightened by the report that Japan is on the point of changing sides in the war. Allied Legations cannot take any effective initiative because they must discuss everything with Japan.

Therefore there is every reason to exercise care in order that the proposed action may not defeat essential purposes of the United States. If independent American assistance is to be clearly connected with indication [intention?] of inviting China to enter the war and especially with the note of June 7¹⁸ its effect will be liberating in the highest degree. If it is made without such connection, as an isolated act, its effect will be to strengthen combination manipulated by the Japanese through Liang and Tsao to be used in suppressing by force the South and the parliamentary party, thus aiding everything that is vicious and opposed to American ideas.

But if assistance is made conditional upon the restoration of Chinese national unity evidenced by the convocation of Parliament, it would strengthen Chinese national life and set free her energies effectively for use in war. According to the method pursued, this loan will tend either to unify China and prepare her for efficient national action, or furnish the means for corruption and civil strife in an effort of the dominant faction to fasten its power upon the country. If applied with foresight the loan will greatly strengthen the policies for which the United States is contending.

It would be advisable to specify uses of the loan but upon the conditions just mentioned reliable forces in Chinese public life would be so strengthened that the application of the funds to such pressing needs as sending expedition to Europe and restoring national bank credit might be expected.

I earnestly commend to your consideration the suggestions in my telegram of September 16, midnight.

The British Foreign Office telegraphed Alston that while His British Majesty's Government appreciated advantages of currency reform in China, they have not modified their views regarding these loan proposals as explained to Secretary of State in memorandum of August 21. SIR: I have the honor to submit the following memorandum on the financial situation.

On account of the favorable rate of silver the revenues of the Government have increased, as far as application to the foreign loan is concerned; hence the Government is in a fairly favorable financial situation. The greatest need is the restitution of the Government bank notes to their par value; at present the notes of both banks range between seventy and eighty. Two parties in the Government are making attempts to secure foreign loans; both have connections with Japanese interests.

The Minister of Finance, his excellency Liang Chi-chao, is cooperating with the Yokohama Specie Bank which at the present time is taking the lead in the international Consortium. He is pinning his hope to a large loan to be made for the purpose of currency reform. He receives no encouragement from the other party in the Government.

The Communications party (Chiao-tung faction) is represented by his excellency Tsao Ju-lin, the Minister of Communications. He is cooperating with a Japanese group made up of the Industrial Bank of Japan, the Bank of Chosen and the Bank of Formosa. They have now completed negotiations for a loan of twenty million dollars which is to be applied to the rehabilitation of the Government bank notes. The Premier informed me that it was likely that another loan of twenty million dollars would follow.

While the two Chinese parties involved in these financial dealings are under the surface bitterly opposed to each other, the Japanese interests involved are both acting in direct assistance of their Government. The loan of twenty million dollars was originally discussed at the time when Japan was urging the entry of China into the war last March. It was at that time opposed by Parliament. As Parliament is not now in session the parties interested are on the point of consummating the loan, to which otherwise objection might be made.

[Memorandum]

The British Embassy present their compliments to the Department of State and, with reference to the latter's memorandum of September 8, 1917, have the honour to state that they have received a telegram from Mr. Secretary Balfour from which it appears that a memorandum was communicated to the United States Embassy on September 17 explaining the position, as understood by His Majesty's Government, with regard to an application of the Chinese Government for a loan of 20,000,000 pounds for currency reform.

The Embassy are instructed to inform the State Department that it appears from advices received by His Majesty's Government from Tokio that the Japanese Government are supporting the Chinese application on the grounds of the importance of currency reform, and that that Government are themselves ready to advance half the necessary sum. It seems further that the Japanese Minister for Foreign Affairs himself suggested that the United States Government might be willing to reconsider the attitude which they have hitherto adopted in regard to political loans to China, and might advance the other half. The Minister for Foreign Affairs expressed the opinion that a strict control should be exercised over the disbursements and, in this connection, he referred to the fact that the Allied Powers had acquiesced in the appointment of a Japanese adviser to carry out this requirement.

Mr. Secretary Balfour has instructed the British Embassy, in communicating the above for the confidential information of Mr. Secretary Lansing, to convey to him the view of His Majesty's Government that it would now be useless to endeavour to persuade the Chinese Government to abandon this loan project by pointing out to them that the moment is inopportune for the issue of such a loan and that it is unnecessary, having regard to the fact that the Japanese Government agree to the Chinese application. The fact must now be faced that the issue is inevitable. The Allied Powers are, as the Japanese Minister for Foreign Affairs points out, committed to the appointment of a Japanese financial adviser to supervise the issue of the next loan, and a degree of undivided control over the finances of China would be obtained by Japan were they, in addition, to be the sole subscribers to the loan.

In the circumstances and in view of the fact that it is the Japanese themselves who suggest American participation, it appears to His Majesty's Government that the Department of State may wish this participation to materialise and, in that event, the decision would be most welcome to His Majesty's Government.

The cooperation of an American Group, by which a portion of the projected loan could be subscribed, and a residuary participation of a British Group provided for in Article 4 of the Sextuple Group Agreement of 1912, would ensure to the American and British Governments some voice in the elaboration of currency reform and in the control of the scheme.

The British Embassy present their compliments to the Department of State and, with reference to the former's memorandum of October 3, have the honour to state that a further telegram has been received from Mr. Secretary Balfour from which it appears that his Majesty's Government have now been approached officially by the Japanese Ambassador at London on the subject of the proposed Currency Reform Loan to China. His excellency stated that no departure from the principle accepted by the Governments and banks concerned of incorporating the Currency Reform Loan in the second Reorganisation Loan is constituted by the present project, which may be regarded as a partial modification supplementary to the Reorganisation Loan proposed last year. The Japanese Government asked His Majesty's Government to issue the necessary instructions to the British Group with a view to the progress of the negotiations being facilitated by them in cooperation with the other groups concerned.

His Majesty's Government are, therefore, anxious to know whether any decision has been come to by the Government of the United States in regard to the suggested participation of an American Group.

Mr. Secretary Balfour proposes to inform the Japanese Ambassador that the British Group will be communicated with in the sense desired by the Japanese Government.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit for your information copies of the agreement signed August 28, 1917, for an advance of Yen 10,000,000 made by the Yokohama Specie Bank to the Chinese Government.

[Inclosure]

AGREEMENT FOR AN ADVANCE OF YEN 10,000,000

The Government of the Republic of China, being now desirous of making a loan of Yen 10,000,000, as an advance on the Supplementary Reorganization Loan which it has been proposed to negotiate with the Four Power Banking Group, has suggested that this be effected by a Japanese Banking Group. Therefore, the Minister of Finance, representing the Government of the Republic of China (hereinafter referred to as the Chinese Government), and the Yokohama Specie Bank (hereinafter referred to as the Bank), representing the Japanese Government, have drawn up this agreement, the provisions of which are as follows:

Article 1. The Bank guarantees, within ten days from the conclusion of this agreement, to advance Yen 10,000,000, to be handed over to the Chinese Government in accordance with the provisions of Article 4 of this agreement.

The Chinese Government agrees that the Bank, within ten days from the conclusion of this agreement, will issue Chinese Government Treasury Certificates in Japan to the total amount of Yen 10,000,000, the proceeds of this issue to be applied to the service of this advance. The Treasury Certificates will bear the date when issued and will be called the Treasury Certificates of the Government of the Republic of China of the 6th Year of the Republic (that is the 6th Year of Tacheng).

Article 2. The period for the redemption of the Treasury Certificates will be fixed at one year from the date of issue. Ten days before the date of redemption the Chinese Government will hand over to the Bank the actual amount of Yen 10,000,000 to be applied for redemption purposes. The Chinese Government will assemble in Kuei Yin and (or) national currency a sum sufficient to cover the payment in Japan, on due date, of Yen 10,000,000 and will hand the same over to the Bank at Shanghai, the rate of exchange being settled with the Bank on the same date or at any time within six months preceding. If the Chinese Government has Japanese currency on actual deposit in Japan, not for the purpose of redeeming the Treasury Certificates, such deposit can be used ten days before due date to redeem the loan, but the Bank must be so informed two months before due date.

Article 3. The Treasury Certificates will pay interest at the rate of 7% per annum from the date of issue in Japan and will be discounted at 93.

Article 4. The actual proceeds of the issue of the Treasury Certificates, set forth in Article 3, will have deducted therefrom by the Bank 1% banking commission, or $1.00 for each certificate of the face value of $100, and also the expense of printing the Treasury Certificates in Japan, which should amount to about $3,000. The whole of the balance will be deposited on the third day after issue in the Bank at Yokohama to the account of the Chinese Government and subject to the disposition of the Minister of Finance. This deposit will bear interest at the rate of 3% per annum.

The deposit referred to in the previous paragraph will be remitted by the Bank to China each week, the amount remitted to be agreed upon with the Bank, and not to exceed Yen 2,000,000 per week.

Article 5. The proceeds of the Treasury Certificates will be applied only to administrative expenses for the months of July, August and September of this year. The detailed use to which they are put will be embodied in a separate statement which will be communicated to the Bank as a supplement to this agreement.

Article 6. The Treasury Certificates will be secured on the whole amount of the salt receipts of the Chinese Government, except that part which has been fixed as the security of former loans which have not yet been liquidated.

Article 7. The procedure and conditions governing the disposition of the proceeds of the Treasury Certificates by the Minister of Finance will all be in accordance with Article 14 of the Reorganization Loan Agreement of the 2d Year of the Republic of China.¹⁹

Article 8. The Minister of Finance, representing the Chinese Government, on the date of issuing the Treasury Certificates in Japan, as stipulated in Article 1 of this agreement, will temporarily issue one Chinese Government General Treasury Certificate for Yen 10,000,000 and deposit it at the Bank at Peking as a guarantee. This General Treasury Certificate will be returned to the Ministry of Finance for cancellation on the date when the subsequent issue of Treasury Certificates provided for has all been printed. The form, lettering, and denomination of the Treasury Certificates issued in Japan will be settled between the Bank and the Chinese Minister at Tokio, in accordance with the practice of foreign banks issuing Treasury Certificates in Japan.

The Treasury Certificates will have engraved thereon the signatures and seals of the Minister of Finance and the Chinese Minister at Tokio as a guarantee of the consent of the Chinese Government to the issue of the Treasury Certificates and of the security thereof. The Director General of the Bank will also affix his signature and seal to the Certificates as agent.

On the date of the conclusion of this agreement the Chinese Government will telegraph the Chinese Minister at Tokio to act in accordance with the provisions of this article.

Article 9. When the period of the Treasury Certificate is about to fall due, if the Chinese Government wishes to extend the period of this advance, it will notify the Bank two months before due date. The Bank will then agree to undertake a Second Issue of Treasury Certificates for a term of one year and will exchange the old Certificates for new ones. The procedure and conditions governing the issue will be as follows:

(1) The Second Issue of Treasury Certificates will take place three days before the expiration of the (original) Treasury Certificates. The rate of interest and banker's commission will be agreed upon in accordance with market conditions one month before issue.

(2) Ten days before the expiration of the term of the (original) Treasury Certificates the Chinese Government will reckon the difference between Yen 10,000,000 to redeem the (original) Treasury Certificates, and the net proceeds of the Second Issue of Treasury Certificates and will assemble a sum sufficient to make good this amount in Kwei Yin Tails and (or) national currency and hand it in to the Bank at Shanghai to be remitted to Japan, the remittance rate to be settled in consultation with the Bank on the same date.

(3) The Chinese Government agrees that, beginning from the date of the Second Issue of Treasury Certificates, it will deposit at regular intervals a certain amount of the receipts of the salt administration at the Bank at Shanghai as a reserve for the redemption of the said Treasury Certificates, said reserve to pay interest at the rate of 5% per annum. The date for depositing the same and the amount to be deposited at each time will be agreed upon with the Bank one month before the issue of the said Treasury Certificates.

(4) The procedure and conditions other than as stated in the preceding paragraphs will be governed by the provisions of this agreement.

Article 10. The (original) Treasury Certificates will be redeemed, upon the conclusion of the Supplementary Reorganization Loan, with the proceeds of the said loan upon which they will be a first charge.

Article 11. The provisions of this agreement will be communicated by means of a formal note by the Ministry of Foreign Office to the Japanese Minister at Peking.

Article 12. This agreement will be drawn up in Chinese and Japanese, four copies being made of each. The Chinese Government will keep two copies and the Bank two copies of each. In case of disagreement the Japanese text will be the deciding one.

AMERICAN LEGATION.

Peking, October 11, 1917, 1 a. m.

The French and British Group representatives are greatly alarmed at the currency loan prospects. Minister of Finance proposed the loan to the Consortium representatives at a meeting he had invited without indicating his purpose. The Japanese bank as well as the Russian assumed for themselves a completed status in relation to currency loan although their locus standi is not derived directly from the Chinese Government but through agreement with other Consortium banks which alone have option rights with the Chinese Government. The British and French banks have asked for a further extension of the option provided in the currency loan which now expires October 14. French Chargé d'Affaires has informed the Chinese Government that a refusal of this request would be considered unfriendly. Nevertheless it is feared that Minister of Finance will decline the extension and that then his new proposal which was made to the Consortium Powers indiscriminately will have the right of way. Apparently this would put the matter practically in the hands of the Japanese who at present lead Consortium and will enable them to obtain final control over China; should the Consortium however decide not to make the loan Japan could then make it herself. For this reason it seems to the British and French imperative that the option should be extended.

The French banking representative has asked me whether, in view of the fact that currency reform in China has always been considered a leading interest of America, the American Government could not do something to prevent the dangerous consummation indicated. Prime Minister does not favor this loan but cannot at present dispense with [the support?] of Minister of Finance. No satisfactory solution is apparent except for the United States either to join with other Powers in a currency loan made under the leadership to which past action entitles it or without delay to give direction to Chinese policy toward joint war action including necessary financial assistance.

In addition I beg particularly to submit to your consideration the suggestion that the American Government should approach the British and French, and eventually the Chinese Governments, with the view that the result [history?] of currency loan negotiations carried on with the assistance of our Government on the basis of its interest in the treaty obligation of China to provide uniform coinage and embodied in the Agreement of April 15, 1911,²⁰ involved a [recognition of?] general American interests over and above such individual rights as [accrued?] to so called American Group and [could not be?] waived upon its withdrawal from the reorganization loan; that it considers that it retains such an interest in Currency Loan Agreement as would entitle it to be consulted in connection with any loan made for purposes of that agreement; and that it consequently expects that status quo in regard to it will be maintained by a further extension of the option until such time as the Government of the United States, in consultation with the other Governments whose nationals are parties to the agreement, shall have determined the question of its assuming either directly or through some designated financial agency the position considered to have been granted principal [to?] American interests in connection with the project for currency reform.

The Department is basing a claim to participation in any currency loan upon the whole history of the project including the appeal to this Government by China in January, 1903, for assistance in that reform, its conferences with Dr. Jenks in 1903-1904 and its request for a loan for currency reform in 1910.²¹ This request was presented to the United States Government and not to any banking group. TWENTY MILLION YEN LOAN AGREEMENT BETWEEN THE CHINESE BANK OF COMMUNICATIONS AND THE JAPANESE INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT BANK, SEPTEMBER 28, 1917

The Bank of Communications of the Republic of China (hereinafter referred to as A), with the object of reorganizing its affairs, in addition to the loan of Yen

5,000,000, concluded on the 20th day of the 1st month of the 6th year of the Republic of China (the 20th day of the 1st month of the 6th year of Taisho, i. e., January 20, 1917) with the Japanese Industrial Development Bank (hereinafter referred to as B), representing the Japanese Industrial Development Bank, the Bank of Chosen, and the Bank of Taiwan, will make a supplementary loan of Yen 20,000,000, and has agreed upon the following articles:

Article 1. The amount of this loan will be Yen 20,000,000.

Article 2. The repayment of the principal of this loan will take place three years after the date of signing this agreement, or on the 27th day of the 9th month of the 9th year of the Republic of China, that is, on the 27th day of the 9th month of the 9th year of Taisho (September 27, 1920).

Article 3. The rate of interest of this loan will be $7\frac{1}{2}\%$ per annum, that is, on every Yen 100 there will be paid Yen 7.50 interest.

Article 4. The first interest on this loan will be reckoned in accordance with the number of days from the date of the payment of the principal to the 14th day of the 1st month of the 7th year of Taisho (January 14, 1918) and will be paid in advance. Thereafter six months interest will be paid in advance on January 15th and July 15th of each year.

In case A should be in arrears in regard to the interest payments referred to in the preceding paragraph A will pay interest to B on the delayed interest payments at the rate of $7\frac{1}{2}\%$ per annum.

Article 5. Upon receipt of the loan, A will deposit it with B to be drawn upon at any time as needed, the arrangements in regard to the interest on the deposit and the remittance of the loan funds to be separately agreed upon.

Article 6. The loan will be paid at face value and there will be no commission charges.

Article 7. The repayment of the principal and the payment of the interest of this loan will take place at Tokyo.

Article 8. The whole or a part of this loan may be repaid before due date but in such case A must give prior notice three months in advance.

Article 9. A will give the following security for the repayment of the principal and the payment of the interest of this loan:

A Treasury Certificate of the Republic of China of the face value of $25,000,000.

Article 10. A will draw up and hand to B at Peking a power of attorney, empowering B to receive the full amount of the security named in the preceding article at face value. B will draw up and hand to A a certificate setting forth that the security is held in trust.

Article 11. In case A should be in arrears in regard to the repayment of the principal and the payment of interest, B can apply the security named in Article 9 at will to the settlement of the account.

Article 12. In case during the period of this loan A should require another considerable loan from a foreign country, A will consult first with B.

Article 13. The repayment of the principal and the payment of the interest of this loan will be guaranteed by the Government of the Republic of China.

Article 14. After receiving the guarantee mentioned in the preceding article and the security named in Article 9, B will hand to A at Tokyo the full gold face value of this loan less the deduction of the first interest payment.

Two copies of this agreement in Chinese and two in Japanese will be drawn up, signed, and sealed and A and B will each keep one copy of each text. In case of disagreement in regard to the construction of the agreement the Japanese will be the binding text.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Peking, November 2, 1917, 10 p. m.

Your telegram of October 15 [13], 2 p. m. has been communicated to the Chinese Government and the interest shown by the American Government is greatly appreciated by the Chinese as well as the British and French. I am also confidentially informed that the Japanese have indicated to the Minister of Finance that they view with favor the prospect of American participation.

The representatives of Consortium have received recently instructions to proceed with negotiating a second reorganization loan for the purpose of currency reform. They have so informed Minister and have requested him to submit detailed plans of reform: but although joining in this request the Japanese Bank favors making the loan unconditionally and leaving the details of reform to be elaborated by the currency advisers to be provided for by the loan agreement.

It is learned that, since the withdrawal of the American Group from the Consortium in 1913, the remaining parties to Currency Loan agreement of 1911 have pooled their rights therein with those held jointly by the Consortium which negotiations delayed by the reorganization loan, and have obtained the consent of the Chinese Government to the proposal that any loan for the purposes of the currency loan agreement should be included in a further reorganization loan in the negotiation of which the Japanese and Russian banks would participate. This agreement is of fundamental importance as it enables the currency loan to be secured upon the sole available revenue adequate for the purpose, namely, the salt revenue, the option in the hypothecation of which is claimed by the Consortium as a vested right under Article 17 of the Reorganization Loan.

It is understood also that in January last Consortium banks adopted a resolution to invite the American Group to resume its participation or to designate some other American financial organization to succeed to its rights in respect to the reorganization loan.

The way would therefore seem to be open for an arrangement by which either the old or a new group could represent American interests in the pending negotiations for a reorganization loan to be devoted to currency reform. If such an arrangement is feasible it would obviate difficulties inseparable from direct participation by our Government and would be entirely agreeable to the French and British Groups and incapable of objection or obstruction by the other interested parties.

Minister of Finance is determined to make this loan without delay and in view of like haste on the part of the Japanese it is urgent that our Government take action for the purpose of realizing the American interest asserted. The critical situation calls for early appointment of a representative fully qualified to appreciate and to cope with political as well as technical difficulties to be expected in making effective our claim to participation. Pending such appointment I would recommend that some one now here be designated immediately to represent the American interest to the extent of attending meetings of the bankers in order to keep informed of the course of the negotiations now in progress.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Peking, November 10, 1917, 2 p. m.

My telegram November 2, 10 p. m. Minister of Finance by a formal letter to the representatives of the Consortium, received last night, requested an immediate advance of 2,000,000 pounds upon the supplementary reorganization loan, this sum to be used for the redemption of notes of the Bank of China: he stated that [failing ?] to receive the requested advance the Chinese Government would seek the money from other sources. In the negotiations thus far it has appeared that the Japanese bank alone favors making an advance before completing negotiations for conclusion of the new reorganization loan.

It is feared that the present request for immediate advance will result in giving Japanese bankers, perhaps independent of Consortium, the right to make a loan under terms establishing Japanese control of the Bank of China as well as the Bank of Communications.

AMERICAN EMBASSY,

7672. Department's 5399, September 8, 4 p. m., and my 7201, September 19, 5 p. m., relative suggested participation of American Group in proposed loan of 20,000,000 pounds to China for currency reform purposes, Foreign Office now write me as follows:

Chinese Minister of Finance has approached the groups composing the present international Consortium with a request for an immediate advance of 2,000,000 pounds in the projected loan.

The Japanese Groups having expressed the opinion that the Consortium should comply with this request His Majesty's Government, who have always in principle been opposed to such advances, inquired of the Japanese Government whether, having regard to the present position of China's finances, they considered that the advance was necessary or advisable.

The Japanese Government replied to the effect that they earnestly desired to conclude the advance in order to rehabilitate the Bank of China which was a matter of extreme urgency owing to the fall in the value of the notes issued by that institution and the consequent depression in trade and abnormal losses caused to native and foreign merchants. They considered that it would be absolutely impossible to accomplish this unless the advance of 2,000,000 pounds was agreed to. They hoped therefore that His Majesty's Government would reconsider the matter and instruct the British Group to accede to the Chinese Government's application. In these circumstances His Majesty's Government deemed it advisable to meet the wishes of the Japanese Government and the British Group has been informed accordingly so that the necessary instructions may be sent to their representative in Peking to consent to the proposed advance on the second issue of the reorganization loan which is now under negotiation.

Mr. Balfour considers it desirable to bring the foregoing facts to Mr. Page's knowledge in order that the position of His Majesty's Government and that of the British Group in the Consortium in regard to this advance may be perfectly clear to the United States Government in the event of a decision being reached in respect of the participation of an American Group in the new loan.

Your November 2, 10 p. m., and November 10, 2 p. m. The Department has received from London a telegram stating that the Japanese Government was earnestly desirous of having the requested advance of 2,000,000 pounds made in order to rehabilitate the Bank of China, which was considered to be a very urgent matter owing to the depreciation of its notes and depression in trade due thereto and losses to native and foreign merchants. His Britannic Majesty's Government, desiring to meet the wishes of Japan, so informed the British Group which instructed its representatives in Peking to consent to the proposed advance.

For your information and guidance. The Department is arranging a conference with bankers in an endeavor to have an American Group participate in the proposed loan.

MR. SECRETARY OF STATE, In announcing to me that negotiations on the loan for the Chinese currency reform have been entered into at Peking by the Chinese Government and the four representatives of the Consortium, the Minister of Foreign Affairs of the Republic brings to my notice the inclination ascribed to the Japanese Government to carry the transaction to the earliest possible conclusion and consequent advantage there would be in having the United States agree to re-enter the Consortium and designate a financial group to represent its interests in the loan.

A later communication from my Government informs me that the Minister of France at Peking has reason to believe that the Japanese have told the Chinese Government that they would not object to American participation in the currency reform loan. This declaration, in my Government's opinion, would make it but more desirable to designate an American Group in position to join in the contemplated transaction.

I am lastly instructed to impart to your excellency the information that, so far as the appointment of a Japanese financial adviser is concerned, the Government of the Republic has directed its representative in China to withhold his consent if the currency reform is to be dealt with, but to grant it if it be a question of taxes on real estate.

Your telegram of November 14, 5 p. m. The Legation learns French Group likewise offers no objection to the proposed Japanese advance, although it and British are alike unable to participate. It is feared that the Japanese may take advantage of the present disorganization of the Chinese Government to make this advance upon terms henceforward restricting financial independence of China. It may be that, if aware of the possibility of the American participation, the British and French Groups would be disposed to prevent a hasty consummation of such an arrangement by asking that negotiations be postponed until it could be ascertained whether an American Group would resume participation.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Peking, October, 20, 1917.

EXCELLENCY: I have the honor to state that in various recent conversations his excellency the Minister of Finance has discussed with me the project of a loan from foreign sources for the purpose of currency reform, and has requested me to advise my Government of the negotiations now being carried on to that end, in order to ascertain its views as to the participation of American interests in any such loan as might be arranged. Upon referring this matter to my Government, I have now received its instructions to communicate to your excellency its views, in the following sense:

Quite apart from any individual contractual interest accruing to "The American Group" under the Currency Loan Agreement of April 15, 1911, the Government of the United States considers that the whole history of the currency loan project—notably the appeal made to it by the Chinese Government in January, 1904, the conference with Dr. Jenks in 1903 and 1904, and the request for a loan for the purpose of monetary reform which in 1910 the Chinese Government addressed not to any individuals but directly to the American Government—constitutes in behalf of the Government of the United States such an interest in the project as entitles it to be considered in reference to any action which the Chinese Government may contemplate with view to carrying that project into effect. This interest has never been abandoned by the Government of the United States.

Through the extension of the currency loan option from October 14, 1917, to April 14, 1918, an opportunity is now afforded for the American Government to give consideration to the whole matter involved, and I shall in due course acquaint your excellency's Government with the decision arrived at.

Upon receipt of your note this Ministry wrote to the Ministry of Finance and has now received its reply as follows:

The Minister adds that neither the British nor the French Group will be able to participate. The Minister states that it is feared advantage may be taken by the Japanese of existing disorganization of China to make such advance upon terms which might hereafter restrict the financial independence of China. You are instructed to inform the French Foreign Office that the American Government earnestly recommends that the French Group participate in the proposed immediate advance of 2,000,000 pounds.

The United States Government is considering the formation of an American Group to participate in the proposed currency loan to China. Should the French Group decide to participate in the initial advance as suggested the American Group when organized might consider a proposition to carry temporarily the future participation of the French Group in the loan.

Department considers it very important that the French Group should participate in the initial advance of 2,000,000 pounds and you are instructed to urge upon the Government of the French Republic that this be arranged. In reply I have to state that on December 14, 1917, I wrote to the Secretary of the Treasury informing him of the fact that on April 7, 1916, Messrs. Lee, Higginson and Company had entered into a contract to lend the Chinese Government 5,000,000 dollars for a three year term, and that in pursuance of that contract, approximately 1,100,000 dollars had been advanced, of which the sum of $265,000.00 including interest had been repaid. I stated further that under the terms of the contract Messrs. Lee, Higginson and Company had the option of making further advances up to 5,000,000 dollars and that they were now making inquiry as to whether or not the policy of the Government would permit them should they so desire, to execute the contract further by making additional advances to China. The representative of the Japanese Group today informed his colleagues that he has instructions to promise the Chinese Government this advance. It is believed here this advance will not accomplish the purpose and will not be beneficial; the banknotes might better be supported by setting aside monthly amounts from the postponed Boxer indemnities.

SIR: Referring to previous correspondence in which the Legation has reported in regard to an agreement, under date of October 5, 1913, between the Chinese and Japanese Governments, whereby the right to construct certain railways in South Manchuria was conceded to the nationals of the latter, I have the honor to enclose herewith what

I believe to be a reasonably accurate English version of the agreement for the construction of a railway from Ssupinghai to Chengchiatun, concluded on December 27, 1915, between the Chinese Government and the Yokohama Specie Bank.

In this connection, I take occasion to forward for the information of the Department a copy of the note (No. 511) which I addressed to the Acting Minister for Foreign Affairs under date of October 13 last, asking for such information in regard to the Japanese railway concession in South Manchuria as might enable it to satisfy itself that such grants as may have been made to any third party are not such as to impair the rights already vested in American interests by virtue of the Chinchow-Aigun Railway Agreement of October 6, 1909.

My purpose in placing this inquiry before the Foreign Office was not only to reserve existing American rights, but also to direct attention to the apparent infringement of those rights by Japanese interests which at the same time are bringing into question, on the basis of an expectant reversion of German special interests in Shantung, the validity of the American contract of April 19²⁹ last for the improvement of the Grand Canal in that province.

As will have appeared to the Department from my telegrams of December 29, 10 a. m., and January 2, 8 p. m.,³⁰ I consider that the introduction of a Japanese interest into the Canal projects in either Shantung or Kiangsu would be in the highest degree repugnant to the Chinese, and would directly inject into those projects a political character from which they have hitherto been entirely free—the very terms used by the American International Corporation, in its telegrams to its representatives here, holding out the threat that, in spite of its being unwelcome to the Chinese, Japanese interests are prepared to force their way into the projects alone if not in cooperation with the American interests now concerned. If the Japanese financial interests are sincere in the desire to cooperate with Americans in commercial and industrial undertakings in China, on a basis wholly of business and without any implication of special political interests, it would seem that a more fitting field of cooperation would be that of railway construction in South Manchuria, in respect to which our nationals possess actual rights. An opportunity would thus be given to the Japanese to reconcile with ours the rights which they appear to have obtained secretly in disregard of our prior claims, instead of ousting us from those rights in Manchuria and simultaneously claiming the privilege of cooperating with us in our Canal projects as a matter of comity.

In order to convey such an intimation to my Japanese colleague, I am today addressing to him a personal note, of which a copy is enclosed herewith, asking for such information as he may feel disposed to give me as to Japanese railway concessions in South Manchuria, with a view to the possibility of cooperation by American interests—either those already possessing rights by virtue of the Chinchow-Aigun Agreement, or others. The reference, in this note, to comments by a member of the Japanese Legation on the subject of cooperation between Japanese and American interests, is to a recent conversation in which Mr. Debuchi, Secretary of the Japanese Legation, urged upon Mr. White, of this Legation, the desirability of such cooperation, laying especial emphasis on the fact that joint action with nationals of Japan would give American bondholders the security of having at all times available for the protection of their interests in China the military power of Japan.

AGREEMENT FOR THE BUILDING OF THE SSUPINGKAI-CHENGCHIATUN RAILWAY,
DECEMBER 27, 1915

December 27, 1915 (4th year of the Republic, according to the Chinese chronology, and 4th year of Taisho, according to the Japanese chronology), the Chinese Government (hereinafter called the Government), represented by the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Communications, of the one part, and the Yokohama Specie Bank (hereinafter called the Bank), of the other part, have concluded between themselves the present agreement on the basis of the agreement in principle which was arranged between the Chinese and Japanese Governments on October 5, 1913 (2d year of the Republic, according to the Chinese chronology, and 2d year of Taisho, Japanese chronology).

Article 1—The Government authorizes the Bank to issue a 5% Gold Loan in the sum of 5,000,000 Yen. The Loan will bear the date of the day of issue, and will be known as the Chinese Government 5% Loan for the building of the Ssupingkai-Chengchiatun Railway.

Article 2—The present loan is for the building of a railway from Ssupingkai to Chengchiatun. The route between the said points will be determined by the Ministry of Communications after the completion of investigations which will be made by the representatives of the Government and the Bank.

Article 3—The capital obtained from the loan above mentioned is set apart exclusively for the building of the road, including the payment for the expropriation of land, acquiring rolling-stock, and other necessary equipment (or materials), and also expenses for the operation of the road and for the payment of interest on the present loan during the period of construction of the said road.

The work must be started not later than six months after the signing of this agreement, and must be finished if possible within two years of the day of starting the same. Before the end of six months the Bank will place at the disposition of the director general of the road a sum not to exceed 200,000 Yen as an advance upon the loan, which money will be deposited in Japan or remitted to China in accordance with the instructions of the director general. The sum so advanced, together with the interest which will be charged on the account at a rate not over 7% per annum, will be withheld by the Bank from the proceeds of the first bonds issued. The advance will be paid in Shanghai Taels.

Article 4—The interest on the present loan will be calculated at the rate of 5% per annum on the nominal value of the bonds from the day of issue of the loan, and the payment of interest to the bondholders will be made semiannually. During the period of the building of the road, the Government will pay the interest either from the principal of the loan or from other sources, at its discretion, and when the building is finished the interest will be paid first from the revenue of the road and thereafter from other State revenues at the discretion of the Government. Interest, which as above stated will be computed from the day the loan is issued, will be payable 14 days in advance of the expiration of each half-yearly term in accordance with the amortization table annexed to the agreement.

Article 5—The term of the loan shall be forty years. The amortization of the principal shall begin from the 11th year from the day of issuing the loan, and shall be carried out by means of half-yearly instalments, 14 days in advance, in accordance with the amortization table (except in the case anticipated in the 6th Article of the agreement), and will be paid from earnings of the road or from other Government revenues at the discretion of the Government.

Article 6—The Government reserves to itself the right, upon notice to the Bank in writing six months in advance, beginning with the 11th year after the issue of the loan, to pay off, if it desires, before maturity, all or part of the principal which has not been amortized, upon condition that the holders of the bonds are to be paid a premium at the rate of 2½% above the par value of the bonds, of the 20th year after the day of issue of the loan, the Government may increase the amounts of the amortization payments, without paying a premium over and above the par value. Such payments before maturity will be carried out by means of a supplementary drawing of bonds upon the days fixed in the prospectus of the loan for the usual drawings.

Article 7—The Government binds itself to make the payments of the interest and principal of this loan, in accordance with Articles 4 and 5 of this agreement, to the Bank through the director general, according to the attached amortization table, but 14 days in advance. For payments to be made before maturity in accordance with Article 6, the Government likewise engages to make the required payments 14 days in advance. All of the above-mentioned payments are to be made by the Government to the Bank at Shanghai, in Shanghai Taels (or in new Government money, if such has been introduced into circulation) at the current rate of Japanese exchange. The rate of exchange will be arranged by agreement with the Bank either on the day of payment or, as the Government may prefer, on any day not more than six months previous to the day of payment. The Government shall have the right to make such payments in gold if they have such funds in Japan (upon condition, however, that those gold funds shall not have been acquired especially for the purpose of making this payment), and such payment in gold must also be made 14 days in advance. For its services in making the payments upon the present loan the Bank will receive a commission at the rate of $\frac{1}{2}\%$ on all payments effected through it.

Article 8—The Government guarantees the regular payment both of the interest and of the principal. In case the amount of the loan or the revenue from the road shall not be sufficient for the above-mentioned payments, the Government will adopt the necessary measures to ensure these payments from other sources, which payments must also be effected 14 days in advance of the stated term.

Article 9—The present loan is secured upon all movable and immovable property belonging to the railway, or which may belong to it in the future, and also upon the revenues of the road. These properties and revenues are given over to the Bank as security. In case a supplementary loan is concluded according to Clause 1 of Article 15 of this agreement, the said property and revenues of the road will also serve as security for such supplementary loan. Movable and immovable property of the railway cannot be used as security for any other loan whatsoever.

Article 10—The Bank has the right to issue bonds for the full amount of the loan, and the nominal value of the bonds will be determined by the Bank. The form of the bonds will be determined by the Bank in agreement with the Minister of Communications or with the Chinese Minister at Tokyo. The bonds shall be printed in the Chinese and Japanese languages and shall be signed and sealed by the Minister of Communications. Previous to the issue of the bonds they shall also be signed by the Chinese Minister at Tokyo as proof that the issue has been effected with the permission of the Government and under its responsibility. The bonds will also be signed by the representative of the Bank. If bonds are lost, damaged, or stolen, the Bank will immediately notify the Minister of Communications or the Chinese Minister in Japan, who shall authorize it to advertise in the press that payments upon the same will not be made, and also to take the necessary measures in conformity with the laws of the said country. If the lost bonds are not discovered before the date fixed by the Bank, the Minister of Communications or the Chinese Minister at Tokyo will deliver to the Bank duplicate bonds with the proper signatures and seals, and all expenses for printing these bonds will be borne by the Bank.

Article 11—During the whole currency of the loan, the bonds and coupons and also all operations connected with the payment of the principal and interest, will be exempted from Chinese taxation.

Article 12—All details in regard to the publication of the prospectus of the loan and the payment of the principal and interest, not set forth in this agreement, shall be determined by the Bank upon agreement with the Chinese Minister at Tokyo. The Bank is authorized to issue the prospectus within the shortest possible time after the signing of this agreement (observing the reservation in Article 13 of this agreement). The Chinese Minister at Tokyo shall be instructed to sign the prospectus of the loan and also to cooperate with the Bank in all questions touching on the issue of the loan.

Article 13—The Bank shall have the right to issue the entire loan either at one time or in several series, depending upon the cost of the work, and its satisfactory execution, and also upon the condition of the money market. The Government shall receive for the bonds the issue price less a deduction of $5\frac{1}{2}\%$ of their nominal value, which will be retained by the bank as indemnification for the expense of issuing the loan.

Article 14—The proceeds of the loan shall be deposited to the credit of the railway in the Yokohama Branch of the Bank, at the times indicated in the prospectus of the loan for the subscribers to the same.

The Yokohama Branch of the Bank will pay upon the credit balance of these funds interest at the rate of 3% per annum, and on sums transferred to China the local branches will pay the interest that is customary on such accounts. The Bank will retain, at the disposal of the director general, all sums realized from the sale of the bonds, with the interest thereon, deducting, however, the sums necessary for the payment of interest upon this loan and commissions upon such payments during the period of construction of the road. In the case of payments exceeding 200,000 Yen, the director general must advise the Bank 10 days before effecting the payment. The entire loan is to be expended for the building of the railway in proportion to the progress of the work and as need may arise, for which written requisitions must be presented to the Bank, signed by the director general and the chief accountant, with a statement attached, showing in detail the object of the disbursement, and specifying the cost. Every month the appropriations for the building of the railway will be remitted to Shanghai according to the instructions of the director general, and will be placed to the credit of the account of the road in the said branch of the Bank. The director general, in agreement with the Bank, will appoint a Japanese subject as chief accountant. The chief accountant will prepare a list of the necessary Chinese and Japanese clerks for conducting the bookkeeping department, and present the same to the director general; upon his approval of the list, and upon the appointment by him of these persons, they shall be placed at the disposition of the chief accountant, for the performance of their duties under his direction. The chief accountant, under the supervision of the director general and the managing director of the road, shall have charge of all revenues and expenditures of the road during the whole term of this loan, and shall sign conjointly with the managing director of the road all documents relating to the expenditure of such sums. The accounts of the road will be kept in the Chinese and Japanese languages, according to the methods adopted for the other Chinese railways.

The management of the road will periodically publish, in the Chinese and Japanese languages, a statement showing the revenue and expenditure of the railway, for the information of the public.

Article 15—In case the principal obtained from the floating of the present loan, together with accrued interest, is not sufficient, after deduction of the percentage necessary for the payment of the coupons, during the period of construction, for the completion of the road and for meeting the expenses connected with it, the Government must furnish, from Chinese sources, the necessary funds for the uninterrupted continuation of the work, but in case a sufficient amount is not available, the Bank may issue a supplementary loan on the same terms as the loan provided for in this agreement. If upon the completion of the building of the road a surplus remains, such surplus money will be carried as reserve capital, in conformity with Article 18, as security for the regular payment of the principal of the present loan.

Article 16—The building of the road and the management of the road will be entirely in the hands of the Government.

The Government will appoint the director general of the road, whose place of residence must be near the place where the road is being built, and who will be furnished with full power to act in the name of the Government within the limits of this agreement. The director general, upon agreement with the Bank, will appoint as chief engineer, under contract, a Japanese subject. It will be the duty of the chief engineer, under the supervision of the director general and the managing director of the road, to make surveys, prepare plans, drawings, estimates, etc., to direct the technical part of the work, to purchase needed materials, rolling-stock, etc. The chief engineer will submit for the consideration of the director general a list of the necessary Chinese and Japanese technical staff for the construction work, exactly designating their number and their functions. The director general, upon approving this list, will appoint these technicians and place them at the disposition of the chief engineer for the performance of their duties under his direction. Appointments to the minor positions, and also dismissals, will be made by the chief engineer with the consent of the director general and the managing director of the road. As the construction of the separate sections of the road is completed, they will be turned over, by the chief engineer, to the director general, who will open them for operation if this is considered advisable. The traffic manager shall be a Japanese subject, and he shall discharge his duties in compliance with the instructions of the director general and the managing director of the road. The duties of the chief engineer will cease upon the completion of the building of the road. The director general shall then appoint a Japanese engineer whose duty it will be to supervise the engineering department under the orders of the director general and the managing director of the road. The Japanese engineer and traffic manager will be appointed, under contract, by the director general, upon agreement with the Bank.

Article 17—For the purpose of guarding the railway line, there shall be maintained a Chinese guard detachment under the command of Chinese officers. All expenses connected with the maintenance of the detachment shall be paid from the amount destined for the building and maintenance of the road. The numerical strength of the detachment shall be determined by the director general upon agreement with the Bank. If the detachment proves to be insufficient, the management of the road shall request the Government to send as guards a detachment of troops of either the central or provisional Government, and the expense for their maintenance shall be borne by the corresponding authorities.

Article 18—The income of the railway shall be deposited in the Bank on either short or long term deposits, and the Bank shall pay interest at rates arranged by mutual agreement between it and the Government. The expenses of operation and upkeep of the road will be paid from the revenue of the road; the net balance of the revenue will first be applied towards the payment of the principal and interest on the loan, in accordance with the annexed amortization table, and the surplus remaining after the above-mentioned payments shall be held at free disposal of the director general.

After the completion of the building of the line and its opening to traffic, the amounts designated for the payment of principal and interest on the loan shall be handed over to the Bank six months in advance of the dates specified in the amortization table. In case the revenue of the road is insufficient to cover the expenses for the payment of interest on the loan and the liquidation of the principal, these payments shall be secured by the means indicated in Article 8 of the present agreement.

Article 19—During the period of the building of the road, a person designated by the Bank shall act as the agent of the road for the purchase abroad of all necessary building materials, rolling-stock and other articles. The more important of these purchases will be made by the director general by means of tenders. It will be the duty of the agent, who will act as middleman, to furnish the required materials on the terms most advantageous to the road, and as compensation for this service he shall retain for himself 5% of the net cost of materials procured in this way from abroad. All supply contracts shall be made through the chief engineer with the approval of the director general. It shall be the duty of the agent, who will be responsible for the strictest inspection of the materials obtained, to select materials of the best quality; the management of the road has the right to refuse to accept materials if they are not in accordance with the specification previously adopted. Building materials, rolling-stock, and other articles of Japanese origin will be given preference before merchandise of other origin if the Japanese merchandise is of the same quality and the same price; after Japanese materials, preference shall be given to foreign merchandise recommended by the agent. Original bills for purchases of materials, and customs certificates, must be presented to the director general; in case discounts are allowed from the established prices, these amounts must be credited to the account of the railway; the agent is required to present all vouchers, certificates of manufacturers, etc., required by the management of the road.

Aside from the above-mentioned commission, the Bank shall not retain for its own profit any other sums. In case the management invites, for consultation, additional experts and engineers, all expenses in this connection will be charged to the account of the road.

To encourage Chinese industry, materials and merchandise of native origin, if the qualities and prices are the same as similar goods of foreign origin, shall be given the preference; for the purchase of such merchandise, of Chinese origin, the Bank shall not receive a commission. Upon the completion of the building of the road, the person designated by the Bank shall continue as agent of the road, for supplying necessary materials, during the whole period while this agreement is in effect, under conditions which shall be arranged later.

Article 20—If, in the future, the Government deems it advantageous or desirable to extend the railway line or to build a branch, this work can be done with money obtained from Chinese sources; if, however, foreign capital is wanted for that object, the Government is obliged to give the preference to the Bank. The length of these additional lines shall be determined by the Government.

Article 21—The Bank, being the agent of the bondholders, shall deal with the management of the road in all matters concerning the railway, as the representative of the bondholders.

Article 22—Should any events of a political or economic character occur in the country during the period between the signing of the present agreement and the issuing of the prospectus of the loan, which would have an injurious effect on the money market and cause a decline in Chinese securities, and in consequence cause the Bank difficulty in issuing the bonds for the present loan, the Government by mutual agreement with the Bank shall grant to the latter an extension of the time for carrying out the conditions of the agreement. If at the expiration of the designated time the loan has not been issued, the present agreement shall be considered as canceled. The Government in that case will repay to the Bank the advance made according to Article 3 of this agreement, with accrued interest, and the Bank shall be entitled to no other compensation.

Article 23—The Bank is authorized, with the consent of the director general, to transfer the rights which it has obtained by this agreement, either wholly or in part to another Japanese subject, or to entrust them to another person as its attorney: this person shall assume by that act the obligations of the Bank.

Article 24—In order to secure a wide distribution of the bonds, the Bank will be given the right to express the price of the bonds in English, French and American currencies; the bonds will be printed in the Chinese, Japanese, English and French languages; the places of payment of the principal and interest on the loan, to the holders of the bonds, will be London, Paris and New York, and the Bank may issue the bonds either wholly or in part in the three cities named.

Article 25—The present agreement, with its annexes, was ratified by the President of the Republic of China on the ——— of December of the year 1915 (4th year of the Chinese Republic, and the ——— December, 4th year of the Reign of Taisho, in Japanese chronology), regarding which an official communication was made by the Minister for Foreign Affairs to the Japanese Minister at Peking.

Article 26—The present agreement is drawn up in four copies in the Chinese language and four copies in the Japanese language, of which three copies in each language will be delivered to the Government and one copy of each will be kept by the Bank. Should it happen that there be a divergence between the texts of the Chinese and Japanese copies, the Japanese text will be given the preference.

December 27, 4th year of the Republic.

ANNEX I

December 27, 1915 (4th year of the Republic, according to the Chinese chronology), and December 27, 1915 (4th year of the Reign of Taisho, according to the Japanese chronology), the Chinese Government (hereinafter called the Government) and the Yokohama Specie Bank (hereinafter called the Bank) concluded between themselves an agreement for a loan for the purpose of building a railway line from Ssuningkai to Chengchiatun. With the object of accomplishing the earliest possible completion of operations, the parties have concluded also the following supplementary agreement. With regard to points not mentioned in the present annex, the text of the original agreement continues to be in force.

Article 1—Having regard to the fact that, in consequence of the European War, which has affected the money market most seriously, it is acknowledged that it is not feasible to issue the bonds at present, the Government, having it in view to start immediately building the Ssuningkai-Chengchiatun Railway, is borrowing from the Bank 3,400,000 Shanghai Taels.

Article 2—The Bank reserves to itself the right to return to itself the amount advanced, with accrued interest, in accordance with the first part of Article 13 of the agreement, from the amount received from the sale of bonds. The Government and the Bank must decide by mutual agreement the question of the feasibility and advantageousness of issuing the bonds.

Article 3—The present advance is destined exclusively for the expenses of building the Ssuningkai-Chengchiatun Railway, which include payment for the expropriation of land, purchase of rolling-stock, acquiring every kind of material and other articles required, and also the payment of interest while building, and for operating the road.

Article 4—The payment of the interest on this advance will be effected 14 days in advance of the due date, from the amount of the advance, during the period of construction of the road, and, upon completion of the construction, first of all from the revenues of the road and then, in case they should be insufficient, from other Government revenues.

Article 5—The Government guarantees punctuality in the payment of the principal and interest of the present advance: if this advance and also the revenues of the roads shall not be sufficient for the payment of interest and for the liquidation of the principal, the Government will make the necessary payments from other sources.

Article 6—Previous to the issue of the bonds of the Ssupingkai-Chengchiatun Railway, the revenues of the railway, and also all property of the road, movable and immovable, already in existence or which may belong to it in the future, shall be considered as given to the Bank as security for this advance.

Article 7—The amount of the present loan shall be paid into the Shanghai Branch of the Bank for account of the Ssupingkai-Chengchiatun Railway, and the Bank will pay the usual interest on this account. If the director general wishes to debit this account, at any one time, in a sum exceeding 200,000 Taels, he must inform the Bank 10 days in advance.

Article 8—The present advance will be expended in proportion to the requirements for the surveys and for the work of building the road, and the money will be paid by the Bank upon the presentation to it of a written order, signed by the director general and the chief accountant, supplemented by documents exactly designating the kind and cost of the work which is being undertaken.

ANNEX II—LOAN LETTER

1—The Chinese Government, in the person of the Minister of Communications, has borrowed from the Yokohama Specie Bank the sum of 3,400,000 Shanghai Taels. This money will be paid by the Bank either all at one time or by instalments, on separate receipts.

2—Interest, which will be computed at the rate of 7% per annum, will be paid by the Government semi-annually, counting from the day the loan is concluded.

3—The other terms of the loan are stated in the annex to the agreement concluded between the Chinese Government and the Yokohama Specie Bank, for the building of the Ssupingkai-Chengchiatun Railway, on December 27, 4th year of the Chinese Republic, corresponding to December 27, 4th year of the Reign of Taisho.

No. 511

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Peking, October 13, 1916.

EXCELLENCY: I have the honor to recall to your excellency that on October 6, 1909, there was signed a preliminary agreement between the Viceroy of Manchuria and the Governor of Fengtien, on behalf of the Manchurian Administration, and the American Group, for the construction of a railroad from Chinchow to Aigun, through Tsitsihar; that this agreement was ratified on January 20, 1910, by an edict of the Imperial Government of China: and that subsequently, in April, 1910, under the authority of the Chinese Government, the Viceroy of Manchuria and the Governor of Fengtien concluded with the American Group the final agreement for the financing of the project contemplated by the preliminary agreement. Although, for reasons which it is not necessary to recapitulate at this time, the ratification of this final agreement has been postponed, yet the rights accruing to the American Group under these arrangements have never been relinquished, but, as has from time to time been made known to the Chinese Government in behalf of the American interests concerned, have been expressly reserved and continued.

In view of the rights thus accruing and reserved in favor of American interests, this Legation has noted with some solicitude the rumors current for some time to the effect that the Chinese Government has granted to certain Japanese interests the privilege of constructing certain railway lines in Manchuria which, if not actually in conflict with the prior grant to American interests, would at any rate prove such as to impair the value of the rights conferred upon the American Group in connection with the Chinchow-Aigun Railway. While feeling confident that the Chinese Government cannot have intended to act in this matter in derogation from its obligation to the American interests concerned, the legation, nevertheless, feels it its duty to satisfy itself that such grants as may have been made to any third party are not such as to impair the rights of the American interests hitherto established. I have therefore to request that your excellency may be so good as to advise me as to the truth of the reports of railway concessions to Japanese interests in South Manchuria; and, in a proper case, to furnish me such data in regard thereto as may make possible the decision whether these concessions are wholly compatible with the existing rights of American citizens.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Peking, January 3, 1917.

MY DEAR COLLEAGUE: I have the honor to seek an informal and personal expression of your views in a matter which is of much interest to me. There has, as you know, been much discussion in both Japan and the United States as to the possibility of cooperation between the financial interests of our several countries in undertakings of a purely industrial and commercial character in China; we have sometimes touched upon this in talking together, and I have learned with great interest from Mr. White of a conversation with him in which the Secretary of your Legation stated his hearty personal advocacy of such cooperation.

If I am rightly informed, the contract concluded by the Yokohama Specie Bank, about a year ago, for the construction of the Ssuningkai-Chengchiatun Railway, contained a provision for the flotation of bonds of the contemplated loan in New York, as well as in London and Paris. And I have conceived that in that fact there may be a concrete indication of a desire, on the part of Japanese financial interests, to seek the cooperation of American finance, either of the Group which already possesses certain rights in regard to the construction of a line from Chinchow, via Tsitsihar, to Aigun, under the Preliminary Contract of October 6, 1909, or of some other American bank or syndicate which might be found ready to participate in industrial undertakings in Manchuria.

My inquiry is of necessity rather vague, and of course wholly informal, as I am only very imperfectly informed as to the scope and character of the concessions for the construction of railways in South Manchuria, which are generally understood to have been granted to Japan during the past three years or so; and I have, moreover, no information as to any definite and concrete proposals having been made by either side with a view to realizing cooperation between American and Japanese financial interests along the lines indicated. I should, however, be glad of an opportunity to discuss this matter with you and to learn your views as to the eventual possibilities of such action; and I should be most grateful for any information you might feel disposed to give me, as to the agreements regarding the construction of railways in Manchuria by nationals of Japan, to facilitate a consideration of those possibilities.

In reply to informal suggestion reported to the Department in my telegram of January 12, 6 p. m., I have now received from Japanese Minister what he designates a confidential reply of personal character stating that he favors the general principle of cooperation between Japanese and American capitalists but adding that

As regards the practical side of the question in applying the said principle of cooperation to railway enterprises in South Manchuria and Eastern Inner Mongolia it is more desirable that I shall be allowed to reply at a later date upon further consideration on account of the special position enjoyed by us in the said regions.

In this connection he stated that "The Japanese Government secured from China in May 1915, a general preferential right concerning railway investments," in the regions specified.

He further asks information as to recent American railway contract with particular reference to the possibility of Japanese cooperation therein.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, January 23, 1917, 7 p. m.

On January 22 Japanese Minister at Peking, replying confidentially to informal suggestion of Minister Reinsch that Japanese and American interests cooperate in railway construction work in Manchuria, stated that he favored the general principle of cooperation, but that on account of Japan's special position in Manchuria with regard to railway investments as provided in Japanese-Chinese Treaty of May, 1915, he would defer until later further consideration of proposal. He inquired however as to possibility of cooperating in recent American contract for railways in China.

In reply to inquiry by Japanese Ambassador concerning cooperation between Americans and Japanese in China I stated that American Government had no political ambitions in Far East and therefore no objection to such cooperation provided parties interested so desired but that we could not approve coercion in China.

Ambassador asked if Minister Reinsch's suggestion of cooperation in Manchurian railways was in obedience to Departmental instruction and was told it was not; that Department would be glad to see such cooperation. It recognized that Japan had special interests in Manchuria but held situation in Shantung was different. He referred to German claim of special rights there. I said that we had not recognized them. He asked concerning American participation in loan by consortium. I replied I could not approve a contract that involved interference with sovereignty of China. His attitude was friendly.³²

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Peking, January 30, 1917.

SIR: I have the honor to enclose a copy of the answer, under date of the 20th instant, of the Japanese Minister to my note of January 3, a copy of which was transmitted to the Department with my No. 1331 of the 3d instant, as well as a copy of my reply of January 29. It seemed to me of the greatest importance at this time to make the Japanese Minister understand two points:

First, that while we have no intention of pursuing an obstructionist policy towards Japan, the so-called "special position" of Japan in Manchuria has not yet been recognized beyond the specific grants and concessions, the sum total of which makes up what may be called the legal position of Japan in that region; and

Second, that if cooperation is to be talked of between the United States and Japan, it may perhaps be more suitable for the Japanese to offer cooperation in enterprises which they control than to ask for a part in the one or two American enterprises; at any rate, when the latter form of participation is asked, it is important to know what is thought of the former.

It follows from the above that any rights or privileges which Japan may claim in Manchuria cannot be deduced from an abstract conception of a "special position" there, but must be shown as flowing from particular grants or concessions; and that the latter cannot be admitted to have superseded prior rights or concessions held by others which have not been voluntarily given up.

I believe that if this position is adhered to, it may be possible to obtain from Japan, if it is desired, a large measure of participation in Manchurian development and the engagement to refrain from seeking special rights and privileges in China proper in return for a more specific recognition on our part of the "special position" which Japan is trying to establish for herself in Manchuria. To recognize the existence of such a "special position" without getting some such assurances as are mentioned above, would be to make to Japan a gratuitous concession—a gift—instead of giving the transaction a form under which the recognition and tolerance of the position aimed at by Japan would be made to yield desirable results, both for the protection of American trade and of Chinese independence.

JAPANESE LEGATION,
Peking, January 20, 1917.

MY DEAR COLLEAGUE: I have read with great interest your letter of the 3d instant on the subject of the possibility of cooperation between the financial interests of our two countries in railway undertakings in China and now have the honour to address to you the following by way of a reply of personal character.

It is true that there is in the Ssuningkai-Chengchiatun Railway Loan Agreement concluded by the Yokohama Specie Bank in December 1915, a provision authorizing the said bank to float the whole or a part of the loan in London, Paris or New York. With regard to this loan I have ascertained that the total sum was only five million yen and the bonds covering it were already issued in home market in May last.

The above mentioned loan agreement has its origin in an engagement made by the Chinese Government in October 1913, in favour of the Imperial Government, which provides that the Chinese Government will construct the railway lines: (1) Ssuningkai-Chengchiatun-Taonanfu, (2) Taonanfu-Changchun, (3) Kaiyuan-Hailung with the fund to be supplied by Japanese capitalists, and that, when the Chinese Government will in future construct the railway lines: (1) Taonanfu-Jehol, (2) Hailung-Kirin with foreign capital, it should first negotiate with Japanese capitalists for funds required.

Besides the last mentioned engagement, the Japanese Government secured from China in May 1915, a general preferential right concerning railway investments in South Manchuria and Eastern Inner Mongolia.

Further I may add that, for all the lines other than that between Ssuningkai and Chengchiatun which has a very short length of some fifty miles only, no loan agreement has ever been concluded or is being negotiated by Japanese capitalists.

I believe the above informations are exactly what you want to know and hope that they will serve your purpose.

With regard to the general principle of cooperation between Japanese and American capitalists with the object of developing natural resources in China, I may assure you most positively that I share the sentiment so spontaneously expressed in your letter. But as regards the practical side of the question in applying the said principle of cooperation to railway enterprises in South Manchuria and Eastern Inner Mongolia, it is more desirable that I shall be allowed to reply at a later date upon further consideration on account of the special position enjoyed by us in the said regions.

In the meantime, I should be very much obliged if you would be good enough to furnish me with sufficient information regarding the scope and character of the railway agreement recently concluded by the American International Corporation with the Chinese Government together with an explanation as to whether there is any possibility of cooperation for Japanese capitalists in the undertaking provided therein.

*Minister Reinsch to the Japanese Minister*AMERICAN LEGATION,
Peking, January 29, 1917.

MY DEAR COLLEAGUE: I beg to acknowledge and to thank you for the very interesting letter of the 20th instant, in which you so frankly set forth your personal views in reply to my informal inquiries as to the possibilities of cooperation between American and Japanese capital in the development of railways in Manchuria.

I have noted with interest the fact "that, for all the lines other than between Ssuningkai and Chengchiatun which has a very short length of some fifty miles only, no loan agreement has ever been concluded or is being negotiated by Japanese capitalists".

I also note that with respect to the remaining alignments dealt with in the agreement of October 1913, as well as to other possible railway enterprises in Southern Manchuria, you think it more desirable "to reply at a later date upon further consideration on account of the special position enjoyed by us in the said regions." I confess that your statement would come to me with a sense of surprise were it your intention to imply a doubt as to whether the specific concessions and rights held by your country, of which its legal position in that region is made up, would permit of the participation of American capital in particular enterprises there; and I look forward with much interest to the opportunity to learn your considered views as to the point so raised. I of course take it for granted, and believe that you will agree with me, that any subsequent undertakings entered into by your Government would not be maintained to have impaired any previously existing rights of other nationalities, such as those conferred by the Preliminary Agreement of October 2, 1909, in regard to the Chinchow-Aigun Railway.

In response to your request for sufficient information regarding the railway agreement recently concluded in behalf of American interests, I shall take pleasure in requesting Messrs. Siems-Carey & Company to forward to you a copy of their contract of May 17 last, for such use as you may care to make of it. I imagine that you have in your files a copy of the Preliminary Agreement of October 2, 1909, but if not, I should be happy to furnish you one. As I find that our Legation has no copies of the Agreement of October 1913, to which you make reference in your letter, might I with propriety ask if you would be good enough to let me have a copy?

I shall be greatly pleased, at any time, to continue informal discussion of these matters upon which we are having an exchange of opinions.

With the assurance [etc.]

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Peking, January 31, 1917.

SIR: I have the honor to report that the Minister of Communications has assigned an additional alignment of railway to the Siems-Carey Company, under its contract of May 17, 1916. This alignment is to connect the towns of Chowkiakow, Yencheng, Yuchow and Nanyangfu, in Honan, with Siangyangfu, in Hupeh. Chowkiakow and Siangyangfu are, respectively, the most important commercial centers in eastern Honan and northern Hupeh. Siangyangfu is the most important trade center in the Han River valley.

As, under the terms of its principal contract, the Siems-Carey Company is entitled to branch lines and extensions, the railway from Siangyangfu up the Han River valley is potentially embraced in this alignment: an oral agreement has already been arrived at with the Ministry to the effect that should the British-Chinese Corporation, which holds the Pukow-Sinyang concession, not object to the building of a connecting line between Sinyang and Siangyangfu, the Ministry will immediately authorize the construction of the railway from Siangyangfu up the Han River valley.

The representative of the British-Chinese Corporation has stated that he believed this construction would be welcomed by his Corporation, provided American capitalists would assist in making possible the immediate construction of the Pukow-Sinyang Railway. This is highly desirable from every point of view. The railway is necessary and will be profitable. The undertaking of such a joint enterprise with American and British capital is greatly to be desired.

An engineering expedition is leaving this week for a survey of the Chowkiakow-Siangyangfu Railway. Mr. Carey is in favor of immediate construction.

FEBRUARY 7, 1917.

SIR: A communication has been received from the Ministry of Communications as follows:

"The railway loan contract entered into between this Ministry and the American firm Siems-Carey & Company has been communicated to you.

"It is noted that the length of this road was fixed at 1,100 miles and that the Chu-Chin line was established first and an Office organized to take up the work. But from Chuchou to Chinchou is only seven hundred odd miles, so that four hundred miles of road have still to be built before the terms of the contract are complied with.

"This Ministry has carefully gone over the situation and now proposes to establish a road from Chouchiakou, in Honan, through Nanyang, to Hsiangyang, in Hupeh, comprising approximately two hundred miles, to be called the Chou-Hsiang Railway, to be included in the said loan, and to be taken under the charge of the director of the Chu-Chin office, that progress may be made and the terms of the agreement conformed to.

"It is requested that this information may be transmitted."

I have the honor to request you to take note.
With compliments.

Sir: Supplementing the despatch (No. 1368) of the 30th ultimo in which I forwarded for the information of the Department certain correspondence with the Japanese Minister here, in regard to the status of Japanese railway enterprises in Manchuria and the eventual possibility of American participation therein, I have the honor to enclose herewith a copy of a personal note, dated the 3d instant (although received on the ninth instant), with which the Japanese Chargé d'Affaires enclosed, for my confidential information, a copy of the Chinese text of the note from the Wai Chiao Pu to the Japanese Legation, under date of October 5, 1913, embodying a "General Provisional Railway Loan Agreement" relating to Manchuria. A translation from the Chinese text so communicated is also enclosed herewith.

Of the several railway loans which, by this agreement, the Chinese Government undertook to construct with the assistance of Japanese capital, it is understood that detailed arrangements have thus far been made only in regard to the Ssupingkai-Chengchiatun section—the contract for which, dated December 27, 1915, was transmitted to the Department with my despatch (No. 1331) of January 3 last.

The Pukow-Hsinyang Railway loan agreement of November 14, 1913 [printed below] which is specified in Article II as the type upon which the detailed agreements for these lines are to be modeled, was transmitted to the Department with my despatch (No. 3) of November 18, 1913.

MY DEAR MINISTER, I beg to enclose copy of the note of the Chinese Minister for Foreign Affairs under date of October 5, 1913 as desired by Baron Hayashi on the eve of his departure from Peking in compliance with your request made in the personal letter of the 29th ult. on the subject of cooperation between Japanese and American capital in the development of railways in Manchuria. The note being naturally of confidential character, I hope that your excellency will be good enough to keep it secret.

OCTOBER 5, 1913.

SIR: The question of Chinese railway loans has often been raised by you and discussed many times. A plan has now been decided upon, which is communicated to you herewith.

GENERAL PROVISIONAL RAILWAY LOAN AGREEMENT

1. The Government of the Chinese Republic agrees to make loans from Japanese capitalists for the construction of the following railways:

- a. From Ssupingchieh, via Chengchiatun to Taonanfu.
- b. From Kaiyuan to Hailungcheng.

c. From the Changchun station of the Kirin-Changchun Railway, across the South Manchuria Railway line, to Taonanfu.

The lines referred to above will connect with the South Manchuria Railway and the Peking-Mukden Railway. Arrangements therefor will be drawn up separately.

2. The detailed arrangements in regard to the loans mentioned above will be modeled on the Pukow-Hsinyang Railway Loan Agreement. After this General Agreement has been drawn up the Chinese Government will, as soon as possible, come to agreements with Japanese capitalists.

3. The Chinese Government agrees that if in future railways are to be built from the city of Taonanfu to the city of Chengtefu and from Hailungfu to the city of Kirin, that if it is proposed to borrow foreign capital, negotiations will first be entered into with Japanese capitalists.

PUKOU-SINYANG RAILWAY LOAN AGREEMENT

[Transmitted to the Department November 18, 1913, by the American Minister at Peking]

This Agreement is made at Peking on the [14th] day of [November] 1913 corresponding to the [14th] day of the [11th] month of the 2d year of the Chinese Republic, and the contracting parties are:

The Government of the Republic of China (hereinafter called "The Chinese Government") acting through its Minister of Finance, its Minister of Communications, and the special commissioner appointed to negotiate the present agreement of the one part, and Chinese Central Railways Limited, London, (hereinafter called "The Company") of the other part.

Whereas a preliminary agreement was signed in respect to the Pukou-Sinyang Railway Loan on January 6, 1899, corresponding to the 25th day of the 11th month of the 24th year of Kuang Hsu, it is now agreed that this final agreement shall be substituted for the said preliminary agreement and this final agreement witnesseth as follows:

Article 1. The Chinese Government hereby authorizes the company to issue a five per cent (5%) Gold Loan for an amount of Three Million Pounds (£3,000,000). The loan shall be of the date on which it is issued to the public and shall be called "The Chinese Government five per cent Pukou-Sinyang Railway Loan."

Article 2. The loan is designed to provide capital for the construction of a Government line of railway from a point on the Tientsin-Pukou Railway, Southern Section, to a point at or near Sinyang on the Peking-Hankow Railway, a distance of about three hundred and fifty miles.

The route to be followed between these two points shall be decided upon by the director general of the railway after completion of the final survey.

Article 3. The capital so provided shall be solely devoted to the construction of the railway line including the purchase of the land, rolling stock and other equipment, and to the working of the line and to payment of interest on the loan during the period of construction, which is estimated at 3 years from the actual beginning of the works, the commencement of which is not to be delayed beyond six months from the date of the signature of this agreement, within which period the company shall notify the director general that a sum not exceeding £200,000 has been placed at the disposal of the railway administration, to be held in Europe or remitted to China as it may direct, as a first instalment on account of the proceeds of the loan. This amount of £200,000 or whatever portion thereof is actually advanced, together with interest thereon not exceeding a charge of six per cent (6%) per annum, shall be deducted from the proceeds of the sale of the bonds.

Article 4. The rate of interest for the loan shall be five per cent (5%) per annum on the nominal principal, and shall be paid to the bond-holders half-yearly. The said interest shall be calculated from the date on which the loan is issued to the public and shall be paid by the Chinese Government during the time of construction either from the proceeds of the loan or from other sources, and afterwards in the first place, out of the revenues of the railway, and then from such other revenues as the Chinese Government may think fit to use for the purpose in half-yearly instalments according to the amount specified in the schedule attached to this agreement and fourteen days before due dates, Western Calendar, as calculated half-yearly from the date on which the loan is issued to the public.

Article 5. The term of the loan shall be forty (40) years. Repayment of principal shall commence from the eleventh year from the date of the loan and, except as provided in Article 6 hereinafter, shall be made by yearly amortization to the Hongkong and Shanghai Banking Corporation out of the revenues of the line or such other revenues as the Chinese Government may think fit to use for the purpose according to the amounts specified in the schedule attached to this agreement, but fourteen (14) days before their due dates, Western Calendar, as calculated from the date on which the loan is issued to the public.

Article 6. If at any time after the lapse of ten (10) years from the date of the loan the Chinese Government should desire to reduce the whole outstanding amount of the loan or any part of it not yet due for repayment in accordance with the schedule of repayments hereto attached, it may do so until the twentieth (20) year, by payment of a premium of ($2\frac{1}{2}\%$) two and half per cent on the face value of the bonds, that is to say, by payment of one hundred and two pounds and ten shillings for each £100, bond, and after the 20th year without premium: but in each and every case of such extra redemption, the Chinese Government shall give six months notice in writing to the company and such extra redemption shall be effected by additional drawings of bonds to take place on the date of an ordinary drawing as provided for in the prospectus of the loan.

Article 7. The Hongkong and Shanghai Banking Corporation having been appointed by the company agents for the service of the loan the payments due for amortization and interest, referred to in Articles 4 and 5, shall be made in accordance with the amounts of the schedule attached to this agreement and fourteen days before their due dates. These payments shall be made by the director general to the Hongkong and Shanghai Banking Corporation, in Shanghai, in Shanghai sycee and/or coin of the national currency, as soon as the said currency shall have been effectively established, sufficient to meet such payments in gold in London, exchange for which shall be settled with the bank either on the date of payment or at the option of the railway administration at any date or dates within six months previous to any due date for the repayment of interest and principal. These payments may, however, be made in gold fourteen days before their due date, if the Chinese Government should happen to have gold funds bona fide at their disposal in Europe not remitted from China for the purpose, and desire so to use them.

In reimbursement of expenses connected with the payment of interest and repayment of principal of the loan the Hongkong and Shanghai Banking Corporation will receive a commission of one quarter per cent on the annual loan service.

Article 8. The Chinese Government hereby unconditionally guarantees that the interest and principal of this loan shall duly be paid in full, and should the revenues of the railway and/or the proceeds of the loan not be sufficient to provide for the due and full payment of interest and repayment of principal, the Chinese Government will make arrangements to ensure that the amount of deficiency shall be met from other sources and handed over to the Hongkong and Shanghai Banking Corporation on the date upon which funds are required, to complete full payment of interest and repayment of principal.

Article 9. The loan shall be secured by mortgage of the railway declared to be now entered into in equity by virtue of this agreement, and shall, as soon as possible hereafter be secured by a specific and legal first mortgage in favour of the company upon all lands, materials, rolling stock, buildings, property and premises of every description purchased or to be purchased for the railway, and on the railway itself, as and when constructed, and on the revenues of all descriptions derivable therefrom.

The provisions of this article in respect of the mortgage are to be construed and treated as equivalent in purport and effect to a mortgage customarily executed in England.

Article 10. The company is hereby authorized to issue to the subscribers to the loan, bonds for the total amount of the loan for such amounts as may appear advisable to the company. The form of the bonds shall be settled by the company in consultation with the director general or the Chinese Minister in London. The bonds shall be printed or engraved in Chinese and English: they shall bear the facsimile of the signature of the director general and of his seal of office, in order to dispense with the necessity of signing them all in person. But the Chinese Minister in London shall previous to the issue of any bonds, put his seal upon each bond with a facsimile of his signature, as a proof that the issue and sale of the bonds are duly authorized by, and binding upon, the Chinese Government, and the representative of the company in London shall countersign the bonds as agents for the issue of the loan.

In the event of bonds issued for this loan being lost, stolen or destroyed, the company shall immediately notify the director general and the Chinese Minister in London, who shall authorize the company to insert an advertisement in the public newspapers notifying that payment of the same has been stopped and to take such other steps as may appear advisable or necessary according to the laws and customs of the country concerned, and should such bonds not be recovered after a lapse of time to be fixed by the company, the director general or the Chinese Minister in London shall seal and execute duplicate bonds for a like amount and hand them to the company, by whom all expenses in connection therewith shall be defrayed.

Article 11. All bonds and coupons and payments of interest and repayments of principal in connection with the service of the loan shall be exempt from all Chinese taxes and imposts during the currency of this loan.

Article 12. All details necessary for the prospectus and connected with the payment of interest and repayment of the principal of this loan, not herein explicitly provided for shall be left to the arrangement of the company in consultation with the Chinese Minister in London. The company is hereby authorized to issue through its agents the Hongkong and Shanghai Banking Corporation the prospectus of the loan as soon as possible after the signing of this agreement (subject to the provision stated in Article 13 below) and the Chinese Government will instruct the Chinese Minister in London to cooperate with the company in any matters requiring conjoint action and to sign the prospectus of the loan.

Article 13. The loan shall be issued to the public in one series of bonds to the amount of three million pounds sterling (£3,000,000) as soon as possible after the signature of this agreement, subject always to the engagement of the Chinese Government under Article 17 of the Chinese Government 5 per cent Reorganization Gold Loan of April 26, 1913. The price of the bonds to the Chinese Government shall be the actual price of issue to the public in London less flotation charges of five and a half points ($5\frac{1}{2}$) retainable by the company that is to say a charge of Five Pounds Ten Shillings (£5.10/-) for every £100 bond issued.

Article 14. The proceeds of the loan shall be paid to the credit of a Pukou-Sinyang Railway account with the Hongkong and Shanghai Banking Corporation in London. Payments of loan proceeds into the credit of this account shall be made in instalments and on dates conforming to the conditions allowed to the subscribers to the loan. Interest at the rate of three (3) per cent per annum shall be granted on the credit balance of the portion of this account kept in London and interest on the credit balance of the portion transferred to China will be allowed at the Bank's usual rates for such accounts. After deduction of the funds required for the service of interest and for commission on this service during the time of construction, the Bank will hold the net proceeds with accrued interest to the order of the director general, who, in authorizing the payment of any sums exceeding £20,000 shall give notice to the Hongkong and Shanghai Banking Corporation ten days before the day on which they are required. Requisitions on the loan funds will be drawn in amounts to suit the progress of construction of the railway by orders on the Hongkong and Shanghai Banking Corporation signed by the managing director or his duly authorized representative, and the chief accountant, and accompanied by a certificate stating the nature and cost of the work to be paid for.

Funds to meet monthly estimates of construction expenses shall be transferred to Shanghai as and when required by order of the director general, such transfers being effected through the Hongkong and Shanghai Banking Corporation, and the transferred funds [funds] shall remain on deposit with this Bank until required for railway purposes.

The accounts of the railway will be kept in Chinese and English, in accordance with the accepted modern methods, under the direction of a duly qualified British Chief Accountant to be chosen and appointed by the director general with the previous consent of the company. The terms of his agreement will be fixed by the director general. The chief accountant will draw up a list of the necessary staff for his department for submission to the director general, who shall decide and make the appointments, and the chief accountant shall have sole charge under the authority of the director general and/or the managing director, or his representative, of all disbursements and receipts of railway funds during the currency of this loan, and shall sign, in conjunction with the managing director, all documents appertaining to the disbursement of railway funds [funds]. The railway administration will publish annually upon the close of its financial year a report in the English and Chinese languages showing the working accounts and traffic receipts of the railway, which report shall be procurable by the public on application.

Article 15. If during the time of construction the net proceeds of the present loan with accrued interest, should, after deduction of the sums necessary for the service of interest on the loan, not be sufficient to complete the construction and equipment of the railway line, the amount of deficiency shall be provided, in the first place, from such Chinese funds as may be available, so as to permit of the uninterrupted continuance of the work of construction, any balance then uncovered being supplemented by a further foreign loan for the amount required, to be issued by the company. The interest and other conditions of such supplementary loan to be the same as in the present agreement.

If after the completion of the line there should be a balance at credit of the railway account such unused balance will be transferred to the credit of the interest reserve fund hereinafter mentioned in Article 17 as a provision for payments for which the Chinese Government is responsible under this agreement.

Article 16. The construction and control of the railway shall be vested entirely in the Chinese Government. The Chinese Government will appoint a director general of the railway who will reside in the immediate neighborhood of the line, and have full power to act in the name and on behalf of the Government within the terms of the present agreement. The engineer-in-chief, who will be chosen and appointed by the director general with the previous consent of the company, shall be a duly qualified British engineer and shall take orders from the director general, the managing director or his duly authorized representative. The terms of his agreement will be fixed by the director general. His duties will be to make the survey, draw up the plans of the line and make estimates, to direct the execution of the works and to order under the authority of the director general, the managing director or his duly authorized representative all the materials and equipment necessary for the exploitation of the railway. He will draw up a list of the necessary Chinese and foreign engineering staff for submission to the director general, and the latter shall appoint and send them to the engineer-in-chief who shall then assign works to them. Whenever appointments of technical employees, both Chinese and foreign, are to be made or their functions defined, as well as in the case of their dismissal, the engineer-in-chief shall be empowered to take the necessary action by the director general, the managing director or his representative.

As and when any section of the line is constructed and ready for traffic it will be handed over by the engineer-in-chief to the director general, who will, as far as circumstances permit, open such section to traffic, and will select a duly qualified British traffic manager who will be charged with the operation of the railway under the orders of the director general and/or the managing director or his representative.

When the work of construction is entirely completed the services of the engineer-in-chief will terminate, and the director general will select a duly qualified British engineer for the maintenance of the railway under the orders of the director general and/or the managing director or his representative.

The two officers above referred to shall be appointed by the director general with the previous consent of the company, and the director general shall fix the terms of their agreements.

Article 17. All receipts and earnings of the railway shall be regularly paid into the railway's account with the Hongkong and Shanghai Banking Corporation, interest on such funds being allowed by the Bank at rates to be arranged for current account or fixed deposit as the case may be.

All expenses of working and maintaining the line shall be paid from the receipts and earnings, and any remainder thereof shall be charged with the service of the loan. If, after payment of these expenses, and making due provision for payment of interest on the bonds, and for repayment of principal due in accordance with the amortization schedule hereto attached, there remain surplus funds unappropriated and properly available for other purposes, such funds shall be at the disposal of the Chinese Government to be used in such manner as the director general may decide, provided always that after completion and opening of the line to traffic the amount sufficient for regular payments of interest and repayments of principal shall be deducted from such surplus funds, if any, and shall be deposited with the Hongkong and Shanghai Banking Corporation six months before the date on which such payments fall due.

In the event of there being no surplus funds available as aforesaid from the earnings of the railway the amount required for payments of interest and repayments of principal shall be provided in accordance with the conditions of Article 8 hereinbefore.

Article 18. The company will act as agents of the railway administration during construction for the purchase of all materials, plant and goods required to be imported from abroad. For all important purchases of such materials tenders shall be called for by the director general: in the case of all tenders indents and orders for the importation of goods and materials from abroad, the said agents shall purchase the materials required on the terms most advantageous to the railway, and shall charge the original net cost of the same plus a commission of five per cent. It is understood that no orders for materials shall be executed or any expenditure incurred without the approval of the director general to whom the engineer-in-chief shall apply for sanction.

In return for payment of commission as above stated the company shall be prepared to superintend the purchase of all foreign materials required for the construction and equipment of the railway, which shall be purchased in the open market at the lowest rate obtainable, it being understood that all such materials shall be of good and satisfactory quality, and that the railway administration shall have the right to reject on arrival in China materials which do not come up to specifications. At equal rates and qualities goods of British manufacture shall be given preference over other goods of foreign origin.

Original invoices and inspectors' certificates are to be submitted to the railway administration; all return commissions and rebates of every description shall be credited to the railway: and all purchases made by the agents on behalf of the railway shall be supported by manufacturers' original invoices and inspectors' certificates.

No commission shall be paid to the agents except as above provided: but it is understood that the railway administration shall provide out of railway funds for the remuneration of consulting engineers, whenever their services are engaged.

With a view to the encouragement of Chinese industries preference will be given, at equal prices and qualities, over British or other foreign goods, to Chinese materials and goods manufactured in China. No commission will be paid to the company on purchases of such materials and goods.

It is understood and agreed that after completion of construction of the railway the company will be given the preference for such agency business, during the currency of the loan, for the supply of foreign materials as the railway administration may require, on terms to be hereafter mutually agreed upon.

Article 19. Branch lines or extensions in connection with the railway line mentioned in this agreement that may appear to the Chinese Government profitable or necessary later on shall be built by the Chinese Government with funds at their disposal from Chinese sources, and if foreign capital is required preference will be given to the company. The length of such branch lines or extensions shall be determined by the Chinese Government.

Article 20. The company is hereby appointed trustees for the bondholders, and in any future negotiations respecting this loan or matters arising in connection therewith, which may take place between the railway administration and the company, the latter shall be taken as representing the bondholders and as empowered to act on their behalf.

Article 21. If, after the signature of this agreement and before the publication of the prospectus for the issue of the loan, any political or financial crisis should take place by which the market and the prices of existing Chinese Government stocks are so affected as to render, in the opinion of the company, the successful issue of the loan impossible on the terms herein named, the company shall be granted a reasonable extension of time to be mutually agreed upon for the performance of their contract. If within the time limit then determined the loan shall not have been issued, then this contract shall become null and void, and any advances made by the company under the provisions of Article 3 of this agreement shall be repaid by the Chinese Government with accrued interest, but without any other compensation or remuneration whatsoever.

Article 22. By the preliminary agreement dated January 6, 1899, it was stipulated that the terms and conditions of the present agreement should be subject to the terms and conditions contained in the final agreement for the Shanghai-Nanking Railway.

Article 12 of the said final agreement for the Shanghai-Nanking Railway provides for the participation by the lenders in the net profits of the railway, after certain charges have been met, to the extent of 20%, and net profit certificates were issued to the lenders to the amount of 20% of the nominal capital of the loan.

It is hereby mutually agreed that in consideration of the company waiving its rights under the aforesaid preliminary agreement it shall be granted the right to retain, in commutation of this participation in net profits one hundred and twenty thousand pounds (£120,000) out of the proceeds of the loan in instalments and on dates in proportion to, and based on, the terms of subscription to the loan, as stated in the prospectus. No further payment in respect of commutation of profits will be allowed on any supplementary loans.

Article 23. The company may, subject to all its obligations under this agreement, transfer or delegate all or any of its rights, powers and discretions thereunder to any British company, directors or agents with power of further transfer and subdelegation; such transfer, subtransfer, delegation or subdelegation to be subject to the approval of the director general.

Article 24. This loan is contracted, after having been passed by the National Assembly, under the authority of a Presidential Order dated the [14th] day of [November,] 1913, Western calendar, which has been officially communicated to the Minister of Great Britain, in Peking, by the Waichiaopu.

Article 25. Four sets of this agreement are executed in Chinese and English, three sets to be retained by the Chinese Government and one set by the company.

In the event of any doubt arising regarding the interpretation of the contract the English text shall rule.

Signed at Peking by the contracting parties this [14th] day of the [11th] month of the 2d year of the Chinese Republic, corresponding to the [14th] day of the [11th] month [November,] 1913, Western calendar.

Peking, March 6, 1917.

SIR: I have the honor to request more specific instructions in connection with your telegram of January 27, 5 p. m., more particularly with respect to the statement "the Department recognizes that Japan has special interests in Manchuria."

The Legation has hitherto adhered to the position that while Japan has many specific concessions in southern Manchuria her position in that region is to be understood as made up of the sum of such specific concessions; in other words, that privileges could be claimed, not by virtue of a so-called "special position," but only under some specific grant.

In my reply of January 29, 1917, to the Japanese Minister in connection with railway development in Manchuria, I expressed surprise because of a certain hesitancy on his part in recognizing the appropriateness of American cooperation in Manchuria because of Japan's "special position" there. For my part I avoided the mention of "special position" but used instead "specific concessions and rights held by Japan of which its legal position in that region is made up." In view of the note of the American Government to China and Japan, dated May 11, 1915,³³ I have considered that the American Government had not yet agreed to the limitation of American rights by the special privileges granted to Japan in southern Manchuria and Eastern Inner Mongolia by the exchange of notes of 1915, particularly with respect to preference in the matter of railways and security of taxes in these districts. It has also been my understanding that the rights of residence and business granted to Japanese by the Treaty of May, 1915, respecting southern Manchuria and Eastern Inner Mongolia, would by the "most favored nation" clause, automatically accrue to the benefit of American citizens desirous of availing themselves thereof.

Hitherto it has seemed to me that any explicit recognition of a "special position" of Japan in Manchuria, beyond the sum of specific rights granted, if accorded at all, ought to be conditioned upon such interpretation of Japanese rights as would guarantee freedom of trade in that region and upon adequate assurances as to the exemption of other parts of China from similar claims to a "special position."

It is also my belief that an undisputed claim to a "special position" in southern Manchuria is a matter of the utmost import to Japan, so that the Japanese Government in return for such recognition would undoubtedly be disposed to make concessions by way of assurances as to China proper.

In view of the interpretation given to the statement of the Secretary of State by Japanese journals, as reported to the Department by the Consul General at Mukden in his No. 9 of February 17, 1917, I have the honor to request your instructions as to the following questions:

First: Is the statement of the Secretary of State above mentioned to be understood as recognizing on the part of the American Government the special preferences as to railways and tax security created by the exchange of notes between Japan and China in May, 1915?

Second: Is the Legation warranted in assuming that the "special position" of Japan as thus recognized must be understood as confined to those specific rights and privileges which have been obtained by the Japanese Government from China and from Russia by way of international agreement; thus excluding an interpretation which upon the basis of these rights would claim for Japan a "special position" implying general rights of preference and suzerainty in the regions affected?

In reply to inquiries on the part of American citizens as to whether they could freely engage in business in Manchuria, including such enterprises as copartnership with Chinese in development of mines, the Legation has answered affirmatively. Should it be your desire that such answer be in any way modified, I have the honor to request your instructions thereon.

I have [etc.]

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Peking, April 3, 1917, 6 p. m.

In connection with American railway French Minister has just informed me the Chinese Government, September 26, 1914, gave him assurances to the effect that in future if railway or mining enterprises are to be undertaken in the Province of Kwangsi in which foreign capital is required an offer will first be made to French capitalists.

In view of the fact that the French Government acceded to open door policy; that these assurances were kept secret; that they cover privileges granted without quid pro quo; and that French Legation did not mention this note during conversations October last, I beg to request instructions by telegraph whether am authorized to take stand that such a secret note cannot operate to defeat contractual rights obtained from the Chinese Government in due form.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Peking, April 13, 1917, 8 p. m.

On account of recent local controversies with the Chinese aggravating the intractable temper of the French Minister it seems unwise to take up with him Kwangsi question as proposed in my telegram of April 3, 6 p. m., and approved in your telegram April 7, 5 p. m., lest he should assume an attitude of antagonism which would prejudice any more favorable intentions on the part of the French Government. I have therefore advised him that the questions raised by his claim of priority in respect to railway construction in Kwangsi have been referred to you for consideration and I venture to suggest that the present moment appears peculiarly favorable not only for obtaining a fair arrangement in Kwangsi but also for taking up in Paris and other capitals of the Entente Powers a suggestion that their relations with and in respect to China would be placed upon a more satisfactory basis by a renewal of the adherence to the principle of equality of opportunity and by a specific disavowal of all claims to general rights of priority or of exclusive interest in any region of China as distinguished from specific rights in particular undertakings. It will prove [would seem?] that the present conjuncture of affairs would predispose at any rate the British, French and Russian Governments to give more favorable consideration than heretofore to such a declaration which would constitute a valuable reassurance to both the United States and China.

No. 1451

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Peking, April 14, 1917.

SIR: Referring to my telegram of April 3, 6 p. m., the Department's reply of April 7, 5 p. m., and my further telegram of April 13, 8 p. m., I have the honor to enclose herewith a translation of the letter addressed to me by my French colleague under date of the 30th ultimo, and a copy of my reply of the 14th instant, in regard to the French claim of priority in the matter of railway and mining enterprises in the Province of Kwangsi. I also enclose a translation of the note of September 26, 1914, from the Wai Chiao Pu to the French Legation, referred to in Mr. Conty's letter, of which a copy has been furnished me by the Ministry for Foreign Affairs. There is also added for reference Article V of the Chinese-French Trade Regulation, supplementary article, February 7, 1896. * * *

It appears that in the present conjuncture of political conditions the French Government would be particularly disposed to evidence to both the United States and China its desire to deal fairly with them and to respect scrupulously both the letter and the spirit of its adherence to the principle of equal commercial opportunity. The same would seem to be in equal degree true of Great Britain and of Russia; and it is furthermore the fact that the entry of the United States into belligerent cooperation with the Entente nations has so far assured the preponderance of power in their favor that they can be rid of the apprehension of the defection of Japan, and can deal with Far Eastern questions without bias. * * * I have therefore ventured the suggestion that the present occasion is particularly opportune to seek, in cooperation with those Powers, a formal renewal and precision of the open door principle. Such a solution would be to the interest of all commercial nations and it would do more than anything else to reassure and stabilize the situation in China both at present and in the future.

*The French Minister to Minister Reinsch*FRENCH LEGATION,
Peking, March 30, 1917.

MR. MINISTER AND DEAR COLLEAGUE: At the time of the signature of the contract concluded September 30, 1916, between the Chinese Government of the one part and the American International Corporation and the Siems-Carey Company of the other part, your compatriots, evidencing a friendly delicacy towards my country, were so good as to give assurance that the French privileges concerning the provinces bordering upon Indo-China would be respected. It is therefore my duty to put them on their guard against any obstacle which might arise in that quarter.

Now it appears, from information contained in various newspapers and reviews, that the contract of September, 1916, contemplates the construction of a railway running from Hangchow to Chinchow, passing through the province of Kwangsi.

In contemplating this project, the Chinese Government appears to have forgotten the communication which it addressed to me on September 26, 1914, in concluding a negotiation in regard to certain incidents occurring upon the frontier of Kwangsi.

This communication is to the effect that if there is to be a railway to be constructed in that province, and if it is then necessary to have recourse to foreign capital, the Chinese Government will seek in the first instance to borrow French capital.

I am today recalling this engagement to the Chinese Government, and find myself obliged to notify it of my reserving all rights in regard to this matter.

I feel it my duty to inform you of this situation in order to avert any possible misunderstanding and to spare your compatriots any eventual difficulty.

AMERICAN LEGATION,

MR. MINISTER AND DEAR COLLEAGUE: I have received your note of the 30th ultimo, and wish to thank you for bringing to my attention the matter concerning the Siems and Carey Railway Contract as relating to the Province of Kwangsi. In acknowledging your cordial appreciation of the friendly attitude taken towards the French interests by the American company, I venture to add that it was with the entire approval of this Legation that that company gave assurance of its desire to respect the specific right of French interests and privileges as known and as interpreted in the light of the French Government's consistent adherence to the policy of equality of commercial opportunity in China. Neither the Legation nor (as I understand) the American company in question was hitherto aware, however, that by the note of September 26, 1914, to which you refer, the Chinese Government had offered to French interests such a general right of priority in railway construction, in the Province of Kwangsi, as might be construed to preclude the equality of opportunity for American interests in that regard: and the question thus raised by the document which you have now brought to my attention, importing an element of exclusion or of restriction upon the opportunities of American enterprise in that province, are such as I must refer to my Government for consideration—the result of which I shall of course be happy to discuss with you.

In the meanwhile I have to advise you that, as the Americans concerned are under contractual obligations with the Chinese Government in this matter, they are proceeding at the latter's request to survey this line—which is one of a number of railways from which a selection for the purpose of actual construction is to be made on the basis of commercial feasibility as established by the surveys.

SEPTEMBER 26, 1914.

Since there has been disorder on the border of Yunnan and Kwangsi, which has led to misunderstandings, both sides have appointed deputies to investigate and make arrangements for the pacification of the locality. Several replies have been sent to your excellency, in response to your requests for action to be taken, which we trust have been satisfactory. Now our Government wishes to show in an especial way its friendly intentions. In future if railway or mining enterprises are to be undertaken in the Province of Kwangsi, in which foreign capital is required, an offer will first be made to French capitalists. At such a time the higher officials of Kwangsi will ascertain the facts and carry on negotiations with the French Minister. A report will then be made to the Government, which will make a final decision.

SIR: The Department acknowledges the receipt of your despatch No. 1408 of March 6, 1917, requesting specific instructions in connection with the Department's telegram of January 27, 5 p. m., particularly with respect to the statement therein contained that "the Department recognizes that Japan has special interests in Manchuria."

In my conversation with the Japanese Ambassador I had in mind nothing more than to point out the difference between conditions in Shantung and those in Manchuria, and, in using the phrase "special interests," I had reference only to such specific concessions as the lease of the Kwantung Peninsula and the leases of the South Manchuria and other railways with the right to maintain railway guards, et cetera,

With respect to the notes exchanged in May, 1915, by Japan and China the Department has not altered its position as stated in its telegraphic instruction of May 11, 1915.

The assumption of the Legation, therefore, is correct, that the "special interests" of Japan, in the view of the Department, are to be understood as confined to those specific rights and privileges which were obtained by the Japanese Government from China and from Russia by way of international agreement.

The Department also approves of the Legation's reply to American citizens to the effect that they can fully engage in business in Manchuria.

EXCELLENCY: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note of April 27 [21], 1917, concerning the contract reported to have been made by the Chinese Government with an American group of financiers for the construction of a railway across the Province of Kwangsi.

Your excellency says:

Mon Gouvernement ignore si cette nouvelle est réellement exacte. Il me charge, en tout cas, de signaler à Votre Excellence qu'une telle concession serait contraire à un engagement formel pris vis-à-vis de la France par le Gouvernement chinois à la date du 26 septembre 1914, et d'après lequel nous possédons un droit de préférence pour toute construction de chemin de fer dans cette province qui est limitrophe du Tonkin.³⁴

The Department of State on April 3 last received a cable message from the American Minister at Peking, stating that the French Minister there had informed him that on September 26, 1914, the Chinese Government had given him assurances to the effect that should railway or mining enterprises requiring foreign capital be undertaken in Kwangsi, the offer would be made first to French capitalists.

It appears, however, that the assurances mentioned were kept secret and in view of other assurances repeatedly given by the Republic of France to this Government of adherence to the policy of the open door and of equality of commercial opportunity in China for the citizens of all nations, I instructed the American Minister in Peking that a secret note covering privileges granted without a quid pro quo could not operate to defeat contractual rights obtained from the Chinese Government in due form.

I have the honor, therefore, to request your excellency to bring to the attention of your Government this conviction of the American Government.

I should regret exceedingly to find our Governments at variance on this question of the policy of the open door in China in regard to which hitherto they have been in such hearty accord.

MR. SECRETARY OF STATE: I did not fail to report to my Government the remarks contained in the letter your excellency was pleased to send me on the 1st of this month with respect to the concession by China to the American group of financiers for the construction of a railway across Kwangsi.

In reply to that communication the President of the Council, Minister of Foreign Affairs, wishes me to lay before your excellency the following considerations:

The pledge given to France by the Chinese Government under date of September 26, 1914, never really was in the nature of a secret note. It is but the confirmation of the provisions of Article 5 of the Convention of June 20, 1895, and of the terms of the letter, addressed on March 15, 1897, by the Tsungli Yamen to Mr. Gérard, Minister of France, which can be found in the Yellow Book (China, 1894-1898) under No. 43 on page 33. The pledge reads as follows:

Hereafter, if there be any railroad to be built or mine to be operated in Kwangsi and if recourse must then be had to foreign capital, we are fully disposed to borrow first from French capital.

The high authorities of Kwangsi should, when the time comes, weigh the circumstances and conduct direct negotiations with the French company. They shall file a report in Peking and await such action as the Government may take thereon.

It is proper further to remark that in all international agreements relative to railroad building in China, reservation was always made of the special rights of France to the Kwangsi lines.

The Government of the Republic opines that the above-quoted agreement does not in any way jar with the "open door" policy in which it gladly professes its concurrence with the Government of the United States and to which it can but repeat its previous adhesion. Be pleased [etc.]

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Peking, July 14, 1917, 6 p. m.

Now comes the British Government and instructs British Legation to protest against the American railways in Hupeh and Hunan on the ground that September 9, 1905, Viceroy Chang Chi-tung gave to the British Consul General at Hankow a letter promising that in case foreign capital should be required for railway construction in the above-named provinces the British should be given preference. The letter has not thus far been published. British Chargé d'Affaires has not yet protested but called my attention to his instructions stating that he thought an adjustment of conflicting claims desirable and would hold the protest until we could consider this possibility. I stated that in my opinion such a letter could not defeat bona fide public concession by the Central Government; that our people had been willing to consider cooperation but had found the terms suggested by the British and Chinese Corporation absolutely unacceptable; that I agreed with him that British-American cooperation was desirable and that under present conditions mutual obstruction is contrary to the interests of both of us, also of China. It would seem that at this time a hint to the British Government would be sufficient to cause a change of instructions. Aside from this it is of vital interest to China that the lines already granted the British now held up for three years be built; therefore highly desirable American cooperation should be arranged for these, meanwhile not obstructing such construction of American lines as is possible at present.

REINSCH

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Peking, August 9, 1917, 10 a. m.

My telegram of July 14, 6 p. m. The British protest has been filed. Even should the promise in question, given by a provincial official apparently without the ratification of the Chinese Government, be considered valid, it would give the British only the right to be asked whether they desire to finance the project. As they are unable at present to finance any of the highly important lines already granted to them it would seem highly illiberal to prevent the construction of still other much needed railways. The promise given the British in any event does not invalidate the American contract, but at most affords ground for complaint against China. Please inform whether the British Government can be induced to change its illiberal attitude. The matter is one of vital importance to the continuance of American opportunities in China.

Should the British Government insist upon the enterprise be [being?] offered to it there would be a delay of several months. Will the American Government back the Chinese Government in placing a short limit, say three months, on an offer to a nation that claims territorial preference of [for?] an enterprise which Americans are ready to undertake?

The vital interests of China including the maintenance of national unity and the ability to be of use in this war demand immediate completion of Hankow-Canton Railway. It would be of great benefit if Americans could advance the capital necessary. This would not disturb existing international arrangement.

REINSCH

File No. 893.77/1616

The Secretary of State to the British Ambassador

[Memorandum]

The American Minister at Peking, on July 14, telegraphed to the Department that he had been informed by the British Chargé d'Affaires that his Government had authorized a protest against the construction of American railways in the provinces of Hupeh and Hunan on the ground that, on September 9, 1905, the Viceroy, Chang Chi-tung, gave to the British Consul General at Hankow a letter promising that in case foreign capital should be needed for railway building in these provinces, application would be made first of all to British concerns. On the 9th instant the American Minister informed the Department that the protest had been filed.

It appears that the letter of the Viceroy, Chang Chih-tung, to the British Consul General in 1905 has never been published and therefore can not be held to defeat a bona fide public concession by the Central Government.

The reservation of whole provinces and larger areas in China for railway construction, for mining or for other industrial enterprise by any one Power, appears to the American Government to be decidedly at variance with the policy of the "open door" and equality of commercial opportunity to which the British Government has subscribed.

It is the opinion of the American Government that none but agreements or contracts for specific enterprises can be held to be of force under the policy of the "open door," and that such contracts if not executed within a reasonable period, ought not to operate to prevent the necessary development of the region concerned.

The recognition of the claims of any one Power to a monopoly of railway building or other industrial enterprise in extensive regions of China must result in the recognition of similar claims of other Powers in other regions and thus create a large number of spheres of interest in that country which would make a mockery of the "open door" policy and tend to destroy the territorial integrity and administrative entity of China, to the preservation of which both the American and British Governments are pledged.

The interests of the United States and Great Britain in China are identical in this respect and require that an interpretation of the "open door" policy be agreed upon that will protect bona fide contracts and still preserve equality of commercial opportunity. The attention of His Britannic Majesty's Ambassador is invited to this matter as one of urgent importance. It is hoped that His Britannic Majesty's Government will be disposed to concur in the views herein expressed.

No. 1928

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, August 24, 1917.

EXCELLENCY: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note of May 27, 1917, communicating to me the reply of the Minister of Foreign Affairs of the French Republic to my letter of May 1 last relating to a contract between the Chinese Government and the American International Corporation for the construction of a railway across the Province of Kwangsi.

I note that the Minister of Foreign Affairs states that the pledge given to France by the Chinese Government under date of September 26, 1914, really never was a secret note; that it was but the confirmation of the provisions of Article V of the Convention of June 20, 1895, and of the terms of the letter addressed on March 15, 1897, by the Tsungli Yamen to Mr. Gérard, Minister of France, from which the following quotation was made:

Dans l'avenir, s'il y a des chemins de fer à construire ou des mines à exploiter au Kouangsi, et s'il faut alors recourir à des capitaux étrangers, nous sommes tout disposés à emprunter en premier lieu des capitaux français.

Les hautes autorités du Kouangsi devraient, le moment venu, apprécier les circonstances et négocier directement avec la compagnie française. Elles présenteront un rapport à Pékin et attendront que le Gouvernement y donne suite.³⁵

The Minister of Foreign Affairs adds:

Le Gouvernement de la République estime que l'arrangement précité ne fait aucunement obstacle à la politique de la "porte ouverte en Chine", sur laquelle il se plaît à reconnaître qu'il est cordialement d'accord avec le Gouvernement des Etats-Unis et à laquelle il ne peut que confirmer son adhésion antérieure.³⁶

The American Government is gratified to receive the reassuring statement of the French Government that it concurs with the Government of the United States in the "open door" policy in China and repeats its previous adhesion to that policy.

An examination of the Convention of June 20, 1895, to which the Minister of Foreign Affairs refers, fails to discover in Article V any agreement relating to railways in Kwangsi. The text of Article V, in the possession of the American Government relates only to mines in Kwangsi and reads as follows:

Il est entendu que la Chine, pour l'exploitation de ses mines dans les provinces du Yun-nan, du Kouangsi et du Kouang-tong, pourra s'adresser d'abord à des industriels et ingénieurs français, l'exploitation demeurant, d'ailleurs, soumise aux règles édictées par le Gouvernement impérial en ce qui concerne l'industrie nationale.³⁷

³⁶ Id. last paragraph.

With respect to the letter of March 15, 1897, from which the Government of France quotes the pledge given by China, the copy of the Yellow Book to which reference was made (China 1894-1898) contains, it is true, on page 33 a note numbered 43, but this note relates to the non-alienation of the Island of Hainan and makes no reference to Kwangsi. No doubt a mistake has been made in the citation. Thus far I have been unable to find in the files of the Department of State any copy of the note from which the Minister of Foreign Affairs makes quotation.

The existence of such an agreement, however, does not in the view of the American Government justify the objection made by the French Government to the contract between China and the American International Corporation.

I regret that I cannot share the opinion of the Government of the French Republic that the agreement does not jar with the "open door" policy, to which the Government of France repeatedly declared its adherence some years after the pledge of 1897 was given.

The American Government's understanding of the "open door" policy in its relation to the claims of any nation to exclusive right to build railways, develop mines, or conduct other industrial enterprises in any region of China is clearly set forth in the memorandum sent by the American Government on February 1, 1902,³⁸ to all the Powers interested in China. In that memorandum the following language was used:

An agreement by which China cedes to any corporation or company the exclusive right and privilege of opening mines, establishing railroads, or in any other way industrially developing Manchuria, can but be viewed with the gravest concern by the Government of the United States. It constitutes a monopoly, which is a distinct breach of the stipulations of treaties concluded between China and foreign powers, and thereby seriously affects the rights of American citizens; it restricts their rightful trade and exposes it to being discriminated against, interfered with, or otherwise jeopardized, and strongly tends toward permanently impairing the sovereign rights of China in this part of the Empire, and seriously interferes with her ability to meet her international obligations. Furthermore, such concession on the part of China will undoubtedly be followed by demands from other Powers for similar and equal exclusive advantages in other parts of the Chinese Empire, and the inevitable result must be the complete wreck of the policy of absolute equality of treatment of all nations in regard to trade, navigation and commerce within the confines of the Empire.

On the other hand, the attainment by one Power of such exclusive privileges for a commercial organization of its nationality conflicts with the assurances repeatedly conveyed to this Government by the Imperial Russian Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the Imperial Government's intention to follow the policy of the "open door" in China, as advocated by the Government of the United States and accepted by all the Treaty Powers having commercial interests in that Empire.

The American Government still holds this view and therefore is disposed to believe that adhesion by France to the policy of the "open door" debars that Government from any claim to exclusive privilege in Kwangsi for the construction of railways. For this reason the American Government is unable to acknowledge the force of the objection made by France to the contract for the construction by the American International Corporation of a railway across Kwangsi.

It is a matter of regret that there should be any difference of opinion between the Governments of the two allied Republics as to the meaning of the "open door" pledges, but it is the sincere belief of the American Government that concessions by China to various Powers of exclusive advantages in the respective regions claimed by them as spheres of influence is detrimental to the best interests of all concerned and that the surest method of preserving the territorial integrity and administrative entity of China is by the insistence of all Powers upon equality of opportunity for commerce and industry in all parts of China without exception.

In requesting your excellency to communicate to the Minister of Foreign Affairs this statement of the views of the American Government I have the honor to express the hope that the Governments of the two Republics may come into complete accord in regard to the question at issue.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Peking, August 31, 1917, midnight.

As a result of conversations with Ministry of Communications as well as the British and French representatives, I have the honor to ask your consideration of following:

The completion of the Canton-Hankow Railway is the prime requisite for the maintenance of Chinese national unity, as it will establish quick communication between centers of Canton, Hankow, Peking. Usefulness of China in this war would be greatly enhanced through this railway, which would moreover make readily available supplies from several rich provinces. This railway could be completed in one year if entrusted to competent construction companies.

Totally aside from enormous importance of this enterprise for all time, the effect in mobilizing Chinese national strength and resources for use as reserve in this war would be such as to warrant the American Government for war purposes lending the necessary funds to the Chinese Government directly. Existing contracts need not be disturbed by this arrangement. This possibility has not been mentioned to the Chinese who, however, hope that the American Government will do its utmost to make this indispensable work possible.

From the point of view of America no other act would signally contribute to the national and war efficiency of China and forever redeem American reputation originally compromised in connection with Canton Railway.

If you wish to consider it I shall lay before you a more specific proposal.

The British Ambassador to the Secretary of State

[Memorandum]

[Handed to the Secretary of State by the British Ambassador, September 8, 1917]

As the Department of State were informed in the British Embassy's memorandum of August 30 last,⁴ the Department's memorandum of August 24 in regard to the bearing of the "open door" policy in China on the execution of foreign contracts for the construction of railways was duly forwarded to London for the consideration of His Majesty's Government.

A telegram has now been received from Mr. Secretary Balfour, instructing the British Embassy to inform the State Department that His Majesty's Government have given the most careful consideration to the memorandum in question, and are of opinion that there is much force in the arguments put forward. It is clear that the only hope of maintaining tranquillity, and developing the economic resources of China, lies in the development of internal communications, and that the policy most suited to the requirements both of China herself and of the exporting countries which look upon her as a great potential market, would be the greatest possible extension of those internal communications throughout the country, by contractors of all nationalities.

In the view of His Majesty's Government, it is a cause for regret that a régime whereunder specific areas are earmarked for the enterprise of specific countries has gradually taken the place of a régime of free railway construction. They are of opinion, however, that it would be a mistake not to recognize that such a transition has actually taken place. It is felt that during the last ten years the special position of Japan in Manchuria has been given tacit recognition, as well as the position of Germany in Shantung, the French declaration regarding Hainan and the provinces bordering on Tongking, the Japanese declaration concerning Fukien, the prior rights of Russia north of the Great Wall, etc. It is true that, with the exception of the last, the formal recognition by His Majesty's Government of special rights in the areas in question was neither sought nor given. In practice, however, British applicants for concessions on those areas have in no case been given support. The British Government have, in fact, recognized that the enterprise of their railway contractors is excluded from certain provinces and areas in China and, in view of such exclusion, it would be difficult for them to justify to their own people the throwing open of the only areas in which a privileged position is enjoyed by them to non-British enterprise.

In spite of these circumstances, His Majesty's Government would be loath to adopt what might appear to be a "dog in the manger" policy towards the entry of American capital into Hupeh, were it not for the further consideration that, whereas the economic development of China is the sole object of British and American railways, those constructed by other nationalities have sometimes other than economic objects in view. It is felt that were the British Government to consent to an infringement by an American concession of their rights under the Vice Regal letter of 1905, this would lead to a third Power immediately demanding the grant of a similar privilege. The United States Government will doubtless agree that the construction with political and strategical objects, of a railway in the heart of the Yangtze Valley would conduce neither to the future integrity of China, nor to the advantage of international trade.

While the preceding paragraphs embody the views of His Majesty's Government and the general question of railway construction in China, the British Embassy are instructed to explain the position with special regard to the concessions obtained by the Siems-Carey group.

The fact that the Hankow Viceroy's letter of 1905 has never been published is not disputed. Its existence is, however, a matter of common knowledge. The American Legation at Peking have for long past possessed a copy of it, and this copy was recently shown to His Majesty's Legation for purposes of verification. It must, moreover, be conceded, that other Siems-Carey concessions without exception infringe agreements granting prior rights to other Powers, agreements which have been published and which must be well known to the United States Minister at Peking.

The Department of State may possibly argue that by the recognition of all existing agreements and declarations with regard to railway concessions in China, American enterprise would be debarred from the construction of a number of remunerative lines, which the agreements and declarations in question cover, but which the nationals of the Powers concerned are unable or unwilling to construct. In the case of British concessions which might be regarded as included in this category, the railways involved are trunk lines of great importance, the failure of the British concessionaires to construct them being solely due to the financial burden which Great Britain has been called upon to bear in connection with the European war. It is clear that the lines in question should be constructed at the earliest possible moment in the interests of China and of foreign trade, and, in the event of funds being still available in the United States for such a purpose, His Majesty's Government would be the first to welcome the cooperation of British and American interests in their construction

[Memorandum]

The memorandum of the British Embassy, under date of September 8, 1917, in regard to the "open door" in China and concessions to different Governments in certain districts of China, is now acknowledged.

It is noted by the State Department, with much satisfaction, that His Majesty's Government feels that there is much force in the arguments put forth in the Department's memorandum of August 24, 1917.

With considerable interest is read the statement in the memorandum of the British Embassy that in the view of His Majesty's Government it is a cause for regret that a régime whereunder specific areas are earmarked for the enterprise of specific countries has gradually taken the place of a régime of free railway construction.

The American Government would fully share that regret, did it feel compelled to recognize that such a change had actually taken place. This the Department of State does not admit.

The fact that formal recognition was not given by His Majesty's Government of the special position of Japan in Manchuria, of Germany in Shantung, of the French claims in Hainan and the provinces bordering on Tongking, and of the Japanese declaration concerning Fukien, places His Majesty's Government, as regards China and as regards the "open door" as applied to China, in much the same position as the Government of the United States.

A China free of all claims by other Governments to special geographical areas for investment purposes would lend itself to the legitimate and unselfish financial enterprises of a friendly world. The benefits accruing to China would be manifold. The competition between nations and the intermingling of the general interests of different nationalities would prevent the acquirement by any one Government of such exclusive and proprietary privileges in any one region as to be tantamount to political control of that region. The free opportunity of investment for the citizens or subjects of any nation in all parts of China would invite to invest in any part of China the citizens and subjects of all nations who, it is now claimed, are shut out from very large areas there because those areas are preserved for the exclusive activities of citizens of the Government setting up a claim to exclusive privileges. The more uniform development of China would naturally result because ready capital would not be precluded from utilization in a now reserved district where the citizens of the Government claiming the reservation are at present not able or do not feel disposed to avail themselves of the privileges claimed for them.

The advantages to the nations now claiming spheres of influence would also be many. Among them, the whole of a great and undeveloped country would be thrown open to legitimate commercial activity of their citizens, whereas under a policy of exclusive privileges those activities would be restricted to a defined area. There could be friendly cooperation between the citizens of any Powers for their mutual good, and to the lasting benefit of China—a condition which is now hardly possible except on such polite invitation as is suggested in the memorandum of the British Embassy now under acknowledgment.

The Government of the United States appreciates the friendly spirit His Majesty's Government manifests in indicating the possibility of joint cooperation in the construction to which the memorandum relates but the Government of the United States wants His Majesty's Government to feel that the United States Government is inspired by no selfish desires in this matter. The United States Government feels that in this day of international dealing, when international economic exchange and coordination have assumed an unprecedented importance, the nations friendly to China owe to themselves, to each other, and to China the duty to assume that attitude among themselves and towards China which will better enable her to meet the economic demands which will increasingly be made upon her. Such an attitude, in the opinion of the United States Government, requires a strict adherence to the policy of the "open door."

Since the opinion of His Majesty's Government, expressed in the recent note and referred to in the first few paragraphs herein, so nearly accords with the view of the Government of the United States as regards the "open door," and since His Majesty's Government has not given formal recognition to the claims of the Powers to spheres of influence the Department of State feels that His Majesty's Government might be glad to join with the United States Government in an effort to secure a more faithful observance of the "open door" policy by the Powers pledged thereto. If His Majesty's Government will continue to support the policy or agree to do so on condition that other Governments renew their pledges, the Government of the United States will be very glad to have the cooperation of His Majesty's Government to so worthy an end.

Existing contracts and vested commercial interests ought not to be disturbed, but it is necessary that the Powers cease to claim exclusive privileges in the various geographical areas with which they have respectively concerned themselves.

SIR: There is sent enclosed herewith for your information, by the hand of Mr. J. Donald C. Rogers, recently appointed a Secretary of your Legation, copies of correspondence between the Department of State and the British Embassy and between the Department and the American Embassy in London, relating to the protest of the British representative in China against a contract for the construction by an American corporation of a railway line in the Province of Hupeh, as reported by you in your telegram of July 14, 6 p. m.

The substance of your telegram was embodied in the memorandum of August 24, 1917, to the British Embassy. To this the Embassy replied on August 30 that the Department's memorandum had been forwarded to London.

The reply of His Britannic Majesty's Government was communicated to the Department through the British Embassy in Washington in a memorandum dated September 7, but handed to the Department on September 8.

To this the Department rejoined in the memorandum of September 20.

You will be kept informed of the progress of these negotiations from which the Department hopes for a favorable result.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, October 11, 1917, 3 p. m.

Your October 10, 10 a. m. British Ambassador on September 7 [8] handed Department a memorandum on "open door" and concessions in China stating that in the view of the British Government it was a cause for regret that a policy of earmarking certain areas for enterprises of specific countries had apparently gradually supplanted régime of free railway construction but that it would be a mistake not to recognize such a transition. A tacit recognition has been given during past ten years to a special position of Japan in Manchuria and Fukien. to Germany in Shantung, France in Hainan and provinces bordering Tongking, and Russia north of Great Wall, but that with exception of last His Britannic Majesty's Government's formal recognition had neither been sought nor given to special rights in those regions.

The Department replied on September 20 saying it would share British regret if it felt compelled to recognize such change which it did not admit. The British Government in its memorandum indicated possibility of joint cooperation in the proposed enterprise, but the Department without rejecting proposal intimated that the better plan would be to cooperate in securing a more faithful observance of the "open door" policy. British Ambassador was informed that if it will continue to support "the open" door or agree to do so on condition that other Governments renew their pledges the Government of the United States will be glad to have the cooperation of British Government to that end. British Ambassador telegraphed substance of Department's memorandum of September 20 to London and on October 8 Ambassador informed Department that Secretary Balfour would give matter careful consideration as soon as memorandum should be received. Protest against construction of line has, therefore, not been withdrawn.

Copies of correspondence being sent you by Rodgers who sails October 11.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Peking, October 13, 1917.

SIR: Referring to previous correspondence in reference to the Hukuang Railways, I have the honor to enclose herewith a copy of a letter under yesterday's date in which Mr. R. St. Pierre, the Peking representative of the Banque de l'Indo-Chine, suggested cooperation between American and French interests with a view to an arrangement by which they might obtain from the interested British Group a relinquishment of all its interest in the proposed Szechuan section of the Hukuang Railways, thus giving the Americans and French a free hand to construct the section from Hankow to Chengtu, save in so far as it might be deemed that the Germans retain their rights, under the Loan Agreement of May 20, 1911, in that portion of the line from Hankow westward to Ichang.

In conversations with me and with the Secretary of the Legation, Mr. St. Pierre has made clear his view that the existing arrangement for the construction of the Hukuang Railways is in practice unsatisfactory, if not actually impracticable, particularly in respect to its provisions for "impartial preference" in the furnishing of materials, which are in contradiction to the terms of the inter-Bank agreement, and which have already led to serious differences between the American and the British interests concerned; and he has intimated that he considers that a practical solution of the difficulties inherent in the project is to be found only in the abandonment of the unworkable principle of free competition for the supply of materials on all sections, and the reversion to the Tientsin-Pukow system of definite allocations of mileage to each national group, each group to deal as it thinks fit with the section entrusted to it.

So far as concerns American interests, it must be acknowledged that the attempt to establish an indiscriminate joint interest in all of the several sections of the Hukuang Railways has proved disappointing and even humiliating. It will be recalled that, under the original loan agreement, the engineering rights of the French in the western portion of the contemplated Szechuan extension were postponed to the occasion of a supplementary loan which has, of course, not yet been issued; the American rights in the I—Kwei section have, in the event, been postponed to the necessity of concentrating the American funds upon the completion of that portion of the so-called British section between Hankow (Wuchang) and Changsha; the British section has absorbed the majority of the total proceeds of the loan, in constructing rather less than half of the contemplated line, and has in doing so violated its express obligations to afford American markets an equal opportunity, and contrived to introduce British standards for locomotives even where they had to be obtained from America at a higher cost; and the Germans, until the severance of diplomatic relations by China, went on building their section northwestward from Hankow towards Hsianfu, with little relation to the general Hukuang project, and now, as I have just learned, the Chinese director general of the Hukuang Railways (Dr. Jeme) is proposing to entrust to Mr. Cox—the British engineer-in-chief who has so contemptuously ignored the principle of “impartial preference” and the specific recommendations of the Engineers’ Conference³⁹—the functions of acting engineer-in-chief of the German section. In actual experience, the elaborate internationalization of the Hukuang Railways has thus far resulted in their coming under the preponderant influence of the British; and except for the bankers’ profits on the loan transaction, the advantages expected to accrue in favor of American interests have proved almost wholly illusory. Under these disappointing conditions, it must be acknowledged that it is at least alluring to consider such a proposal as that of Mr. St. Pierre, by which American interests would have determinate and enforceable rights in a section of the very attractive line between the province of Szechuan and navigable water on the Yangtze River. And this suggestion seems the more fair in that it contemplates the surrender by the French Group of some two hundred kilometers of railway rights to which it is entitled (as against the British) by reason of the violation by the British and Chinese Corporation of the former’s right of participation in the Pukow-Sinyang Railway whereas American interests are called upon only to join in the effort to influence the Chinese Government to arrange for the transfer to British control of the provincial railway from Canton to Shiuchow.

Whether the proposed American and French line into Szechuan should eventually run from Hankow, or from Ichang, to Chengtu, depends upon the question of the validity of German rights in the section from Hankow to Ichang. It would appear that the German rights derivable from the Hukuang Loan Agreement of 1911 may be summarized as follows:

(a) Bankers’ right to participate in the loan, and to issue bonds secured upon the whole property of all sections of the Hukuang Railways. Subject to certain adjustments, indicated by Mr. St. Pierre, in regard to retained proceeds of the loan, this right would appear to remain unimpaired in essence—although presumably all questions of payment on the German issue of bonds, and of security therefor, are postponed until the conclusion of the war.

(b) Engineering rights in respect to the Hankow-Ichang section, during the period of construction. This right in favor of the Germans would perhaps be the most tangible legal obstacle to the taking over, by the Americans and French, of the section between Hankow and Ichang. It may nevertheless be argued that the Germans have exhausted such rights by the expenditure of their portion of the loan funds upon the incomplete construction of a line which in fact only partially conforms to the project contemplated by the agreement. And it may be further urged that the state of war in itself warrants the Chinese Government in assigning to others the execution of the project.

(c) Bankers' option to participate in a supplementary loan of £4,000,000 for the purposes of the Hukuang Railways. Apart from any question of the extinguishment of such rights by virtue of the existing state of war, it is the fact that the Chinese Government has repeatedly offered to "the Banks"—i. e., to the particular partnership of American, British, French and German Banks—the opportunity to take up this option; and that that combination of interests, as such, has of necessity declined that offer, however willing certain of its individual constituent groups may have been to take it up. I venture to state that it seems to me not merely an arguable thesis, but an irresistible conclusion that, as a legal fact, the option offered to and declined by the consortium of interests in whose favor it was reserved by the Agreement of 1911 is now exhausted and void, so that the Chinese Government would be, from the merely legal standpoint, entirely justified in offering it to anyone whatsoever—although as a matter of obvious policy it would be presumed that the Chinese Government would first consult the representatives of such nationalities as are friendly, which were originally interested in the project.

I beg to request an early expression of the Department's opinion as to the points of law thus presented in regard to such rights as may be deemed to persist in favor of German interest in the Hukuang Railways.

I beg also to request an opinion as to the legal status, in this matter, of any American organization which might be requested by the Chinese Government to participate with the French (and perhaps British) banking interests in the construction of the Szechuan extension which was originally reserved in favor of "the American Group" jointly with the French and British.

These questions are in a measure hypothetical; but a determination seems necessary for the purpose of effecting some satisfactory arrangement for the realization of the project contemplated by the Hukuang Railroad Agreement of 1911.⁴⁰

The question of policy involved will be evident, and I venture to hope that the Department will see its way to give such instructions as will enable the Legation to take a definite position in respect to Mr. St. Pierre's proposal for cooperation between the French Group and American interests in the construction of the section westward from Hankow (or from Ichang) to Chengtu.

Mr. Saint Pierre to Minister Reinsch

PEKIN, October 12, 1917.

SIR: I have the honour to send you herewith the mileage of the Hukuang Railways according to the last surveys. Those figures have been checked by Mr. S. Mayers; but, as we have found discrepancies between different reports, we are sending them to the Engineers-in-Chief asking them to let us know if they are correct.

I think that, the English Group having to make good to the French Group 215 kilometres as compensation for the Pukow-Sinyang and being given the control of the Kwangtung Provincial Railway, the whole of the Szechuan line from Hankow to Tchentu [Chengtu] could be divided equally between the American and French Groups: the first section being American.

This would, as far as possible, give to each country the possibility of furnishing materials in proportion to the amount of money issued on its own market.

I am writing in this sense to my Group by to-day's mail.

As regards the German rights, after careful consideration, it seems to me that they arise from the loan agreement only, which gives to the "Banks" authority for the issue of £6,000,000 Government Bonds and an option on a further issue of £4,000,000. So I think that:

1. Provided the balance of the loan still in Berlin (£230,000) is expended by compensation with funds put aside by the Chinese Government.

2. And provided a notification is addressed by the Board of Communications to the "Banks" that, having failed to issue the second series of the loan, their option is forfeited:

The Chinese Government would be at liberty to take new arrangements and to enter into a new agreement with a new group composed of the three Banks.

But of course this is only my personal view and it would be necessary to have legal opinion on the matter.

It may interest you to hear that the option on the Currency loan of the French and British Groups has been renewed for a further period of six months; but with the mention however that it is for the last time. This gives us time to breathe.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Peking, November 19, 1917.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the Department's instructions No. 683, dated September 27, relating to the protest of the British Government against the proposed construction by an American corporation of certain railways in the Provinces of Hupeh and Hunan. The strong position taken by the Department in the defense of American industrial opportunities in China is very encouraging to the Legation.

I have the honor to point out that the memorandum of his excellency, the British Ambassador, dated September 7, contains certain misconceptions. Thus the statement that

Other Siems-Carey concessions without exception infringe agreements granting prior rights to other Powers, agreements which have been published and which must be well known to the United States Minister at Peking, can by no means be conceded. With respect to the alignment allotted from Fengchen in northern Shansi to Ninghiafu in Kansu, it has not and can not be admitted that any agreement exists which would exclude American capital from the construction of this line. This is the position constantly taken by the Legation in this matter, as reported in my despatch No. 1252 of October 31, 1916,³⁷ and No. 1282 of November 28, 1916;⁴¹ also, the secret agreement upon which the French protest to the line in Kwangsi Province is based, was never published, nor was its existence known to the Chinese officials most concerned. The statement in his excellency's memorandum, referring to the Hankow viceroy's letter of 1905, that "the American Legation at Peking have for a long time possessed a copy of it," is not correct. No copy of this note was on file in the Legation until October 15, 1917. The copy which was shown to the British Legation here for purposes of verification, is the copy in the collection of the late Mr. Rockhill which is now being edited by Mr. MacMurray, who took this copy to the British Legation purely for his own purposes as editor of the collection in question, and not in any sense as seeking information for the American Legation. Even had this document been officially known to me, I could not have recognized it, as it lacks the ratification of the Central Government and as its recognition would have jeopardized the opportunity of Americans freely to engage in industrial enterprises in China.

INTERNATIONAL BANKING CORPORATION,
Peking, October 20, 1917.

DEAR SIR: It seems to be the united opinion of the Groups' representatives in Peking that this time, when the interests of England, France, China and the United States are similar, as opposed to Germany, is most opportune for arriving at some new understanding regarding the future policy to be pursued on the Hukuang Railways. With the changed conditions, the old Hukuang Agreement would probably have to be considerably altered and the eventual disposition of the German section agreed upon. May we suggest that a conference of the representatives of the Groups be held either in New York or London and the question of the future action on the Hukuang Railways discussed.

We understand that the American Legation is wiring to the State Department inquiring as to the status of the German interests on the Hukuang at the close of the War. This information could probably be secured direct from the State Department by the Groups if desired.

A statement of mileage of Sections, prepared by Mr. Saint Pierre of the Banque de l'Indo-Chine and Mr. Mayers of the British-Chinese Corporations is enclosed.⁴² It has been submitted to Mr. Randolph for verification and should any correction be made you will be duly advised.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Peking, November 26, 1917.

SIR: Supplementing my despatch No. 1736 of the 19th instant, in regard to the protest of the British Government against the proposed construction by an American corporation of certain railways in the Provinces of Hupeh and Hunan, I have the honor to enclose herewith, as a matter of record, a translation of the letter from Viceroy Chang Chih-tung to British Consul General Fraser, under date of September 9, 1905, embodying the assurance upon which the British protest is based. The correctness of this translation has been unofficially confirmed by the Chinese secretariat of the British Legation, with particular reference to the stipulation (contained in the final paragraph of the body of the text) that half of the engineers required for the construction of the railways contemplated would be Japanese.

From Mr. Mayers of the British and Chinese Corporation, it is learned that this provision in favor of the Japanese was inserted in the viceroy's letter at the last moment, and quite unexpectedly to the British authorities concerned in the negotiations, to which this assurance was incidental, for the loan from the Hongkong Government for the redemption of the China-American Development Company's concession for the Canton-Hankow Railway: the existence of this provision in their favor was for a long time suspected by the Japanese without their having any evidence thereof; subsequently, however, having learned of its existence, they based upon it a request for participation in the construction of the Pukow-Sinyang Railway (the loan contract for which, dated November 14, 1913, was forwarded to the Department in the Legation's No. 3 of November 18, 1913); but this claim was not very strongly urged at the time, and was shortly relinquished.

In my despatch of the 19th instant, above cited, I stated that a copy of the enclosed translation of the viceroy's assurance had been presented to the British Legation here for purposes of verification by Mr. MacMurray, "who took this copy to the British Legation purely for his own purposes * * *, and not in any sense as seeking information for the American Legation." Lest this statement should lend itself to the misconstruction that in doing so Mr. MacMurray had acted in pursuance of his own interests as editor of a compilation of China agreements, in disregard of his responsibilities to the Legation, I feel it is only fair for me to add that the statement referred to merely dissociates Mr. MacMurray's inquiry from any action taken by the Legation in the matter of the British protest.

The Hukuang Viceroy to British Consul General Fraser

SEPTEMBER 9, 1905.

In view of your services in obtaining for me the present loan for the redemption of the Canton-Hankow Railway and the very fair terms on which it has been arranged, I have the honor to give the following assurance which binds the viceroys and governors of the three Provinces of Hupeh, Hunan and Kuangtung and their successors in office who have power to deal with railways:

As regards funds for the future construction of the Canton-Hankow Railway, in case it is necessary to borrow abroad in addition to the amount China may herself provide, the first application shall be made to England, and if the British tender is, as regards interest and issue price, equal to the tenders of other countries, British financiers shall have the first option of undertaking the business; if in the above and other respects the tenders of other countries are fairer and more favorable than England's, China will be free to choose the fairest and most favorable and make other arrangements for borrowing.

If funds for constructing the Canton-Hankow Railway have been borrowed from England, then for the machinery and materials required for that line, apart from what China has of her own making, if bought abroad, British firms and works shall first be applied to, and if their tenders are of similar cost to those made by other countries' firms and works, the British works shall have the first option of undertaking the orders; if the wares of other countries are excellent and the price moderate, China shall be free to contract for purchase from the most suitable.

Beyond this, if within the jurisdiction of Hupeh and Hunan there are other railway construction enterprises which likewise necessitate loans from abroad, they shall be dealt with on the system set forth above as applicable to the Canton-Hankow Railway loans.

With regard to the engineers needed for the construction of the railways, I declare that one-half will be of the nation that lends the funds and the other half will be Japanese. The work will be divided into sections for undertaking, and each nation will attend to its own business. China will retain control as regards all railway companies, their employees, selection of land, management of lines, and running of cars; the engineers will only attend to the affairs of the requisite works within their sections and may not interfere in anything else.

I am communicating officially with officers concerned, and I have, etc., etc.

AMERICAN LEGATION,

Peking, January 2, 1917, 8 p. m.

My telegram of December 29, 10 p. m. [a. m.]⁴ The American International Corporation telegraphs Carey [and] Gregory in substance:

The Japanese Government favors cooperation canal. May intimate to Chinese protest will be withdrawn if cooperation arranged. Cooperation would remove public apprehension regarding Japanese opposition American finance held. We propose arrange understanding under which Japanese and yourselves would jointly negotiate with Chinese. Delicate handling necessary.

The Japanese démarche regarding canal has been treated heretofore as an inquiry and so explain to American representative by a member of Japanese Legation, see my despatch No. 1267.⁴⁴

It would have been impossible to find a more unsuitable enterprise for cooperation. Should the Chinese learn that it is proposed to carry the Japanese into Kiangsu on the back of Americans their indignation will be without limit, resulting in great damage to American interests in general and in universal antagonism to the International Corporation.

Department called attention to exceptional character of canal project in origin and relations making desirable that it remain solely American, but admitted that in other enterprises if desired or willingly allowed by China cooperation between Americans and Japanese in China might be of advantage to China.

Straight did not ask Department to make representations to China in regard to Japanese cooperation but the impossibility of Department's doing so was pointed out to him. Chinese Minister yesterday volunteered statement that China was cordially in favor of the President's moves towards peace and would be willing to join peace league after the war, that China trusted the United States absolutely and desired fullest present and future cooperation between the two Republics. He said that China earnestly desired that the United States should not rejoin the financial group and in this connection asked me whether I knew what the policy of the International Corporation would be toward it. In answer to my inquiry he said that joint participation in loans by Japanese and American financiers might be favorably considered because in that way China could have more assurance that political advantages would not be sought through them. He said that he had reason to believe that Terauchi sincerely intends a consistent policy of friendliness rather than forcefulness and seeks friendly economic relations rather than political advantages.

Japanese newspapers publish a report from New York that the International Corporation proposed to Japanese capitalists to make canal work a joint enterprise and that the Americans have no objection to the Japanese desire to represent the company but that China objects to this. Please inform Straight of this misleading disclosure.

Initial comment in Chinese papers is extremely unfavorable as they conceive that Americans are guilty of breach of trust and that the object of Japan is to neutralize Chinese distrust by exploiting confidence enjoyed by Americans in China and to fetter freedom of American enterprise.

The situation is serious and extremely embarrassing to the Legation. It is essential that Corporation should immediately publish true facts as to the source of the original suggestion because the Chinese officials concerned will be questioned on this point.

Give out the following statement:

For over a year past, influential Japanese have suggested that the American International Corporation cooperate in China with Japanese financiers. Cooperation in the loan for canal improvement has been suggested, but the American International Corporation has taken the position that, having concluded with the Chinese authorities contracts for the improvement of the Grand Canal in the Provinces of Kiangsu and Shantung, it could not enter into any arrangement with Japanese financiers regarding these enterprises, unless assured that the Chinese Government would approve such cooperation. The American International Corporation has, however, suggested to the Chinese authorities that a single contract be concluded covering both sections of the canal, and that Japanese financiers be granted a participation. The question of cooperation is a matter for the Chinese Government to decide.

Sir: I have the honor to enclose several articles from various papers* (such as the Peking Daily News, the Gazette, and the Peking and Tientsin Times) which will show the unfortunate effect produced by the ill-considered action of the International Corporation with respect to the Grand Canal contract.

*Not printed

The Peking correspondent to the North China Daily News, the leading British paper in China, states that "the Chinese would consider American cooperation with the Japanese in Shantung Province as a particularly cruel betrayal of faith." In summarizing the attitude of the Chinese press, he states that in the Chinese editorials Americans are given their choice between charges of bad faith and unprecedented weakness.

Various American representatives here at present negotiating with Chinese officials have reported to me the injurious effect which the action of the New York corporation has had upon the standing of American business men in China.

The American International Corporation to the Secretary of State

NEW YORK, April 5, 1917.

SIR: We have the honor to acknowledge receipt of the Department's letter of the 2d of April,⁴ giving for our confidential information a paraphrase of a cable message received from the American Minister at Peking.

We regret to note that the Chinese authorities have apparently been misinformed and that they, as well as the American Minister at Peking, should have been unduly disturbed by an erroneous interpretation of an arrangement made between the American International Corporation and the Industrial Bank of Japan.

We have the honor to transmit herewith for the Department's confidential information copy of the agreement entered into between the American International Corporation and the Industrial Bank of Japan, together with the texts of cables exchanged with our Peking representative with regard to this entire matter.⁴

We have the honor to call the Department's attention to the fact, clearly shown in the accompanying documents, that the American International Corporation has from the outset taken the position that our contracts for the improvement of the Grand Canal were made with the Chinese authorities and that we could not, without their specific approval, make any arrangement for cooperation with other interests or admit other interests to participation in the contemplated loan.

As the Department will appreciate, the arrangement between the American International Corporation and the Industrial Bank of Japan provides the basis for negotiations to be undertaken either by the American International Corporation with a view to ultimate association with the Industrial Bank of Japan, or jointly by the American International Corporation and the Industrial Bank of Japan. The provisions of this arrangement do not concern the Government of China except in so far as they are referred to in the contract it is proposed to negotiate with the Chinese Government.

We also have the honor to call the Department's attention to the fact that our agreement with the Industrial Bank of Japan provides that the American International Corporation shall take all steps possible to recommend and secure the appointment of a Japanese assistant engineer and assistant auditor who will respectively rank

Furthermore, the agreement provides that wheresoever in the judgment of the Siems-Carey Railway & Canal Company the interests of the Chinese Government may best be served and the progress of the work be facilitated, subcontracts shall be awarded to Japanese subcontractors to be recommended by the Industrial Bank of Japan.

We should be obliged to the Department if it would bring these matters to the attention of the American Minister at Peking, in order to remove, if possible, his present apparent misapprehension regarding this situation.

Agreement between the American International Corporation and the Industrial Bank of Japan for cooperation, with the approval of the Chinese Government, in undertaking the improvement of the sections of the Grand Canal in the Provinces of Shantung and Kiangsu in the Republic of China.

Whereas, the American International Corporation, through its representatives in China, on April 10, 1916, concluded with the Government of the Province of Shantung a contract for the issue of $3,000,000 seven per cent (7%) bonds, the proceeds from the sale of which were to be utilized for the improvement of the section of the Grand Canal in the Province of Shantung, and

Whereas, the American International Corporation, through its representatives in China, on May 13, 1916, concluded with the Central Government of China a contract for the issue of $3,000,000 seven per cent (7%) bonds, the proceeds from the sale of which were to be utilized for the improvement of the section of the Grand Canal in the Province of Kiangsu, and

Whereas, it is now proposed that, if the Chinese Government in principal approves such cooperation, the American International Corporation and the Industrial Bank of Japan shall associate themselves together, as hereinafter provided, in the carrying out of this work of Canal improvement, and through the negotiation of a single contract providing for the improvement of the sections of the Grand Canal in the Provinces of Shantung and Kiangsu, and the issuing of bonds to furnish the funds for such improvement to cover the projects and contracts above described and to supersede such contracts,

It is now agreed, by and between the parties hereto, as follows:

Art. I. The American International Corporation will jointly with the Industrial Bank of Japan negotiate with the Chinese Government for a single contract providing for the improvement of the sections of the Grand Canal in the Provinces of Shantung and Kiangsu, or if the Chinese Government prefers, the American International Corporation will alone conduct negotiations for the contract contemplated, stipulating in such contract that financial interests other than the American International Corporation may, with the consent of the Chinese Government be admitted to a participation in the issue of bonds thereunder, it being understood that the Industrial Bank of Japan shall, with the approval of the Chinese Government, be so admitted, in which case the American International Corporation through its representatives will keep the Industrial Bank of Japan advised as to the terms of the contract under discussion.

Art. II. The American International Corporation, jointly with the Industrial Bank of Japan or alone as the case may be, shall propose to the Chinese Government as a basis for negotiations, a contract which shall follow the general lines of the contract for the improvement of the Kiangsu section of the Grand Canal, and the American International Corporation and the Industrial Bank of Japan agree, as between themselves, that the draft contract (copy of such suggested draft being appended hereto), set forth the general principles upon which they are willing jointly to undertake to issue the bonds contemplated thereunder, it being understood by and between the American International Corporation and the Industrial Bank of Japan that:

A. Of the total contemplated issue of U. S. gold dollars $6,000,000 (or approximately gold yen 12,000,000), the American International Corporation shall purchase and arrange for the issue of U. S. gold dollars $3,500,000 and the Industrial Bank of Japan shall purchase and arrange for the issue of U. S. gold dollars $2,500,000 (or approximately gold yen 5,000,000).

B. Bonds are to be issued simultaneously in Tokyo and New York, the American International Corporation and the Industrial Bank of Japan to agree as to the issue price of the bonds in their respective markets.

C. The American International Corporation and the Industrial Bank of Japan are to issue, or to arrange for the issue of, bonds of the Chinese Government in their own markets, without responsibility to each other.

D. All profits to be derived from, and all expenses incurred in connection with the issue of bonds in New York and Tokyo respectively, are to be received and paid by the American International Corporation and/or its associates, and the Industrial Bank of Japan and/or its associates, independently and without responsibility to each other.

E. The American International Corporation (or its associates through whom the issue on the New York market may be made) is to endeavor to arrange that the entire issue of U. S. Gold dollars $6,000,000 (or approximately gold yen 12,000,000) shall be listed on the New York Stock Exchange, and the Industrial Bank of Japan, and/or its associates, to endeavor to arrange that the entire issue of U. S. gold dollars $6,000,000 (or approximately gold yen 12,000,000) shall be listed on the Tokyo Stock Exchange.

F. The bonds are to be engraved or printed to meet the requirements of the New York and Tokyo Stock Exchanges.

G. The American International Corporation is to endeavor to arrange that the Chinese Government shall for this transaction make a fixed rate of exchange as between U. S. gold dollars and gold yen on the basis of two gold yen to one United States Gold Dollar. The Industrial Bank of Japan shall join in such endeavor if the contract is negotiated jointly.

H. Loan proceeds are to be deposited in New York and Tokyo in proportion to the amounts issued in the United States and Japan respectively, and are to be transferred to China in proportionate amounts to meet expenditures for improvement work. Funds so transferred to China are to be held in China by the International Banking Corporation and a Japanese bank to be designated, until such funds are withdrawn for the purpose contemplated and in the manner provided by the contract.

I. Principal and interest of the bonds are to be payable at the offices of the National City Bank in New York or of the Industrial Bank of Japan in Tokyo, in dollars and yen respectively.

Art. III. (a) The American International Corporation and the Industrial Bank of Japan agree, as between themselves, that the loan shall be for a par value of U. S. gold dollars $6,000,000 (or approximately gold yen 12,000,000).

(b) An American chief engineer shall have charge of the improvement work and an American chief auditor shall have charge of all receipts and disbursements contemplated thereunder.

(c) The Siems-Carey Railway & Canal Company shall be designated as contractors to undertake the improvement work, and shall have entire charge of the personnel of the contracting and construction staffs.

Art. IV. By virtue of its issue of bonds under the loan agreement to be concluded, whether such loan agreement be negotiated jointly by the American International Corporation and the Industrial Bank of Japan or by the American International Corporation alone, participation thereunder of the Industrial Bank of Japan being subsequently arranged, the American International Corporation will cooperate with the Industrial Bank of Japan in all matters arising under the contract.

In order that Japanese industry may have an opportunity to profit in proportion to the amount of capital subscribed by Japanese investors in the bonds to be issued for the improvement of the Grand Canal, Japanese material shall at equal price, quality and delivery be given equal preference with American materials and wheresoever in the judgment of the Siems-Carey Railway & Canal Company the interests of the Chinese Government may best be served and the progress of the work be facilitated, subcontracts shall be awarded to Japanese subcontractors to be recommended by the Industrial Bank of Japan.

If and when the action shall be agreeable to the Chinese Government and the Industrial Bank of Japan requests that such action shall be taken, the American International Corporation agrees to take all necessary steps possible to recommend and secure the appointment of a Japanese Assistant Engineer and a Japanese Assistant Auditor who will respectively rank second to the American Chief Engineer and the American Chief Auditor.

Art. V. The Industrial Bank of Japan agrees that the Siems-Carey Railway & Canal Company shall receive for their services as contractors for the Canal improvement, the ten per cent of the total cost of such canal improvement work provided for under the original agreements referred to in the preamble hereof.

Moreover, since the Industrial Bank of Japan is to share, with the American International Corporation, those financial obligations imposed by the canal contracts, it is hereby agreed that the Industrial Bank of Japan shall participate in the benefits derived from the construction profits of the contracts, and that to carry out this participation the Industrial Bank of Japan shall receive a sum equal to five-twelfths of the total amount of the canal construction profit dividends declared and payable to the Corporation by the construction company, such amounts to be paid when and as the canal construction profits are distributed, and such payments to constitute the sole participation due or to be claimed by the Industrial Bank of Japan in such benefits.

It is further understood and agreed by and between the parties hereto that this contract does not give and shall not be construed to give to the Industrial Bank of Japan, any right, title or interest whatsoever in stock of the Siems-Carey Railway & Canal Company, which is now owned or which may be hereafter acquired by the American International Corporation, and that this contract does not give and shall not be construed to give to the Industrial Bank of Japan, any rights or interests whatsoever or any voice in the control, management, or disposition of such stock so owned or acquired, or in the affairs of the Company itself.

Art. VI. When, subsequent to the conclusion of the contract between the American International Corporation and the Chinese Government for the improvement of the Grand Canal hereinabove referred to, the American International Corporation shall arrange with the Industrial Bank of Japan for the issue in Tokyo of a portion of the bonds contemplated for the improvement of the Grand Canal, the Industrial Bank of Japan shall reimburse the American International Corporation in the proportion of 7 to 5 for all expenses incurred by the American International Corporation in conducting the negotiations for the two contracts referred to in the preamble of this agreement, in the negotiations for the single contract for a loan for the improvement of the Grand Canal, in arranging for the participation of the Industrial Bank of Japan in the new contract now contemplated, and in perfecting all arrangements for the issue of the bonds, including the drafting, framing, printing, et cetera, of the bonds wherever and whenever such arrangements are of use to both the American International Corporation and the Industrial Bank of Japan.

In witness whereof, the undersigned, being duly authorized by the American International Corporation and the Industrial Bank of Japan respectively, hereunto affix our hands and seals, this eighth day of March 1917.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Peking, April 14, 1917.

SIR: In continuation of my No. 1386 of February 13 relating to the Grand Canal contract, I have the honor to report that the first impression concerning the action of the International Corporation in this matter appears to have grown much stronger with both Chinese and foreigners in China in a most unfavorable sense.

The representatives of the International Corporation sounded Mr. Pan Fu who is in charge of conservancy matters; this was done on the basis of merely having a portion of the bonds placed in Tokyo. Although the Chinese officials severely disapproved of the action of the Corporation they were forced by circumstances to swallow their disgust and to assume an attitude of acceptance of the inevitable. Mr. Pan Fu suggested that the improvement of the canal in the Province of Chihli should be united with the Shantung plan.

In conversations with the officials concerned I had made it plain that it was our desire that they should act with perfect freedom from the point of view of their own best interests, in considering the proposals of the Corporation. The Premier, however, stated to me "what can we do, the Corporation has tied our hands." * * *

The Japanese Legation is already showing signs of impatience and dissatisfaction with the slowness of the Chinese.

I believe to be acting in accordance with your desire in entirely dissociating this Legation from any pressure which may be sought to bring to bear upon the Chinese in this matter. But I apprehend that the policy upon which the American International Corporation has entered cannot in the long run be carried through without some browbeating of the Chinese; for good offices of this nature the Corporation will have to rely on others.

SIR: I have the honor to forward herewith a translation of a despatch from the National Conservancy Bureau to the Governor of Anhui in connection with the Huai River conservancy work.

It will be seen from this despatch that the Anhui Provincial Assembly had passed three resolutions to the effect that the Provinces of Kiangsu and Anhui should separately carry out the conservancy work, that no foreign loans should be contracted, and that the Kiangsu officials should not have the right of making surveys in Anhui. The Minister of Agriculture and Commerce, in his reply, argues for the necessity of cooperation and relates the difficulties which have been encountered in securing foreign financial support.

[Inclosure—Translation]

[From the Peking Gazette, Saturday, March 10, 1917]

Despatch from the National Conservancy Bureau to the Governor of Anhui in reply to the latter's request for hastening the progress of the conservancy work of the Huai River

The despatch from your excellency including a bill passed by the Provincial Assembly of your province on the conservancy of the Huai River has duly received the attention of this bureau. The conservancy of the Huai River was first proposed by the Chih Yi Chu or the Provincial Assembly of Kiangsu during the late dynasty. In deference to the wishes of the said assembly a conservancy department was accordingly established and surveying was carried out in the third year of the reign of Hsuan Tung of the late dynasty. Owing to the political upheaval of the time, the work was interrupted until the third year of the Republic, when this bureau was inaugurated. The late Minister of Agriculture and Commerce Chang personally conducted a surveying expedition of the Huai River with "Feng Wei Ying" and "Pei Lung Meng," two Dutch engineers, who directed the surveying affairs. As a result of the expedition, foundation was laid for the beginning of the work. Seeing the results thus far achieved, the late Minister of Agriculture and Commerce ordered the Conservancy Department to be reorganized under the new name of the Conservancy Bureau for the Huai and the Yangtse Rivers. After reorganization the new bureau has since been placed under the direct control of this bureau.

The question for raising a loan for the purpose of conservancy was then proposed; and under the auspices of the American Red Cross Society, a survey of the river was made. The results obtained by the American surveying party regarding the speed of the current at different parts of the river were found corresponding exactly to what had formerly been tabulated by the Dutch engineers. The question of whether the Huai River should empty its water into the Yangtse or into the sea finally arose, and according to the suggestion of the American engineers, a careful survey of the plain in the districts north of the Huai River should first be undertaken in order to find out the direction the course of the river should be conducted. With a view to relieve the poor by enlisting labor in that district, the bureau proposed that the progress of the work should no longer be delayed.

The question of raising funds for the project finally became necessary for this bureau to find a way out. After mature consideration of the question it was decided that as the Huai River traverses the territory of two provinces, the expenditure incurred in the surveying should be raised locally by the said two provinces.

Surveying, according to the suggestion of the American engineers, should begin at the important points of the Huai River with no regard whether the territory is under the jurisdiction of Kiangsu or Anhui. In such a work, there should be no prejudice or partiality to a particular province.

According to the proposed plan the conservancy work has been divided into two stages: that of surveying and that of engineering. The surveying is again subdivided into three stages: namely the preliminary surveying, the practical surveying and the precise surveying. If the work was not suspended for lack of funds, the surveying in the districts north of the Huai River would have already been completed by now and the final consummation of the project would have already been under preparation.

A Ministerial Order fixes the amount of money each province should contribute toward the work. Owing to the delay and failure to raise the portion of funds allotted to your province, a considerable sum was in arrear. The financial condition of this bureau has long been suffering from embarrassment. In view of our responsibility, we used our best efforts to advance money to the said branch bureau to the amount of $28,000. With this aid the said bureau up to the winter of last year succeeded in completing about 60 or 70 per cent of its work in surveying. But owing to lack of funds, we could proceed no further. With regret we had to suspend the work that was on the point of completion. Notwithstanding this, we have spared no efforts in devising means for continuing the work. A petition was submitted to the Ministry of Finance on this question and in reply the latter confirmed our request that the funds for the conservancy of the Huai River shall hereafter be considered as national expenditure and the item shall be included in the yearly budget of the Government. This shows that the Government is fully aware of the fact that conservancy concerns not only the economical salvation of the inhabitants of the Huai districts, but is also a national question.

We are entertaining the hope that hereafter both Anhui and Kiangsu would cooperate with each other in supplying funds to the bureau for the prosecution of the work to a successful end so as to relieve the poverty of the inhabitants in the famine-stricken districts and to achieve a work which will be regarded with pride for many generations to come. But contrary to our expectations, the Provincial Assembly of Anhui, according to the despatch of your excellency to this bureau, has just passed a bill regarding the future procedure of the conservancy of the Huai River. In the said bill the following three resolutions are set forth:

- (1) That the conservancy work should be carried out in Kiangsu and Anhui separately without mutual cooperation.

- (2) That no foreign loans should be contracted for the funds of the work.

- (3) The power of surveying should not be vested in the hands of the Kiangsu provincials in order to prevent any possible corrupt practice.

After reading over the despatch and giving due consideration to the three resolutions reached by the Provincial Assembly of your province, this bureau has to say that the bill in question must have been passed by the Provincial Assembly of your province, when the members did not clearly understand the nature of the work. We beg to point out that the conservancy of the Huai River is such a great task that it requires huge sums of money and considerable length of time. Realizing the magnitude of the work the Government from the first set to it with energy sparing neither effort nor money, yet this is all that has been accomplished. As to the regions along the Huai River they have been constantly devastated by the overflowing of the river, the people are on the brink of starvation. It should be plain to every one that the present economical condition of the people in the districts along the Huai Valley are such that it is impossible for them to contribute any funds to the province for the purpose of conservancy.

Moreover, as to the question of whether the Huai River should empty its water into the Yangtse or the sea, its lower course in either case will traverse the territory of the Kiangsu province. If there is no cooperation between Kiangsu and Anhui, how can we expect to carry out the campaign successfully? The result of this work will certainly be beneficial to both provinces alike, but the degree of benefit varies in the upper and lower valley of the river. The question for the Government to decide is whether the Huai River shall empty its water into the Yangtse or into the sea.

After careful perusal of the despatch addressed to us by your excellency, a suggestion is made that pending the decision of the question respecting the direction where the Huai River should empty its water, the conservancy of a section of the river in Anhui will certainly present many difficulties and that what the Government ought to do at the present moment is to finish the surveying first and then refer the question to both Kiangsu and Anhui. Your suggestion is indeed admirable, but it must be remembered that such a plan cannot be carried out successfully without the cooperation of the two provinces concerned. There should be no suspicion or doubt regarding the supposed differences of benefit between Kiangsu and Anhui.

As to the question of a foreign loan for the purpose, a loan agreement was signed in the third year of the Republic. Owing to the failure of the American capitalists to institute a thorough investigation into the enterprise, they refused to advance money to the Government. At the present moment, the war in Europe has made the financial market of the world tighter than usual. After having attempted a number of times to negotiate a loan, the Government finally failed to secure any financial support from foreign sources for the prosecution of this undertaking. The present financial situation of the Government should be plain to you. There are reasons for your excellency to have doubt or fear as to the Government's ability to conclude a foreign loan to carry out the work because it is not easy for the Government to do it at the present moment, even if it had the mind to do so. What this bureau expects is that the Provincial Assembly of your province may devise a proper method for the raising of the funds necessary for the conservancy in your own province and at the same time notify the Kiangsu authorities of the desire of your province for the prompt prosecution of the campaign. As the matter concerns the economical salvation of the people, it should admit of no delay or hesitation. Being directly responsible for the affair, this bureau likes to cooperate with the authorities of these two provinces in carrying out the undertaking to a successful end at the earliest possible moment. In reply to your despatch, we beg to bring this to your notice.

KUO CHUNG-HSIU,
Minister of Agriculture and Commerce and Specially Appointed Chief of the National Conservancy Bureau

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Peking, June 26, 1917, 3 p. m.

The question has arisen whether or not final signature, by authority of the President and Cabinet, of the Grand Canal agreement on the basis of preliminary contract of April, 1916, but with important changes, would be considered valid in the absence of parliamentary ratification. Japanese Minister holds that requirement of parliamentary ratification is a domestic matter which will not affect the valid foreign contracts signed by proper Cabinet Ministers. I am inclined to doubt this but in view of the time when the contract originated I query whether a formal declaration by the President and Cabinet to the effect that parliamentary ratification is not in this case necessary could be accepted; this in case a long interval without a Parliament should appear likely. Your instructions are requested.

and stated it to be the earnest desire of the Corporation to work in harmony with the policy of this Government and will instruct representative to sign if such action not in conflict with such policy. The Department and Corporation, however, both desire to know whether Chinese are acting freely in thus authorizing cooperation of Japanese with Americans in this enterprise and whether your opinion as to that provision of the contract has changed. How long will Pan Fu remain in office? Approval by Parliament being required, what prospect is there of assembling of a new Parliament?

Your August 25, 5 p. m. The initiative taken by the [Corporation?] in admitting Japanese cooperation under existing conditions has left no choice to the Chinese who now reconciled to Japanese financial participation and thoroughly believe that bad effects inevitable should negotiations fail, as in that case the Japanese would undoubtedly demand take over entire enterprise which would be very damaging to American interests, particularly International Corporation.

It seems advisable immediately to conclude the agreement subject to parliamentary ratification and to advance about 100,000 dollars for preliminary work.

SIR: The Department encloses herewith for your information paraphrase of a telegram which was sent on August 25, 1917, to the American Minister at Peking in regard to the conclusion of a contract between the Chinese Government and your Corporation for the improvement of a portion of the Grand Canal, and a paraphrase of the Minister's reply of August 30, 1917, relative thereto.

I am [etc.]

For the Secretary of State:

ALVEY A. ADEE

File No. 893.811/269

The American International Corporation to the Secretary of State

NEW YORK, September 10, 1917.

SIR: In the paraphrase, which the Department was good enough to send the American International Corporation, of a message from the American Minister at Peking, dated August 30, 1917, concerning the contract negotiated between the Chinese Government and the American International Corporation for the improvement of the Grand Canal in China, the Minister states it is advisable immediately to sign the contract, pointing out that otherwise American interests will be seriously damaged. By other statements in his message the Minister permits the inference that the Chinese would view with regret the Corporation's withdrawal from this enterprise, and he asserts that the Japanese would take it over entirely in such an event.

The Corporation desires that the Department should be fully informed as to all of its actions in connection with the Canal contract and wishes to conform with the policy of the United States Government as expressed by the Department. In spite of the fact, therefore, that under present conditions the intrinsic attraction of the enterprise is not great, the Corporation is prepared to conclude the contract, assuming that its action will be in complete accord with the policy of the American Government and of the Department of State.

The Department has been informed with regard to Japanese cooperation under the contract, and that such cooperation was conditioned upon the absolute requirement of prior consent thereto by the Chinese Government. The Corporation's representatives in China have reported that this consent has been given, and Doctor Reinsch's message substantiates their report. They also concur in Doctor Reinsch's recommendation that the contract be executed because of its effect on American interests and prestige in the Far East.

In the belief, therefore, that its proposed action in signing and executing the Grand Canal contract with the Chinese Government is in full accord with the policy of the American Government and the Department of State, I have the honor to request on behalf of the American International Corporation that you will send the attached telegrams providing for the signing of the Canal contract to the American Legation at Peking for transmission to their respective destinations.

SIR: Your letter of September 10, 1917, together with the enclosures in the form of cables which you desire transmitted was duly received, and the cables have been sent.

The expression of your wish to speak frankly with the Department has been noted with extreme pleasure. It is only through frank consultation and advice that the Department can feel assured that the aims and objects of American capital in foreign fields are entirely within the purview of the policy of the Government. The expansion of American commercial and industrial relations and the investment abroad of American capital are deemed very desirable and the Department is anxious to be of assistance to American citizens in the prosecution of their contracts, and in the protection of their interests, provided that their undertakings have no political object and involve no entanglement in the affairs of the country where investment is made. When the Department is assured, and an examination of the contracts and securities discloses that there is no such political entanglement or objective, then the Department is disposed and anxious to expedite all bona fide American undertakings and to protect the legitimate investments of American interests abroad. Of course, as a condition precedent, there must be no objection to the investment on the part of the Government in the jurisdiction of which it is proposed that it be made.

The very frank disclosures of the details of your present undertaking are appreciated. While the Department does not feel inclined to ask for such disclosures as you have made, yet it is always glad to receive them.

AMERICAN LEGATION,

Peking, October 27, 1917, 11 p. m.

Your telegram of October 25, 5 p. m. Carey desires the International Corporation be informed that the situation apparently is not understood; the proposed advance is to be not a charge upon the proceeds of Canal contract which is subject to parliamentary approval but a separate loan repayable within a year and constituting an unconditional obligation of the Chinese Government whose guaranty therefor is amply satisfactory and whose power to make such a loan at the present time is taken for granted both by Chinese authorities and by banking representatives of other nationalities including International Banking Corporation which have recently concluded similar loan agreements.

Under present conditions when floods are directing special attention to the imperative need of such improvements as the Canal contract contemplates, it would be disastrous to the position of International Corporation here if it were to postpone, pending approval of Parliament, advancing funds which are urgently necessary for the latter and not only would American interests be discredited but the purposes of the contract although independently guaranteed would in all probability be ousted from the Canal project in favor of Japanese interests as the Sino-Japanese Industrial Corporation is offering immediate loan on the understanding that it will hereafter have a priority in connection with all conservancy work. Unless confronted with this new obstacle the Chinese Government is prepared to sign Canal contract Monday.

I beg to request that these considerations be brought to the attention of the American International Corporation with Carey's request for reconsideration of its refusal to authorize advances of the funds on preliminary work and a definite reply by October 31, pending which he is not communicating the present attitude.

REINSCH

File No. 893.811/275

AMERICAN LEGATION,

Peking, October 30, 1917, 4 p. m.

My telegram of October 27, 11 p. m. It is indispensable that International Corporation take into consideration the American public interest in the matter of the Grand Canal improvement resulting from the long connection of the American Red Cross and the United States Government with the project. At the present time emergency exists which makes immediate work on the project absolutely necessary in order to avert further calamity, as well as good business because swarms of laborers rendered destitute by the floods are available. It is the only method by which prevention and relief can be combined. Government and public are demanding action, relying on the American contract: American failure at this time would have the most disastrous consequences.

As to necessary work, immediate advance of 100,000 dollars would carry preparatory engineering work; when plan completed, further advance or bond issue of million dollars would sustain the enterprise until action of Parliament and would make possible completion of a portion independently useful.

Parliamentary consent is not requisite to the legal validity of a loan since the Government as at present constituted is internationally recognized as able to contract obligations. See instances reported in above telegram. Recommendation in my telegram of August 30, 6 p. m., was based on political undesirability of America at that time leading off with a loan made without Parliament. These conditions no longer apply as other international action has supervened. The safety of any advances made on the same securities or even the main loan under the canal contract made with the present Government cannot be questioned. Endeavor to secure [emergency?] commands to go ahead and I beg to request the Department to encourage the Corporation to do so in their own and public interest.

Carey reiterates recommendation to the International Corporation to make immediate advance of 100,000 dollars and adds to prepare for issue of million when construction plans prepared.

SIR: Referring to previous correspondence on the subject of the improvement of the Grand Canal, I have the honor to enclose herewith a copy of "The Chinese Government Grand Canal Improvement Seven per cent (7%) Gold Loan of 1917," being a contract between the Republic of China and the American International Corporation, dated November 20, 1917, and signed on behalf of the Government by its Director General of Flood Relief and Conservancy, Mr. Hsiung Hsi-ling, and on behalf of the corporation by its duly authorized representative, Mr. W. F. Carey.

There is likewise enclosed herewith a copy of the endorsement of this contract signed by Mr. Carey for the American International Corporation, and Mr. Ono for the Industrial Bank of Japan.

[Inclosure]

THE CHINESE GOVERNMENT GRAND CANAL IMPROVEMENT SEVEN PER CENT (7%)
GOLD LOAN OF 1917

The Chinese Government, for the improvement of the Grand Canal in Shantung and Chihli provinces, to make a public loan for said purpose, and to provide for financing further improvement if necessary, finds the following necessary to be enacted by the Parliament of the Republic of China and to be sanctioned by the President of the Republic of China before this agreement becomes effective:

Whereas, the Chinese Government considers the Grand Canal work in Shantung and Chihli provinces as a part of national conservancy work, to wit, the improvement of that part of the Canal commencing at Pang Chia Kou and Lan Huang Pa in the north and ending at Wei Shan Hu and Tai Erh Chuang in the south, such extensions as may be required, work in connection with the valleys of the Yen and Ssu Rivers, the Po River and marshes and other tributaries of the main Canal, and the improvement of the lands thus reclaimed; and on the date that this agreement becomes effective the agreement executed between the Province of Shantung and the American International Corporation dated April 19, 1916,⁴⁵ is to be canceled.

⁴⁵For. Rel. 1916, p. 115.

And whereas, an extension of the work is now provided for which shall extend the North section of the Grand Canal from Tao-chen-pu on the Yellow River to Tientsin via Linching and Tehchow, and improve such extensions and tributaries of the main Canal as may be required.

Therefore, the Directorate General of Flood Relief and Conservancy is hereby authorized and empowered to enter into the following agreement with the American International Corporation and all officers mentioned therein are authorized and empowered to perform the several acts therein stipulated to be done by them.

ARTICLE I

1. For the exclusive purpose of financing the improvement work in Shantung and Chihli provinces above mentioned, the Government authorizes the Corporation as its agent to issue a gold loan of 6,000,000 dollars United States Gold Currency (G$6,000,000) on the terms and conditions hereinafter set forth. This loan shall be called the Chinese Government Grand Canal improvement seven per cent (7%) Gold Loan of 1917.

2. This loan and all advances made hereunder shall constitute a direct liability and obligation of the Government, which hereby pledges its good faith and credit for the punctual payment of the principal and interest of the loan and for performance of all undertakings on its part herein assumed.

3. The denomination, wording, design and designation of the currencies of the bonds shall be determined by the Corporation, and all expenses incurred in connection therewith shall be borne by the Corporation, but the cost of engraving and printing the bonds shall be borne by the Government, which shall furnish a facsimile of the signature of the Minister of Finance and the seal of the Ministry of Finance to be engraved on the bond. The Chinese Minister in Washington shall, previous to the issue of the bonds, also furnish a facsimile of his signature and official seal to be engraved on the bonds to signify that said bonds are the binding obligation of the Government.

4. The aggregate amount of the first issue of the bonds shall be for Six Million Dollars United States Gold Currency (G$6,000,000), at ninety per cent (90%), and shall be made en bloc or in series. Nothing herein contained shall prevent the Corporation purchasing all or any part of said bonds itself. Should the funds of this loan not be sufficient for the work the American International Corporation will be applied to for a further issue of bonds on terms to be agreed upon. The time of issue and amount of any and all bond issues hereunder, and provisions for advances and temporary financing, shall be determined by the Corporation in consultation with the Government.

5. All expenses in connection with said Six Million Dollars (G$6,000,000) bonds taken by the Corporation hereunder, or for such portion of future issues as may be taken by the Corporation such as bankers' commissions, flotation charges, shall be borne by the Corporation.

6. Immediately upon this loan agreement becoming effective, the Corporation will set aside an advancement to the Government to provide for the preliminary expense of the work pending the bond issue herein referred to.

7. The Corporation in consultation with the duly authorized representative of the Government shall decide what is the most favorable moment for the issue of bonds and the duly authorized representative of the Government will give the necessary instructions to the Chinese Minister in Washington. If at such time so determined the issue of such bonds on the terms named herein or agreed upon would be impossible, then in such case the Government and the Corporation shall agree upon a mutually satisfactory plan of temporary financing under an agreement to be negotiated at the time.

If, however, subsequent to any agreement having been reached for the Corporation to issue bonds hereunder and before the publication of the prospectus for such issue or for any series thereof, any political or financial crisis should arise affecting the money markets or the price of Chinese Government securities so as to render impossible in the opinion of the Corporation the successful issue of the bonds at the time agreed upon, then the Corporation upon consultation with the Government respecting the period of time shall be granted a reasonable extension for the performance of its contract. If, within the time limit to be arranged, the issue of Chinese bonds on the conditions hereinbefore stated should be impossible as aforesaid, then the Government and the Corporation shall agree on a mutually satisfactory plan for temporary financing to provide, as far as possible, for the uninterrupted continuance of construction.

8. Under extraordinary circumstances, should the bond issue or temporary financing or advancing be impracticable and/or in case the Corporation has made previous advances and/or bond issues and then is unable to make further advances, after one (1) year this loan may be declared concluded and the Government will repay the advance, if any, and/or bond issues, if any, together with the legitimate interest within three (3) months, after which the contract shall become null and void.

9. All details of the prospectus for the present issue and any other issues, and of loan service, not provided for specifically herein shall be arranged by the Corporation in consultation with the Chinese Minister at Washington.

ARTICLE II

1. The rate of interest for the present issue shall be seven per cent (7%) per annum computed from the dates of the bonds, which dates shall be the dates of issue. It shall be paid semiannually in the manner hereinafter provided. Unused funds on fixed deposit in China with the International Banking Corporation shall bear interest at current rates, and the unused balance deposited in America shall bear interest at the rate of two per cent (2%) per annum.

2. After the appointment of a director general for this work the Corporation will place said advancement, and after issue or issues of the bonds the proceeds thereof, to the credit of the Grand Canal Conservancy account, to be transferred to China in necessary instalments from time to time through and to be held on deposit in China with the International Banking Corporation pending their transfer to the works. When, after the appointment of the director general and the chief engineer, it shall be possible to proceed with improvement work, there shall be transferred to the International Banking Corporation at Tientsin or Shanghai and put to the credit of the Grand Canal Conservancy Account a sum sufficient to meet six months (6) estimated expenditure in advance, which sum shall be determined by the chief engineer in consultation with the contractors and submitted to the director general for approval, and shall be maintained by subsequent monthly transfers so that so far as possible there will always be six (6) months estimated expenditure in China on deposit with the International Banking Corporation.

3. Working funds transferred to the works shall be deposited in and operated through some responsible bank in China designated by the Government.

4. The cost of all transfers of all funds of whatsoever nature to, from, and in China shall be borne by the Government and included in the rate of exchange to be settled either on the date of transfer or prior thereto as mutually agreed upon between the Government and the International Banking Corporation.

5. The Government shall at all times during construction keep the contractors in funds to meet expenses under this contract; and the contractors shall, not less than seven (7) days before the end of each month, furnish the director general with a lump sum requisition showing the amounts required to be expended for all purposes of the contract work during the then ensuing month. Such requisitions shall be paid by the auditor to the contractors minus any balances then in the hands of the contractors not then expended, after they have been approved by the chief engineer and signed by the director general to signify his approval. Thereupon the contractors shall expend the same only in accordance with the plan prepared and agreed upon as stipulated in Article VI. Funds for the general expense of the Head Works Bureau hereinafter referred to shall be held by the Accounting Department of the Head Works Bureau. A budget of the general expense for each ensuing month shall be agreed upon by the Auditor and contractor and disbursed by the auditor upon requisitions approved and signed by the director general.

6. The Canal Head Works Bureau and Canal Conservancy Bureau and the contractors shall at all times keep proper and correct books in English, showing all transactions of income and expenditure in detail and by items, and both parties shall always have access to and the right to inspect such accounts.

ARTICLE III

1. The term of this present issue shall be twenty (20) years. This issue shall be redeemed in fifteen (15) equal, annual installments, dating from the expiry of the 5th year of the issue, by drawings which shall be held in New York at the National City Bank of New York, which is hereby appointed trustee for the bondholders, in conformity with the amortization table annexed hereto. The serial numbers of bonds drawn shall be published in four (4) daily newspapers at the cost of the Corporation. All interest and amortization payments shall be made in gold, by the National City Bank, and at such places as may be designated by it in such public notice. Bonds presented for payment must be surrendered together with their proper coupons, if any. Interest on drawn bonds ceases on the day of drawing.

2. For reimbursement in connection with the payments of interest and repayments of principal of the loans the National City Bank of New York shall receive a commission of one-quarter of one per cent ($\frac{1}{4}\%$) from the Government on the annual loan service, such commission to be paid half-yearly simultaneously with the interest payments and repayments of principal in accordance with the amortization table hereto annexed.

3. If after five (5) years from the respective dates of these loans the Government should desire to redeem the whole or any portion thereof not then redeemed it may do so by paying an addition of one and one-half per cent ($1\frac{1}{2}\%$) on the par value of the bonds not then redeemed. But in each and every case of such extra redemption the Government shall give six (6) months previous notice in writing to the trustee, and such extra redemption shall be effected by additional drawings, as provided for in the prospectuses of the loans. The redeemed bonds and interest coupons, if any, will be received and canceled by the trustee when they shall be presented for payment at the place designated by the trustee.

4. A Loan Service Account shall be established and maintained in the International Banking Corporation, Peking, during the life of the loan subject to the order of the auditor. In this account shall be deposited from the Special Revenue Account hereinafter referred to fifteen (15) days before each due date, amounts in silver sufficient to meet the interest and amortization payments in gold dollars in New York, or in gold of the national currency of such other places as may be designated by the trustee, which shall be transferred to place of payment through the International Banking Corporation. If the funds of the Special Revenue Account should be insufficient, the deficiency will be made up by funds transferred from the stamp duties, or in defect thereof from other sources. Said Loan Service Account shall at all times be sufficient in amount for six (6) months' use.

ARTICLE IV

1. This loan and all advances and temporary financing are hereby secured by—

(a) The lands to be reclaimed by the work done hereunder owned by the Government, which the Government declared to be approximately three hundred thousand (300,000) mow; and all revenues derived or to be derived by the Government from Government lands affected by the work; also all proceeds from the sale, lease, and/or taxation of all reclaimed and/or improved lands, as well as any special taxes which may be levied by the Government on lands benefited by this work.

(b) All taxes derived or to be derived from all other lands affected by this improvement, which the Government estimates to be an approximate area of five hundred thousand (500,000) mow.

The Government hereby certifies that the estimated area of the above-named districts amounts approximately to eight hundred thousand (800,000) mow, and the area is to be confirmed by a map after an actual survey and furnished the Corporation.

(c) All tolls and taxes derived or to be derived from the use of the section of the Grand Canal improved under this contract, during the life of this loan.

(d) All property purchased or constructed with loan funds.

2. The foregoing property and revenues are not now pledged for any other loan or financial obligation; and so long as this loan or any part thereof shall remain unredeemed, it shall have priority both as regards principal and interest over all future loans and obligations charged thereon and said security shall not be impaired or injured by taxes, likin, imposts, royalties, or in any other manner.

3. All receipts in connection with the securities above mentioned shall be handled by the Head Works Bureau during construction and by the Conservancy Bureau hereinafter mentioned, during the remainder of the life of the loan, and shall be transferred by the Bank of China, if practicable, to and be deposited in a Special Revenue Account in the International Banking Corporation, Peking, Shanghai and/or Tientsin, pending transfer to the Loan Services Account as above-mentioned on the order of the auditor to meet payments due for interest and amortization. After providing for said Loan Service Account, any surplus left from said receipts shall be used, first for the maintenance of the Canal, which shall be maintained in good condition, and second, to be placed at the disposal of the Government.

4. Should the revenue herein pledged be insufficient to meet the amounts required for interest, amortization, loan service, exchange, maintenance of the Canal, or any other obligation of this contract, the Government hereby agrees to make up the deficiency from other sources, and among them specially allocates for this purpose a sufficient portion of the stamp duties levied by virtue of an Act promulgated on October 21, 1912, called the "Yin Hua Shui" as a reserve fund which is free from all encumbrance excepting a pledge of five hundred thousand dollars (Py. $500,000) local currency which is set aside as a reserve fund secondary to the deeds tax for a domestic loan; and during the life of this loan nothing shall be done with respect to the stamp duties which will in any way impair the value or safety of the reserve fund hereby provided.

ARTICLE V

1. The Siems-Carey Railway & Canal Co. is hereby recommended and accepted as the contractor for the work of improvement of the Grand Canal provided for under this contract. It shall have charge and control of everything in connection with the engineering and construction work, shall perform the same efficiently, economically and speedily according to plans made by the chief engineer and approved by the director general who shall send them to the contractors for their approval and execution; shall make all purchases, carefully storing, protecting, and issuing for use all purchases during construction; and shall receive as their sole remuneration a sum equal to ten per cent (10%) of the total amount expended for all purposes including head office expenses, as profits, which sum shall be paid to the contractors in monthly payments at the end of each month's work, requisitions therefore being based on accounts approved by the auditor and submitted to the director general for his approval and signature.

2. The Government will provide sufficient protection for the work and all properties of the contractors and/or Corporation as well as for Chinese and foreigners employed thereon.

3. In the purchase of materials preference shall be given to Chinese materials when price and quality are at least equal; otherwise American materials and machines may be used when the price does not exceed the price of the same quality in other foreign markets.

4. All necessary imports for the purpose of this improvement shall be exempt from duties, taxes and imposts.

5. The work on the Shantung section shall be completed within thirty (30) months from the date of payment of the first estimate to the contractors, unless delayed by some unforeseen occurrence.

ARTICLE VI

1. The director general is hereby appointed by the Government and acts as its representative respecting the work to be done hereunder. He shall, upon the commencement of this work, establish at Tsi-ning-hsien and maintain there or at such other place as may be convenient, a bureau known during construction as the Head Works Bureau and afterwards during the life of the loan as the Canal Conservancy Bureau. In this bureau there shall be three (3) responsible departments, viz:

(1) A General Affairs Department with an officer in charge appointed by the director general. This department shall take charge of all work in connection with miscellaneous affairs.

(2) An Engineering Department in charge of an American chief engineer during and until completion of construction, and afterwards during the life of any and all bonds, in charge of a Chinese engineer.

Both engineers shall be appointed, removed, and/or replaced by the director general upon consultation with and/or upon the recommendation of the Corporation, and shall always be persons nominated by the Corporation and whose professional reputation and experience are first-class.

During construction said American chief engineer shall be the inspector and consulting engineer of the Government for this work. He shall, with the approval of the contractors, make all plans of improvement and drainage contemplated. If the work planned appears not feasible or the cost not reasonable to the contractors, the director general will cause the plans to be revised to make them feasible and the cost reasonable as aforesaid. The work must be performed to the satisfaction of the chief engineer, and he shall have power to refuse his approval to lump sum requisitions until he is satisfied that the work is or will be performed according to the plans above specified. The director general's approval and signature must be obtained by the chief engineer on all lump sum requisitions of the contractors. The director general or his representative shall have full powers of inspection of the work at any time. Upon completion of the Canal improvement work, the Chinese chief engineer will supervise the maintenance of the Canal, which shall be maintained in good condition.

(3) An Accounts Department in charge of an American auditor appointed, removed, and/or replaced by the director general upon consultation with and/or upon the recommendation of the Corporation, and who shall always during the life of the loan by [he?] an American nominated by the Corporation.

This auditor shall have charge of all receipts and disbursements in connection with the fulfillment of this agreement and shall supervise the collection of the revenues pledged excepting the stamp duties during the life of the loan. He shall attend to the transfers of funds to, from, and in China. He shall make all withdrawals of loan funds; but only upon requisitions bearing the proper signatures herein provided for. He shall, as herein stated, handle the payment of the interest and amortization charges, the payment of maintenance and operating costs, and turn over the balance of the revenue above the amount required to be kept in the Loan Service Account to the Government.

2. Should the American auditor have suggestions to make regarding the revenues he may lay them before the director general who shall, if they are practicable, put them into execution.

3. No subordinate officer shall be appointed in any of said departments until after the approval of the director general has been secured.

4. Should the Government desire to engage advisors relating to the reclaiming of land, managing reclaimed land, and developing the communication facilities of the Grand Canal, it will request the Corporation to recommend suitable persons for approval and appointment.

5. The salaries of the chief engineer and auditor shall be arranged between the director general and the Corporation.

ARTICLE VII

1. If there should be a breach of this agreement, then all the revenues pledged as security shall, upon request of the Corporation, be transferred to and administered by the Corporation or the Maritime Customs in the interest of the bondholders.

ARTICLE VIII

1. In the event of any bond or bonds issued by this loan being lost, stolen, or destroyed, the Corporation may notify the Chinese Minister at Washington who shall authorize the Corporation to insert an advertisement in four (4) newspapers stating that the payment of such bond or bonds had been stopped, and to take such other steps as may appear advisable or necessary according to the laws and customs of the country concerned. Should any bond or bonds be destroyed, or should such lost or stolen bond or bonds not be recovered after a lapse of time fixed by the Corporation, the Chinese Minister at Washington shall execute a duplicate bond or duplicate bonds for a like amount and deliver the same to the Corporation, representing the owner or owners of such lost, stolen or destroyed bond or bonds, which Corporation shall pay all expenses in connection with such delivery and execution of such duplicate bond or bonds for the account of the owner or owners of such bond or bonds.

2. All bonds, coupons and payments made and received in connection with the service of this loan shall be exempt from all Chinese taxes and imposts during the currency of this loan.

ARTICLE IX

1. Of the six million dollars (G$6,000,000) of bonds to be issued, three million five hundred thousand dollars (G$3,500,000) shall be issued in America and two million five hundred thousand (G$2,500,000) thereof may be issued elsewhere. Any portion or series thereof and any increase thereof shall be issued in the same proportion.

2. The Corporation may, with the approval of the Chinese Government, transfer or delegate any part of its rights and power hereunder, provided that the control of the Engineering Department, Accounts Department and Contracting control shall not be transferred or delegated to any foreign national other than American.

ARTICLE X

1. In the event that in the future money is to be borrowed to improve the section of the Grand Canal from Tai-Chuang to Chinkiang in Kiangsu Province, application therefor will be first made to the American International Corporation.

ARTICLE XI

1. This agreement shall be executed in quadruplicate in the Chinese and English languages, each text being a correct translation of the other. In the event of any dispute arising at any time respecting the construction or meaning of this agreement, the English text shall prevail.

2. One copy of both Chinese and English texts of this agreement shall be delivered to and held by each of the following:

- (1) The Directorate General of Flood Relief and Conservancy.
- (2) The Ministry of Foreign Affairs.
- (3) The American Legation, Peking.
- (4) The Corporation.

ARTICLE XII

1. This agreement shall take effect on the date of transmission of a copy thereof by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the Government to the Legation of the United States of America at Peking.

TAXATION OF FOREIGNERS IN CHINA⁴⁸

File No. 803.512/71

Minister Reinsch to the Secretary of State

No. 1215

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Peking, September 29, 1916.

SIR: With reference to the Legation's despatch No. 686 of July 12, 1915,⁴⁷ and to the Department's instruction No. 324 of September 16, 1915,⁴⁸ I have the honor to transmit herewith a copy of a further despatch (No. 310 of August 21) from the Consulate General at Hankow, in regard to the so-called 99 Mercantile Tax, together with the instruction (No. 1873) which the Legation addressed to the Consulate General on the 27th instant in reply thereto.

In view of the Standard Oil Company's being able to avail itself of the method contemplated in the treaties with China for exemption from taxation in the interior of whatever nature, namely the taking out of transit-passes for goods shipped into the interior, the Legation has felt it necessary to inform this company that if it finds the pao-shang-piao system more advantageous than the transit-pass system, it may be assumed to accept the defects as well as the advantages of that arrangement.

The Consul General at Hankow was accordingly instructed that the Legation can undertake to do no more than secure the Standard Oil Company against actual discrimination or other demonstrably unlawful acts of the Chinese authorities, if it chooses to carry on its business in Kiangsi Province under the pao-shang-piao system. I hope that the Legation's attitude in this matter will receive the Department's approval.

AMERICAN CONSULATE GENERAL,
Hankow, August 21, 1916.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit a copy of a letter from the Standard Oil Company of New York, Kiukiang Branch, dated August 17, 1916, regarding the efforts of the Kiangsi officials to collect the 99 Mercantile Tax. Inasmuch as this tax does not seem to be any more regular than it was a year ago when various protests were filed by this office against it, it would seem a suitable moment to renew the protest but for the fact that the question has been referred to the Legation for action. It appears that the Kiangsi officials in certain districts intend to collect the tax unless strong protests be filed against such, so that foreign merchandise will be protected from this discriminatory tax. If further action is advisable by this office I would request instructions regarding the mode that it shall take. It is doubtful whether anything of a permanent character can be accomplished by this Consulate General, and certainly the result will not be nearly so effective as it will be should the Legation procure a settlement in Peking.

STANDARD OIL COMPANY OF NEW YORK,
Kiukiang, China, August 17, 1916.

The AMERICAN CONSUL GENERAL, Hankow.

SIR: The further efforts of Kiangsi officials to collect the "99 Tax," reported in our letter of July 27, '16, are continued and have been extended to other points, notably Kingtehchen and Kanchowki. Unless prompt action is taken, it is possible that we shall be obliged to permit our agents to compromise the question in order to continue business.

In this connection we should advise you that the new British Consul at this port has expressed entire willingness to adopt the same attitude which we have assumed and is already in communication with the officials at Nanchang. We understand that, in reply, the officials have reverted to their old counterattack on general trading rights of foreigners in the interior. As we have frequently stated, we wish to avoid, if possible, a reopening of this question of trade rights.

Very truly yours,

STANDARD OIL COMPANY OF NEW YORK, KIUKIANG BRANCH
 HERBERT R. EVERALL, Attorney

P. S.—We are just in receipt of a telegram from our agent at Kingtehchen requesting immediate assistance and support with reference to this question.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Peking, October 31, 1916.

SIR: I have the honor to enclose herewith copies of despatches under dates of April 4 and September 21 last (Nos. 39 and 76, respectively) from the Consul at Changsha, in regard to the collection of likin dues on foreign goods entering the walled city of Changsha; also a copy of the Legation's instruction (No. 1924) of the 21st instant, on this subject.

It seems to the Legation that the Consul's contention in this matter is fully warranted by the Department's instruction to the Consul at Nanking (No. 7, of which a copy was enclosed with the Department's instruction No. 161 of September 30, 1914)⁴⁹ under date of September 23, 1914, in the course of which it is stated that this Government has heretofore insisted that when a city is opened to foreign residence and trade it is the city and not an adjacent district that is open and that therefore likin can not be collected on goods carried from the landing or settlement into the city.

I have, however, the honor to request such specific instructions as the Department may see fit to give upon consideration of this particular case as presented in the despatches from Changsha which are herewith enclosed, with a view to the eventuality of having to take up with the Foreign Office a demand that it recognize and give effect to such a construction of the Sino-Japanese Treaty of 1903 as would include the walled city within the limitations of the Port of Changsha as open to trade.

AMERICAN CONSULAR SERVICE,
Changsha, April 4, 1916.

SIR: I have the honor to report that some days ago I received a complaint from the local manager of the Singer Sewing Machine Company to the effect that the stations of the local likin office located at the city gates of Changsha were refusing to allow foreign imported goods to enter the city gates without payment of likin. I protested to the local Commissioner of Finance by telephone requesting that orders be given permitting the goods to enter the city without the payment of likin as Changsha was an open port. I was unable to get any satisfaction, the answer being that that part of Changsha which is located within the walls was and always had been considered to be part of the interior of the country (nei ti) as distinguished from the commercial settlement under the treaties.

Now as a matter of fact the setting apart of a commercial settlement at Changsha has never been definitely accomplished. The port was opened in 1904 under the provisions of the Japanese Commercial Treaty of 1903, Article X, which contains the following provision:

The Chinese Government agree to open to foreign trade, within six months from the exchange of the ratifications of this treaty, Changsha-fu, in the Province of Hunan, on the same footing as the ports already opened to foreign trade. Foreigners residing in this open port are to observe the municipal and police regulations on the same footing as Chinese residents, and they are not to be entitled to establish a municipality and police of their own within the limits of the treaty port, except with the consent of the Chinese authorities.

I therefore wrote to the Commissioner of Finance for the Province of Hunan the following letter of protest on March 28.

"SIR: I have the honor to request that instructions be issued to the stations of the likin office located at the city gates of Changsha to refrain from the collection of likin on foreign merchandise imported into China which has paid the usual duties prescribed by the treaties. It has come to my attention that these stations have been in the habit of levying likin on goods of foreign origin which have already paid the usual customs duties provided by the treaties. This is illegal as the city of Changsha is an open port within which likin may not be levied on such goods.

"I am informed that the likin officer of the Tai Hsi Men is now holding up a parcel of goods belonging to the Singer Sewing Machine Company for payment of likin. I request that instructions be issued to this likin station to release this parcel of goods without delay.

"I have [etc.]"

I have not received a reply to this protest. On the other hand the Singer Sewing Machine Company again had occasion to bring goods to their stock in the city shortly after the above letter was sent. These goods were held up at the city gate. As the firm was in urgent need of the goods I told the manager that he should pay the likin and obtain a receipt for the money. I asked him to forward me the receipt which he has done and I have this day written another letter to the Commissioner for Finance requesting that the money covered by the receipt be refunded to the Singer Sewing Machine Company.

No. 76

AMERICAN CONSULAR SERVICE,
Changsha, September 21, 1916.

SIR: I have the honor to refer to my despatch of April 4 last on the above subject, No. 39, in which I reported that I had filed a protest with the Commissioner of Finance against the collection of likin by likin stations at the city gates of Changsha on foreign goods passing into the walled city. At the time that I wrote this despatch, the Commissioner of Finance had not made a ruling in this matter other than to state over the telephone the contention that the area within the city walls of Changsha formed part of what is now known as the Chinese interior or "nei ti." On April 14, however, I received from the Commissioner of Foreign Affairs a letter covering this matter and referring to a communication which he had received from the provincial Commissioner of Finance covering the whole question. I enclose copy of Chinese text of this letter as well as a copy of translation of same for the Legation's information.⁴ The Legation will note that the sum and substance of his contention in this matter is that the area within the city walls of Changsha is part of the Chinese interior and that it follows that goods taken into this area are liable to payment of likin. He quotes from regulations which he states were drawn up conjointly between the customs and the likin offices covering the procedure to be followed in the collection of likin on foreign goods imported into Changsha and states that Clause IV of these regulations stipulates that

"goods brought by steamer shall be taken from the steamer to the jetty and to the commercial port and stored in the foreign godowns. Such goods shall be free temporarily from the payment of likin. Later, when such goods are sold to Chinese merchants and before they leave the commercial port and the foreign godown the foreign firm and the merchant concerned shall report the weight and number of packages, so that when the goods leave the commercial port and come from the foreign godown, the likin officers may examine and collect the necessary amount of likin taxed. If the goods are taken to native godowns or to shops where they may be sold, then such goods must pay the likin immediately as required by the regulations."

In reply to this letter I wrote to the Commissioner of Foreign Affairs on April 24, copy of which letter I enclose,⁴ denying the validity of the regulations quoted by the Commissioner of Finance which had apparently been drawn up without the consent or agreement of the American Government, and again asking that instructions be issued for the discontinuance of the collection of likin at the city gates of Changsha on foreign goods. I also pointed out, as the Legation will note, that payment of this charge in the past by the Singer Sewing Machine Co. could not be considered to constitute a precedent in favor of its collection.

There was no further outcome of this matter. Likin continued to be assessed and during the summer the Singer Sewing Machine Co. forwarded to me receipts issued to them, all of which I handed over to the Chinese authorities asking for a refund of assessments thus illegally paid. On the 5th instant I received a second communication from the Commissioner of Foreign Affairs, acknowledging the receipt of two letters with which I had forwarded likin receipts. He returned all of these receipts to me and again repeated the substance of the first letter from the Commissioner of Foreign Affairs referred to above in support of his contention that the likin authorities were acting within their rights in demanding payment of likin on foreign goods brought into the city of Changsha. In this letter he again refers to the regulations for collection of likin drawn up in conjunction with the Commissioner of Customs at the time of the opening of the Port of Changsha, and he states that these regulations were notified to the various consuls in the 30th year of Kuang Hsi by the Superintendent of Customs at Changsha. He admits that in the 32d year of Kuang Hsi protest against these regulations was made to the Central Government at Peking through the British and Japanese Legations. He also states that a second protest was filed by the Japanese Legation in 1912; he states that the dues have been collected from the time of the enforcement of the regulations down to the present. He again quotes from the regulations a passage which corresponds in all respects to Article IV quoted above, and uses this provision of the regulations as a basis for determining the limits of the Treaty Port of Changsha. Or, in other words, for delimiting the area within which foreign goods may be brought without payment of likin and other charges. He contends that the area of the trade settlement or commercial port of Changsha was determined at an early date and that although it is true that Changsha is a treaty port "open to international trade, it cannot be held that foreign and Chinese godowns and warehouses both inside and outside of the walled city are within the area of the open treaty port." He again argues that payment of likin in the past forms a precedent for the proper collection of likin now and in the future, and contends that there is no infraction of treaty stipulations in that when the goods pass through the city gates they have left the confines of the Treaty Port of Changsha.

On the 6th instant I replied to him and endeavored to answer his arguments, and I enclose herewith a copy of my letter.* I returned the likin receipts to him and again asked that instructions be issued for the discontinuance of the collection of likin on foreign goods passing through the city gates of Changsha. I informed him that I had no knowledge of any such regulations as had been mentioned by him and his predecessor, establishing a procedure for the collection of likin on foreign goods imported into Changsha, nor did I have any knowledge of consent to such regulations on the part of my Government. In ending, I asked the Commissioner to forward me two copies of the regulations which he stated had been drawn up to govern the collection of likin on foreign goods imported into Changsha. I have not as yet received any reply to this letter, but with the Legation's approval if I do not receive some favorable action through the office of the Commissioner of Foreign Affairs, I propose to take the matter up with the Civil Governor and later with the Legation, if necessary.

Thus far the Singer Sewing Machine Co. is the only American firm that has filed a protest with this office against the payment of likin which is collected at the city gates on goods carried into the walled city of Changsha. I am aware, however, that likin is collected on all cargo which goes into the city of Changsha. It is being successfully collected, for it is impossible to get goods into the city without passing the gates and the stations at the gates refuse to permit goods to enter until payment is made.

SIR: Referring to the despatch (No. 76) of September 21, in which you reported further concerning the collection of likin at the city gates of Changsha I have to inform you that the legation approves of your contention that the area within the walls of the city is naturally and of course included within the port as open to foreign trade in pursuance of the provisions of the Sino-Japanese Treaty of 1903.

It is noted that you are still awaiting copies of the likin regulations which the Chinese authorities maintain to be applicable, and that you contemplate further negotiations with the Commissioner for Foreign Affairs and with the civil governor; while awaiting the outcome of your representations to the local authorities the Legation is referring to the Department your despatches of April 4 and September 21 (Nos. 39 and 76 respectively), with the request to be authorized, in the event of your obtaining no satisfactory solution locally, to insist that the Foreign Office recognize and give effect to the construction of the treaty for which you are contending.

SIR: Referring to the Legation's instruction No. 1873 of September 27, 1916, regarding the 99 Mercantile Tax and suggesting the use of the transit passes by the Standard Oil Company, I have the honor to state that the Standard Oil Company's branch at Kiukiang has advised this office that they have now bonded their tanks as from November 1, 1916, and will immediately commence shipping under transit passes to inland points.

The Standard Oil Company in a letter of November 1, 1916, states that "We shall be glad if you would kindly, at your earliest convenience, advise the Legation of this our decision and action, requesting the matter of the 99 Tax be again taken up with the Chinese authorities, with a view to the immediate abolishment of same."

This, it is thought, is in line with the Legation's instruction to this office above referred to.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Peking, November 13, 1916.

SIR: The Legation has received and taken note of the despatch (No. 340) of the 3d instant in which you report that the Standard Oil Company's branch at Kiukiang has advised you of its having bonded its tanks as from the 1st instant and that it will immediately commence shipping under transit passes to inland points, as suggested in the Legation's instruction of September 27 last (No. 1873) in regard to the 99 Mercantile Tax.

With reference to the company's request that the Legation again take up with the Chinese authorities the matter of the 99 Tax, "with a view to the immediate abolishment of same," the Legation has to observe that this seems to indicate a misapprehension that that tax is in itself illegal. The Legation perceives no basis for such an assumption, and it is not prepared to insist that the tax be discontinued save in so far as concerns its misapplication to shipments which have, by the taking out of transit passes, become entitled to exemption from that and other inland charges.

It is desired that you bring this view to the attention of the agent of the Standard Oil Company at Kiukiang and advise him that the Legation looks to the company to furnish it the necessary concrete and definite evidence upon which to base such action as it may find appropriate, in the event that the provincial authorities levy or seek to levy the 99 Mercantile Tax upon consignments covered by transit passes.

No. 529

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, November 25, 1916.

SIR: The department acknowledges the receipt of your despatch No. 1215 of September 29, 1916, with enclosure, in regard to the so-called 99 Mercantile Tax.

In the Department's No. 324 of September 16, 1915, the Department stated that it would be well to obtain a copy of the pao-shang-piao regulations or a receipt showing the payment of such a tax in order to determine the propriety of the Standard Oil Company's refusal to pay the 99 Mercantile Tax.

The Department infers from your despatch under acknowledgment that no evidence of the character mentioned has been obtained nor has any other evidence of a definitive character been submitted relative to the first-named tax.

However, in this connection it is observed that the Legation's No. 686 of July 12, 1915, quotes from a communication addressed by the Governor of Kiangsi to the American Consulate General at Hankow on January 12, 1915, the statement that when goods have paid the pao-shang-piao, "the goods will not be taxed a second time." It would seem that the governor of the province which levies the two taxes mentioned might well be accepted as good authority with regard to the scope and effect of one or both of these taxes, especially when, as appears, the regulations putting the tax or taxes in effect are not obtainable.

Therefore, the Department is constrained to observe that it cannot fully approve of the instructions issued by you on August 21, 1916, on the subject of the 99 Mercantile Tax. The Department is of the opinion that you would have been justified in accepting the statement before quoted of the Governor of Kiangsi as a sufficient basis for a protest against the attempt to collect a second tax from the Standard Oil Company of New York.

It is suggested that you instruct the Consul General at Hankow that, if no later evidence of a contradictory character has come to light, the Legation is prepared to protest, in reliance upon the said interpretation placed upon the pao-shang-piao tax by the Governor of Kiangsi.

The Department approves the action of Consul Johnson in this matter and the Legation's instruction to him of October 21, 1916 (C. No. 1924). You will so inform Consul Johnson and express to him the Department's hope that the local authorities will yet recognize as fully warranted the construction of the treaty for which he is contending, thus obviating the necessity of an appeal by the Legation to the Foreign Office for relief.

In particular reference to the statement that an instruction has been sent to the Minister to China to enter into negotiations to request the amendment of the stamp tax law, so that Americans in China will be more willing to pay the tax,

I beg to inquire whether the reference is to the Department's No. 90 of May 4, 1914,⁵² directing that, in the event of approval of the regulations by the other Treaty Powers, an endeavor should be made to secure such a revision as would make them more acceptable to residents in China.

In this connection I have to report that no collective action on this matter has been taken up by the Diplomatic Body subsequent to what has already been reported to the Department, and that the Legation is not aware of any action having been taken in reference to it by individual nations, save such as indicated in the enclosed translation of note from the Foreign Office dated December 26 last.

SIR: Referring to the matter of the extension of the operation of the stamp tax I have the honor to state that a despatch has been received from the Chinese Minister at Washington as follows:

A reply has been received from the American Department of State on this subject as follows:

"In reference to the matter of the extension of the operation of the stamp tax, an inquiry was received from the Minister to China, to which an answer was sent, stating that this Government accepts in principle the collection of the tax by the Chinese Government from Americans in China. An instruction has been sent to the Minister to China to enter into negotiations to request the amendment of the stamp tax law, so that Americans in China will be more willing to pay the tax. After the Governments of the different countries have all granted their consent it can be put into force."

This Ministry is most grateful for the kind assistance of your Government. The Governments of Portugal and Brazil have now severally given their consent to the enforcement of the tax. The Governments of the other nations have not yet replied formally stating what views they take regarding this matter. This Ministry has now addressed separate notes to the Ministers of the said Powers at Peking, requesting that they urge their respective Governments to express their agreement at an early date and to send a reply.

I am accordingly addressing this note to you for your information and cooperation. Upon receipt of replies from the Governments of the other nations I will again address you in order that negotiations may be facilitated.

SIR: The Department acknowledges the receipt of your despatch No. 1330 of January 3, 1917, with its enclosures, relating to the liability of Americans for payment of the stamp taxes imposed by the Chinese Government.

Answering your inquiry whether the reference in the note (No. 549) of December 26, 1916, from the Minister for Foreign Affairs, to an instruction having been sent by the Department to you with reference to this matter relates to the Department's instruction No. 90 of May 4, 1914, I have to state that your surmise in this regard is correct. The Department's records show that the Chinese Minister at Washington in a note (No. 15), dated May 15, 1914,⁵³ was informed by the Department in the sense described in the quoted portion of the note of December 26, 1916, to you from the Minister for Foreign Affairs.

DEMANDS OF JAPAN UPON CHINA IN CONSEQUENCE OF A CLASH

No. 1186

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Peking, September 4, 1916.

SIR: I have the honor to enclose, for your information, copy of a despatch from the Consulate General at Mukden, which deals with the collision between Chinese and Japanese troops at Chengchiatun and the results arising therefrom:

As a result of the killing of certain Japanese soldiers at Chengchiatun, the Japanese Government, through its Minister here, has on September 2 made certain demands upon the Chinese Government. I am confidentially informed that they are as follows:

Group I: Action which it is desirable for the Chinese Government to take—

- (a) The employment of Japanese military advisers in Manchuria and Inner Mongolia;
- (b) The employment of Japanese instructors in military schools;
- (c) Indemnity for the lives of the persons killed; and
- (d) An apology.

Group II: Action which the Japanese Government will find itself forced categorically to insist upon—

- (a) That in all localities in Manchuria and Eastern Mongolia where numbers of Japanese sojourn there shall be established a Japanese police service;
- (b) That throughout Manchuria and Eastern Mongolia the Chinese police shall be provided with Japanese advisers;
- (c) That all the officers of the Chinese brigade involved in the Chengchiatun affair shall be dismissed and degraded; and
- (d) That strict orders shall be issued to the military in Manchuria under no circumstances to take action against any Japanese.

As in the case of the demands of 1915, the strictest secrecy was enjoined upon the Chinese Foreign Office by the Japanese Minister.

A certain show of moderation is imparted to this list, undoubtedly with a purpose, by including indemnity and apology under things desirable, but not categorically demanded. The thing that is categorically demanded, i. e. the policing of Manchurian towns by the Japanese and the control by them of the Chinese police forces throughout those regions, strikes a blow against the sovereignty of China in Manchuria which gives this affair a very serious character. The degree to which this is resented by the Chinese is apparent from the newspaper discussions (published in the Peking Gazette) which are enclosed herewith.⁴

It may be necessary for the Chinese to submit to the demands framed by Japan * * *.

*Consular General Heintzleman to Minister Reinsch*AMERICAN CONSULATE GENERAL, Mukden, August 18, 1916.

SIR: I have the honor to report that for several months serious disturbances have occurred in a region extending from Ssuningkai to Chengchiatun and from Changchun to Taonanfu far into Mongolia. The developments of the trouble can be traced with exactitude. Its inception was with the Russians who began in April last to supply with arms the various Mongol Banners, some seventeen in number, inhabiting Kulun or the Hailar district of Heilungkiang. In 1911 Barga, which is the popular local name for this region, seceded from China, and though the Chinese by force, bribery and intrigue have ever since attempted to resubjugate the area, it remains practically independent, relying for its existence on its success in playing the three powers one against the other. Although theoretically incorporated in this province and Heilungkiang, the Russians regard it as part of Autonomous Mongolia. The motives underlying Russian action are a desire to consolidate and strengthen those Mongol tribes bordering on Siberia and North Manchuria and thus preserve a semi-independent state already set up through Russian influence which is to serve as a buffer between her and China, and also in opposing the Japanese advance into North Manchuria and Eastern Mongolia. The Japanese, knowing perfectly well all that was going on, determined to turn the situation to their advantage. They encouraged those Mongols of the Korchin Banner, whose land lies around Taonanfu, most of whom they are able to influence, to form a political party, in conjunction with Manchu loyalists, to fight ostensibly for the restoration of the monarchy. To these disorderly elements were joined the ordinary robber bands also organized and equipped by the Japanese. Ssuningkai and Changchun are the principal centers for the recruitment of bandits, where they are protected by the Japanese and supplied with the necessary military outfit. Chengchiatun and Taonanfu may be considered rather as the bases of operations. The latter is the headquarters of the Japanese general secret staff, to which it is said no less than fifty Japanese general staff officers are attached. For the past eighteen months a Japanese consular agent has also been stationed there.

Chinese troops about 23 ying in number under General Wu Hsing-chuan have attempted from Taonanfu to suppress these revolutionists and marauders but in every engagement thus far the Chinese have been worsted. In a recent encounter General Wu was seriously wounded, although the Chinese for obvious reasons have thus far declined to admit it. Additional Chinese troops comprising 22 ying have been despatched from Kirin and Mukden to the fighting zone but they have been unable to relieve the situation. Wherever they met the insurgents (Chinese reports to the contrary) they suffered defeat. It is known to the Chinese authorities that the insurgents are well organized and led by Japanese, and that they follow tactics which only could be possible under expert leaders, and by which the Chinese are always outwitted. The number of the insurgents is given at 3,000. They are equipped with five machines rifles, and they also have in their possession such modern weapons as hand grenades, explosives, Mauser pistols and Japanese rifles. On the 15th instant the insurgents captured Kuochiatien, a town situated west of Changchun. In Changchun anarchical conditions prevail. Murder and plunder are daily occurrences. The Chinese city is, however, well guarded against the insurgents and closed at night. The Japanese observe a cold reserve and do not hinder in the least the free play of the bandits even in their own concession.

In Chengchiatun a fight developed on the 13th instant between the Japanese troops stationed there and the Chinese garrison by which the Japanese were outnumbered and consequently defeated and for a time besieged. Ten Japanese, including a police, were killed. Six, including the lieutenant leading the squad of Japanese soldiers, were wounded, while there are a few missing. The Chinese losses are given as four killed and nine wounded.

The facts preceding this incident are, I have good reason to believe, as follows: The Chinese commander of the local garrison knowing that the Japanese were assisting the insurgents and that the Japanese troops were hindering operations against the insurgents, asked the Japanese commander to withdraw his forces from Chengchiatun temporarily. The Japanese officer replied that he would do so on condition that he received an assurance that the Chinese would protect Japanese life and property. The Chinese officer declined to give this guarantee and renewed his request. A Japanese orderly upon attempting to deliver a further communication on the subject at the Chinese barracks was told the commander was absent. He began to use abusive language to the Chinese guard, who retaliated by beating him. A Japanese police then went to the barracks to demand an explanation. The Chinese refused to listen and leveled their guns at him. He thereupon returned and set out again with a guard of thirty Japanese soldiers under a lieutenant. Upon appearing at the Chinese barracks they attempted to force an entrance when they were resisted by a volley of fire. The Japanese responded but, being outnumbered, were compelled to retire. The fighting continued until the Japanese reached their barracks. The losses on both sides were as described above. Conditions soon became precarious. The Japanese, learning of the incident and realizing that their small contingent was surrounded by 3,000 Chinese troops, sent reinforcements from neighboring towns in quick marching order. * * * The Chinese as well have sent reinforcements to Chengchiatun. The Chinese troops are supplied with ammunition by way of Hsinminfu. The Japanese consider the forces already despatched as too weak and express doubt that they will become masters of the situation. This gives the impression that new reinforcement will be sent.

On receiving news of the conflict, Governor Chang ordered the commander of the Chinese troops at Chengchiatun to cease hostilities and withdraw his troops three miles from the city. In this connection it is significant that while the Chinese troops are being removed the Japanese military forces are being strengthened. General Chang also sent two deputies to the scene to investigate and make a report, while Major Machino, military adviser to the Mukden government, has proceeded to Ssupinghai to discuss the affair with Major-General Fujii, commander of the Japanese railway guard in South Manchuria. Under instructions from Tokyo the Japanese Acting Consul General at Mukden has gone to Chengchiatun to investigate the facts of the case. The Special Delegate for Foreign Affairs called on the 14th instant at the Japanese Consulate General here to express regrets at the occurrence. General Chang also sent telegrams expressing regret to the Governor General of Kwantung and to the Army Department of the Kwantung Government. The magistrate of Chengchiatun, conceiving it to be his duty as a local official, called upon the Japanese Vice Consul to express his regrets at what had occurred. He was accompanied by the chairman of the local chamber of commerce. Upon presenting themselves at the vice consulate, the magistrate was detained and was only released when he offered his son as a substitute, who is now being held as a hostage. The vice Consulate at Chengchiatun is a branch of the Mukden consulate general and was opened August 1, 1916. * * *

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Peking, September 5, 1916, 6 p. m.

As a result of a collision between Chinese and Japanese troops at Chengchiatun, Mongolia, in connection with military action against so-called Mongolian revolutionists, instigated, equipped and directed by Japanese in a similar way as in Shantung recently, the Japanese Government is now demanding of the Chinese Government creation of Japanese police forces in places where Japanese sojourn and the appointment of Japanese advisers to the China police; it is also suggesting appointment of Japanese military advisers and instructors; all this in addition to the usual indemnities and apologies.

While these demands refer to Manchuria and Eastern Mongolia, yet, unless the Chinese are able to safeguard themselves, dangerous precedent for all of China would be established.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, September 6, 1916, 2 p. m.

Newspapers here report that because of trouble in Eastern Mongolia Japan has made demands upon China as follows:

China voluntarily to offer 4 concessions;

1. To employ Japanese officers as advisers to Chinese troops in South Manchuria and Eastern Mongolia;
2. To employ Japanese military officers as instructors in Chinese public schools;
3. The Governor General at Mukden to go in person and apologize to the Japanese Governor General at Dairen and the Japanese Consul at Mukden;
4. China to make monetary compensation to the families of Japanese killed at Chengchiatun;

Japan further demands:

1. The punishment of the commanding officer of troops at Chengchiatun, also called Liaoyuan;
2. The dismissal of other officers of that force and punishment of officers and men immediately concerned in the attack;
3. Issue of strict orders to all Chinese troops in South Manchuria and Eastern Mongolia to avoid interference with Japanese troops or with words and actions of Japanese, these orders to be given by proclamation to all officers in those regions;
4. China to recognize that Japan has special interests in South Manchuria and Eastern Mongolia which justify possession of right to appoint police there and that Chinese officials in South Manchuria should employ more Japanese police advisers.

Bring to attention of Foreign Office and say report has greatly disturbed this Government which hopes it is not true. Request statement of facts.

AMERICAN EMBASSY,
Tokyo, September 11, 1916, 7 p. m.

Your telegram of September 6, 2 p. m. I called upon the Minister for Foreign Affairs and presented to him a paraphrase of the demands reported to have been made by Japan on China. The Minister told me that although certain ones of those items telegraphed to the Embassy by the Department were approximately correct, the whole list of demands was so full of untruths and exaggerations as to give it an entirely false color. He stated definitely that the Root-Takahira agreement was in no wise impaired by the demands made and that there was no intention of infringing the sovereignty of [China], and he said that the Chengchiatun affair was particularly serious, since it was in reality a clash between Chinese and Japanese troops, and that the civil authorities were in no wise responsible. The Japanese Government felt that they must make a recurrence of such affairs impossible. A guaranty had therefore been demanded of the Chinese Government to this [end] in addition to proper apologies and compensation for the wrong done. To this end Baron Hayashi had been also instructed to request that the Chinese Government voluntarily replace the German instructors in the Chinese Cadet School with Japanese officers whom the former had replaced; that the Chinese Government should ask for Japanese officers who were to be stationed in Chinese garrisons in South Manchuria and Eastern Mongolia for advice in matters affecting the Japanese, and, as an extension of its extraterritorial rights, the Japanese Government should be permitted to station Japanese policemen in those towns where the Japanese settlements were large in the same manner in which Japanese Consulates in the same region had policemen attached to them, this to be done for the safety of the Japanese residents; and the Minister said he believed South Manchuria as Eastern Mongolia had no cities of such a nature at present. In order to make it easier for the Chinese authorities with their own people, it had been suggested that these guaranties should be offered by them. In conclusion the Minister [said] that Baron Hayashi had been instructed to communicate to the American Minister at Peking or any other colleague who asked for information the substance of the demands in question.

Before making any statement the Minister for Foreign Affairs asked me why I made these inquiries, saying that as there was nothing conflicting with the Root-Takahira Convention, he could not recognize [the right] on our part to interfere; but that he should be willing to discuss the matter with me personally and confidentially as he preferred to avoid a misunderstanding. He gave me a full account of the occurrence and said that the Chinese Governor at Mukden had voluntarily offered to send his chief of staff to apologize in person.

Your telegram of September 11, 7 p. m. In view of the provisions of item five in Root-Takahira notes, Department is surprised that Minister for Foreign Affairs should question propriety of enquiry. The presence of Japanese troops in Mongolia and extension of police jurisdiction of Japan appear to Department to affect status quo as described in notes mentioned and to justify the two Governments communicating with each other as therein agreed.

No. 616

AMERICAN EMBASSY,
Tokyo, September 18, 1916.

SIR: With reference to my telegram to the Department of September 11, 7 p. m., I have the honor to inform you that on the 16th instant Mr. Chang Tsung-hsiang, the Chinese Minister here, who recently succeeded Mr. Lou Tsung-yu, sent Mr. Tsur, the Second Secretary of the Legation, to the Secretary of this Embassy with a confidential message for me in reference to Japan's pending demands upon China growing out of the situation in Chengchiatun. Mr. Tsur said that the Minister wished me to be informed as to the "true character" of the Japanese representations which on September 3 had been informally handed to him by the Foreign Office here, and communicated to the Government at Peking by Baron Hayashi.

The representations, he said, consisted of four "demands" and four "requests," but the phraseology employed in the latter was practically mandatory, the Japanese Government "leaving it to the Chinese Government to act favorably upon these requests without compelling the Japanese Government to use force."

The series, he stated, was as follows:

I. Demands:

1. The chief military officer in Chengchiatun district shall be dismissed. (This, Mr. Tsur states, is a very strong demand, as there is an army corps there and the chief military officer is of the rank of lieutenant general.)
2. All military officers connected with this case shall be punished.
3. Chinese troops in Manchuria and Mongolia shall be cautioned to be more courteous to Japanese.
4. Japanese police shall be permitted in places where Japanese reside.

II. Requests:

1. Manchuria and Mongolia shall employ Japanese military advisers. (Mr. Tsur said that Baron Hayashi had implied, in conversation with the Foreign Office at Peking, that it was desired that each army corps have a separate military adviser. This, Mr. Tsur stated, would make four advisers in all, and Mr. Chang is of opinion that to grant this would be to hand over the military power of these sections to Japan.)
2. The Peking Military College and other military colleges shall employ Japanese military officers.
3. The Governor General of Manchuria shall apologize to the Japanese Governor of Kwantung and shall also make personal apologies before the Japanese Consul General at Mukden.
4. Indemnities shall be paid to Japanese who have suffered, including both civil and military persons.

Mr. Tsur said that China considers the phraseology of some of these sections (particularly I, 4) so ambiguous that it is now negotiating with Japan to gain a clearer understanding of their meaning and is asking Japan to state them with greater clarity before they are formally handed in.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Peking, October 14, 1916.

SIR: I am confidentially informed that the Chinese Foreign Office is willing to grant the demands relating to indemnities; the Japanese Minister is, however, insisting upon the arrangement asked for whereby regions in Manchuria and Eastern Mongolia shall be policed by Japanese, in cases where the presence of Japanese subjects makes such a course "necessary." The Chinese Foreign Office is insisting upon definitions as to the nature of the police force as well as the conditions which shall render necessary Japanese policing.

The Japanese Minister indicates that the functions of the Japanese officers are to be confined to Japanese nationals and that they shall not interfere with Chinese or others. He also seems inclined to give the institution of a Japanese police in Manchuria the character of an extension of the right already possessed by the consular courts to employ executive officers known as marshals.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Peking, January 31, 1917.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit for your information certain papers relating to the adjustment of the Chengchiatun Affair, which were given out by the Chinese Government on January 27; they contain a summary of the negotiations leading to the settlement and copies of the memorandum and the notes verbales of the Japanese Government, as well as the formal exchange of notes dated January 12 and 22, 1917, in which the negotiations were concluded.

The important question concerning the stationing of Japanese police officers in Manchuria, has not been settled. In his note on this subject, the Japanese Minister asserts the right to maintain such police, which the Chinese Government in its reply denies. But there is for the immediate present to be no further argument on this question; the Japanese will maintain the stations already established and will probably establish such others as they consider necessary.

PAUL S. REINSCH

[From the Peking Gazette, January 29, 1917]

We publish below the English text of a communique, summarizing the negotiations leading to a settlement of the Chengchiatun affair, which has been issued by the Chinese Foreign Office. This is followed by an authorized translation of the series of documents which have passed between the Japanese and the Chinese Governments in connection with the negotiation and conclusion of the démarche. We add an unofficial translation of the aide memoire handed by the Japanese Minister to Dr. Chen Chin-tao when acting as Minister of Foreign Affairs.

On August 1916, a dispute between a Japanese merchant named Yoshimoto and a Chinese soldier of the 28th Division stationed at Chengchiatun led to a fracas between Japanese and Chinese soldiers. The Japanese soldiers had been in Chengchiatun for over two years. They had no justification for being there. The Chinese Government had repeatedly protested against their presence.

A Japanese policeman who was informed of the dispute induced a Japanese lieutenant to lead some Japanese soldiers to the Chinese barracks to demand satisfaction; a fracas ensued in which four Chinese and twelve Japanese soldiers were killed and others wounded. The Japanese troops were reinforced and new detachments were stationed at posts on the highway between Chengchiatun and Ssupinkai.

On September 2, the Japanese Minister submitted to the Foreign Office a series of eight demands divided into two categories. Four were demands properly so called and four desiderata.

The demands were:

1. Punishment of the general commanding the 28th Division.
2. The dismissal of the officers at Chengchiatun responsible for the occurrence, as well as the severe punishment of those who took direct part in the fracas.
3. Proclamation to be posted ordering all Chinese soldiers and civilians in South Manchuria and Eastern Inner Mongolia to refrain from any act calculated to provoke a breach of the peace with Japanese soldiers or civilians.
4. China to agree to the stationing of Japanese police officers in places in South Manchuria and Eastern Inner Mongolia where their presence was considered necessary for the protection of Japanese subjects. China also to agree to the engagement by the officials of South Manchuria of Japanese police advisers.

The desiderata were:

1. Chinese troops stationed in South Manchuria and Eastern Inner Mongolia to employ a certain number of Japanese military officers as advisers.
2. Chinese military cadet schools to employ a certain number of Japanese military officers as instructors.
3. The Military Governor of Mukden to proceed personally to Port Arthur to the Japanese Military Governor of Kwantung to apologize for the occurrence and to tender similar personal apologies to the Japanese Consul General in Mukden.
4. Adequate compensation to be paid by China to the Japanese sufferers and to the families of those killed.

In deference to the expressed desire of the Japanese Government the Chinese Government did not discuss the rights and wrongs of the case itself but proceeded direct to the discussion of the foregoing demands and desiderata the Chinese Government throughout the negotiations being animated by a sincere desire to meet all Japanese proposals in a spirit of friendly compromise.

From September 9 to November 24 frequent conferences were held, and the five demands embodied in the exchange of notes later referred to were verbally agreed upon. While disposed, however, to make every concession consistent with the preservation of China's sovereignty, the Chinese Government could not consent to the stationing of Japanese police officers in South Manchuria and Eastern Inner Mongolia and to the employment of Japanese military advisers and instructors.

On October 18 the Japanese Minister submitted a memorandum setting forth the duties of Japanese police officers and seeking to prove that these duties would not conflict with the duties of Chinese police in the same areas.

Dr. Wu Ting-fang, after having assumed charge of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, continued the negotiations on December 19. Several conferences were held, the Japanese Minister pressing for acceptance of the demands for the employment of Japanese police officers and military instructors and advisers, the Foreign Minister contending that such demands were neither just nor reasonable.

On January 5 the Japanese Minister handed the Chinese Government three notes verbales.

The first had regard to the engagement of military instructors in Chinese cadet schools and explained that this desire on the part of Japan was inspired by the wish to assist in the development of a friendly spirit on the part of the Chinese military in Manchuria and in Eastern Inner Mongolia so that future recurrence of similar misunderstandings might be avoided. Japan expressed the hope that Japanese military instructors in the cadet schools would be appointed. Inasmuch, however, as the question was one which concerned Chinese military affairs it ought to be left to the discretion of the Chinese Government, and the Japanese Government would not insist upon it.

The second had regard to the employment of military advisers in South Manchuria and Eastern Inner Mongolia and affirmed that this proposal on the part of Japan was inspired by the hope of bringing about a friendly interchange of views between the military of the two countries so as to prevent misunderstandings. Japan expressed the hope that Japanese military advisers in South Manchuria and Eastern Inner Mongolia would be appointed. Inasmuch, however, as this was a question concerning the military administration it must be left to the discretion of the Chinese Government, and the Japanese Government would not insist upon it.

The third note verbale had regard to the stationing of police officers. Japanese subjects, it said, traveling and residing in South Manchuria and Eastern Inner Mongolia must increase. For their protection and the preservation of order among them and to prevent misunderstanding it is necessary to increase the establishment of Japanese police officers and police stations. This is a corollary of the rights of extraterritoriality and does not violate Chinese sovereignty. Should the Chinese Government not express its concurrence with this view the Japanese Government would nevertheless, in case of necessity, be forced to carry it into effect.

After due consideration the Chinese Government replied on January 12: •

1. In the military cadet schools China has hitherto employed only Chinese instructors. She has no intention at present of employing foreign military instructors.

2. In the office of the Military Governor of Mukden a Japanese military adviser is already employed. The Japanese note verbale was noted.

3. In regard to the stationing of Japanese police officers the Agreement of May 25, 1915, provides that all Japanese subjects in South Manchuria and in Eastern Inner Mongolia referred to in the Agreement shall "submit to the police laws and ordinances and taxation of China." Questions arising from extraterritorial rights were thus provided for. Although the Japanese Minister may give an assurance that the Japanese police will not infringe the rights of the Chinese police and of the Chinese local administration, the stationing of Japanese police (in Chinese territory) will impair the spirit and the form of Chinese sovereignty and provoke misunderstanding on the part of the Chinese people to the detriment of friendly relations.

In regard to those Japanese police stations already established in Manchuria, the Chinese Government and local authorities have repeatedly protested against their presence. From investigations made by their delegates the Chinese Government are convinced that it was the Japanese police officer illegally stationed at Chengchiatun despite the protests of the Chinese Government (Chengchiatun being Chinese territory far removed from the Railway Zone) whose action was the direct cause of the regrettable conflict. The Chinese Government can never consent to the establishment of Japanese police stations in South Manchuria. It again protests and asks for the removal of those police stations already established.

The Chinese Government therefore requested that this demand should be abandoned and declared that it could not recognize any action taken in pursuance of the Japanese statement that should the Chinese Government not express its concurrence with this demand the Japanese Government would nevertheless in case of necessity carry it into effect.

The negotiations ended by the Governments agreeing to embody in an exchange of notes the following five stipulations:

1. The general commanding the 28th Division will be reprovved.
2. Officers responsible will be punished according to law. If the law provides for severe punishment such punishment will be inflicted.
3. Proclamations will be issued enjoining Chinese soldiers and civilians in the districts where there is mixed residence to accord considerate treatment to Japanese soldiers and civilians.
4. The Military Governor of Mukden will send a representative to Port Arthur to convey his regret when the Military Governor of Kwantung and the Japanese Consul General are there together.
5. Solatium of $500 (five hundred dollars) will be given to the Japanese merchant Yoshimoto.

The Chengchiatun incident having originated in a conflict between Chinese and Japanese soldiers, the Chinese Government considers that all Japanese soldiers within the district should be withdrawn in order to prevent any future disturbance. On January 22 the Wai Chiao Pu requested the Japanese Minister to state on what date the Japanese soldiers stationed between Ssupinkai and Chengchiatun would be withdrawn. On the same day a reply was received from the Japanese Minister stating that when the five articles agreed upon are executed the Japanese troops sent to reinforce the Japanese detachment at the time of the incident will be withdrawn.

Throughout the negotiations the Chinese Government always animated by a spirit of compromise have been desirous of coming to a friendly settlement with Japan as proved by the concessions made. It confidently hopes that the Japanese Government will recognize this manifestation of good will and by the mutual exercise of great discipline and restraint in Manchuria in the future any recurrence of such regrettable incidents will be avoided.

Memorandum handed by the Japanese Minister to Dr. Chen Chin-tao, Acting Minister of Foreign Affairs

The Imperial Government of Japan feels that the unfortunate Chengchiatun incident should occur all of a sudden at a time when the relations between Japan and China have recently greatly improved, and their mutual friendship has, just then, marked the beginning of a new era, is a matter of deep regret. It, having made a careful investigation of the facts from all sides, is sincerely hoping for the rendition of an equitable decision based thereon. In a word, the present case arose out of the provocation on the part of the Chinese soldiers. Furthermore, the fact that the Japanese forces were invested and attacked by the Chinese soldiers admits of no doubt. Hence, it cannot be questioned but that the matter is a serious one. The Imperial Government, however, paying great regard to the relations between Japan and China, feels compelled to present this memorandum with a view to settling the case in dispute in a peaceful manner.

The Chinese Government is called upon to immediately effect the following provisions:

Punishment of the general commanding the 28th Division. The dismissal of all Chinese military officers responsible for this incident as well as the severe punishment of those who took direct part in the fracas.

Proclamations to be posted enjoining the whole body of the Chinese troops stationed in South Manchuria and Eastern Inner Mongolia, to refrain from again provoking the Japanese forces, or soldiers, or other Japanese subjects, by either word or act; such proclamation to be also widely published by all Chinese officials functioning in those regions for the general information of the public.

To agree that the Japanese Government may, with a view to the protection and government of the Japanese subjects in South Manchuria and Eastern Inner Mongolia, send Japanese police officers to function at those places where considered to be necessary; also let the Chinese officials in South Manchuria employ more Japanese to serve as police advisers.

The following are optional with the Chinese Government:

Every Chinese army headquarters stationed in South Manchuria and Eastern Inner Mongolia to employ a certain number of Japanese military officers as advisers.

Chinese military cadet schools to employ a certain number of Japanese military officers as instructors.

The Tu Chun of Fengtien Province to pay a personal visit, and to apologize to both the Governor of Kwantung and Japanese Consul-General in Mukden.

Adequate compensation to be paid to the sufferers or their families.

Note Verbale handed by the Japanese Minister to the Chinese Minister of Foreign Affairs

PEKING, the 5th day of the 1st month
of the 6th year of Taisho.

The statement that if the Chinese Government should employ foreign advisers on military affairs in South Manchuria, Japanese will be employed first, etc., has been made in the note dated May 25 of the 4th year of the Republic of China, annexed to the treaty respecting South Manchuria and Eastern Inner Mongolia. As the employment of Japanese military advisers will facilitate mutual understanding between the military authorities of the two countries, and further as there is no doubt that this will help to prevent various troubles which may arise out of misunderstanding, the Imperial Government entertain the hope that the Chinese Government will continuously employ Japanese military advisers. However, it is not proper for the Imperial Government to insist upon this matter since it concerns the military affairs of the Chinese Government, and should therefore be left to the discretion of the Chinese Government.

PEKING, the 5th day of the 1st month

The Imperial Government hopes the Chinese Government will employ a number of Japanese military officers to be instructors in military cadet schools. This is aimed at helping the training of military officers who will in the future be appointed to the various localities in Manchuria and Mongolia, and also to enlighten the spirit of friendship between China and Japan. Thus, it may be expected that unfortunate incidents like the Chengchiatun case will not occur again and that the root of trouble may be exterminated permanently. However, it is not proper for the Imperial Government to insist upon this matter since it concerns the military affairs of the Chinese Government, and should therefore be left to the discretion of the Chinese Government.

The Minister of Foreign Affairs has to state that hitherto the military cadet school has employed only officers of the national army as instructors and there is at present no intention of employing any foreigner.

Note Verbale handed by the Japanese Minister to the Chinese Minister of Foreign Affairs

In an aide memoire handed by the Japanese Minister to (Dr.) Chen, late Minister of Foreign Affairs, on October 18, 1916, it was stated that in consequence of the operation of the treaty respecting South Manchuria and Eastern Inner Mongolia the Japanese subjects traveling and residing at those places will increase in number and the Imperial Government, with a view to controlling and protecting those Japanese subjects, consider it necessary to increase the establishment of police stations, of which the Chinese Minister of Foreign Affairs is already aware.

The Imperial Government consider that the said demand, in the event of its withdrawal, will expose the Japanese subjects visiting and residing at those places to danger, thus causing trouble and giving rise to serious complications with Chinese officials and citizens.

Inasmuch as it is the duty of the Imperial Government to protect Japanese subjects and its right to control them, not only it cannot view such occurrences with indifference but, in view of the friendly relations of the two nations, it also deems it its duty to take precautionary measures.

As the stationing of Japanese police officers is but a corollary of the right of extra-territoriality, not to speak of the fact that it does not in the least prejudice

Chinese sovereignty, it will help to improve the relations of the officials and people of the two countries and bring about the development of economic interests to no small degree.

Therefore the Imperial Government is convinced that the Chinese Government will, without doubt, give its consent and the Imperial Government has to add that while the Chinese Government is making up its mind and withholding its consent the Imperial Government will nevertheless be constrained to carry it into effect in case of necessity.

Dated the 5th day of the 1st month of the 6th Year of Taisho.

PEKING, the 12th day of the 1st month of the 6th year of the Republic of China.

The Minister of Foreign Affairs has the honour to acknowledge the receipt of the Japanese Minister's note verbale of January 5, stating that [Japanese note repeated].

In reply the Minister of Foreign Affairs has to state that:

Whereas by virtue of the New Chino-Japanese Treaty "Japanese subjects shall be free to reside and travel in South Manchuria and to engage in business and manufacture of any kind whatsoever"; and the Japanese and Chinese may jointly undertake agricultural enterprises and industries incidental thereto in Eastern Inner Mongolia, the Chinese Government, in anticipation of the gradual increase in number of the Japanese subjects, therefore caused to be stipulated in Article 5 of the said treaty that the Japanese subjects in South Manchuria and Eastern Inner Mongolia shall submit to the Chinese police laws and ordinances, so as to enable the Chinese police to effectively discharge the functions of protection and control.

Since the reason in support of the Japanese proposal to station police officers was with a view to protect and control Japanese subjects, but as there are already treaty provisions there is no necessity to station Japanese police officers so as to avoid conflict with the Chinese police rights.

As the seven principal functions of the Japanese police officers, detailed in the aide memoire of October 18 last, are those either which should properly belong to the Chinese police, or those which are provided for by the existing treaties or those which are the duties of the constables (marshals) of consular courts, there is no necessity for the establishment of a Japanese police force, hence the question of police cannot be associated with extra-territoriality and the Chinese Government cannot recognize it as a corollary (of the right of extra-territoriality). Ever since the conclusion of extra-territoriality treaties between China and the foreign powers for several decades, no such claim has ever been heard.

Although the Japanese Minister has repeatedly declared that the said police would not interfere with Chinese local administration and police rights yet after serious consideration by the Chinese Government the stationing of foreign police within the confines of Chinese territory, no matter under whatever circumstances, is prejudicial to the spirit and form of Chinese sovereignty tending to cause misunderstanding on the part of the people, thus placing an impediment to the friendship of the two nations.

As regards the Japanese police stations already established the Chinese Government and the local authorities have repeatedly lodged their protests and have not accorded their recognition, nor is the Chinese Government able to admit the reasons for the stationing of Japanese police officers as stated in the note verbale.

This matter has no connection with the Chengchiatun case, and at the conferences the Japanese Minister has repeatedly expressed the desire to detach it from the Chengchiatun case. The Chinese Government considers it necessary to request the Japanese Government to abandon the matter. As the same time it is not to be construed as meaning that the Chinese Government has recognized any action to carry the matter into effect.

Note from the Japanese Minister to the Chinese Minister of Foreign Affairs

PEKING, the 22d day of the 1st month
of the 6th year of Taisho.

I have the honor to inform your excellency that with regard to the Chengchiatun affair for the settlement of which several conferences have been held between me and the Chinese Ministry of Foreign Affairs prior to your excellency's assumption of office. The articles set forth hereunder have been mutually agreed upon and, with the exception of such modifications and alterations to the phraseology, as have been considered, no further negotiation is possible. I, therefore, take this opportunity to submit the same to your excellency's consideration, and to request that a reply to that effect will be given.

1. The general commanding the 28th Division to be reproved.

2. The Chinese military officers responsible for this incident to be punished according to law. If the law provides for severe punishment such punishment will be inflicted.

3. An official proclamation to be issued in the districts where there is mixed residence for the information of the soldiers and the people in general, to the effect that Japanese soldiers and subjects shall be accorded considerate treatment.

4. The Tu Chun of Fengtien Province to express, in an appropriate way, his regret to the Governor of Kwantung and the Japanese Consul General in Mukden when they are together at Port Arthur, but the method of this expression is left to the discretion of the said Tu Chun.

5. A solatium of $500 is to be given to the Japanese merchant, Yoshimoto.

I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your excellency's note of to-day, asking for the withdrawal of the Japanese soldiers stationed between Ssuningkai and Chengchiatun. The Imperial Government of Japan is of opinion that the entire additional forces sent to be stationed at the said places in consequence of the occurrence of the Chengchiatun affair will be withdrawn, as soon as the whole arrangement embodied in the five articles which were agreed upon at the Chengchiatun negotiations has been carried out.

Aide Memoire handed by Japanese Minister to Dr. Chen Chin-tao, Acting Minister of Foreign Affairs

Dated 18th day of the 10th month of the 5th year of Taisho.

According to the new treaty concluded last year respecting South Manchuria and Eastern Inner Mongolia, Japanese subjects shall have the right of residence, travel and commercial and industrial trade in South Manchuria, and the right to undertake agricultural enterprises and industries incidental thereto in the eastern part of Inner Mongolia jointly with Chinese subjects. The number of Japanese subjects in South Manchuria and Eastern Inner Mongolia will, therefore, inevitably increase gradually. The Imperial Government of Japan considers it necessary to station Japanese police officers in these regions for the purpose of controlling and protecting their own subjects. It is a fact that a number of Japanese police officers have already been stationed in the interior of South Manchuria and they have been recognized by the local officials of the localities concerned since intercourse has been conducted between them. The Imperial Government of Japan proposes gradually to establish additional stations for Japanese police officers in the interior of South Manchuria and Eastern Inner Mongolia wherever and whenever necessary. The localities where such stations for police officers are to be established will of course depend upon the number of Japanese subjects residing thereat and therefore cannot be specified in advance. Since this will involve great expense, it is unlikely that many police stations will be established at once. The organization of such stations for police officers will also depend upon the existing conditions of the localities selected and the number of Japanese subjects residing at such places. There will be only a few Japanese police officers at each station as established. The more important duties of such police officers are as follows:

1. To prevent Japanese subjects from committing crimes;
2. To protect Japanese subjects when attacked;
3. To search, arrest and escort Japanese prisoners under the jurisdiction of a Japanese consulate;
4. To attend to the enforcement of consular orders in connection with civil cases, such as the duties of the registrar;
5. Investigation and supervision of the personal standing of Japanese subjects;
6. Control and discipline of Japanese subjects, who violate the provisions of treaties between Japan and China; and
7. To see that Japanese subjects abide by the provisions of Chinese police regulations when the agreement between Japan and China respecting the same should actually come into force.

In short, the establishment of stations for Japanese police officers in South Manchuria and Eastern Inner Mongolia is based on consular jurisdiction, and its aim is efficiently to protect and discipline Japanese subjects, to bring about a completely satisfactory relationship between the officials and people of the two countries, and gradually to develop the financial relations between Japan and China. The Chinese Government is requested speedily to recognize the demands precisely as it has the establishment of consulates and consular agents in the interior of South Manchuria in pursuance of the policy to maintain the friendly relations between China and Japan.

In reply I have the honor to state that the Imperial (Japanese) Government will await the actual fulfilment of all of the five items recently agreed upon with reference to the Chengchiatun affair, when it intends immediately to evacuate all of the additional army despatched in connection with the occurrence of the Chengchiatun affair to that region.

BARON GONSUKE HAYASHI

III

On January 5 the Imperial Japanese Minister sent the following note verbale to the Chinese Minister for Foreign Affairs:

The Imperial Japanese Government desires that the Chinese Government employ Japanese military officers as instructors in Chinese military schools. This is based upon the idea that, by assisting to train the Chinese military officers to be dispatched in future to the region of Manchuria and Mongolia, and by making those military officers thoroughly understand the spirit of cordial relations between Japan and China, the root of the occurrence of such unfortunate affairs, as that of Chengchiatun, may be permanently removed. Since, however, this matter concerns the military administration of your country, it is not convenient for the Imperial (Japanese) Government to insist thereon, it desires that your Government consider the matter of its own accord.

On January 12 in reply to the foregoing, the Chinese Minister for Foreign Affairs sent the following note verbale to the Imperial (Japanese) Minister.

According to your note verbale dated January 5, "The Imperial (Japanese) Government desires that the Chinese Government employ several Japanese military officers as instructors in the Chinese military schools. This is based upon the idea that, by assisting to train the Chinese military officers to be dispatched in future to the regions of Manchuria and Mongolia, and by making those military officers thoroughly understand the spirit of cordial relations between Japan and China, the root of the occurrence of such unfortunate affairs as that of Chengchiatun may be permanently removed. Since, however, this matter concerns the military administration of your country, it is not convenient for the Imperial (Japanese) Government to insist thereon, it desires that your Government consider the matter of its own accord." With respect to this matter the Military Academy conducts with military officers of this country, and it has yet no intention of employing foreigners as instructors.

IV

On January 5, the Japanese Minister sent the following note verbale to the Chinese Minister for Foreign Affairs.

In a note dated May 25, 1915, attached to the Japanese-Chinese Treaty relating to South Manchuria and Eastern Inner Mongolia, the Chinese Government declared that when it intends to employ foreign military advisers in South Manchuria it would first employ Japanese. There is no doubt that the employment of Japanese military advisers will contribute a great deal to promote understanding between the military authorities of both countries, and will thereby contribute a great deal to the object of preventing the various causes of troubles liable to arise through misunderstanding of one another. Therefore, the Imperial (Japanese) Government desires that Japanese military officers be successively employed in South Manchuria as military advisers. Since, however, this matter concerns the military administration of your country, it is not convenient for the Imperial Japanese Government to insist thereon, and it desires that your Government consider the matter of its own accord.

In reply to the foregoing, on January 12, the Chinese Minister for Foreign Affairs sent the following note verbale to the Imperial Japanese Minister.

According to your note verbale dated January 5, "In a note dated May 25, 1915, attached to the Japanese-Chinese Treaty relating to South Manchuria and Eastern Inner Mongolia, the Chinese Government declared that when it intended to employ foreign military advisers in South Manchuria, it would first employ Japanese. There is no doubt that the employment of Japanese military advisers will contribute a great deal to promote understanding between the military authorities of both countries, and will thereby contribute a great deal to the object of preventing the various causes of troubles liable to arise through misunderstanding of one another. Therefore, the Imperial (Japanese) Government desires that Japanese military officers be successively employed in South Manchuria as military advisers. Since, however, this matter concerns the military administration of your country, it is not convenient for the Imperial Japanese Government to insist thereon, and it desires that your Government consider the matter of its own accord." With respect to the foregoing, in the office of the military governor at Mukden military officers of your Government are already employed. The purport of your note has been duly examined and fully understood.

On January 5 the Japanese Minister sent the following note verbale to the Chinese Minister for Foreign Affairs.

As fully explained in a note verbale handed by the Imperial Japanese Minister to Mr. Chen, the preceding Chinese Minister for Foreign Affairs, on October 18, last year, as a result of the enforcement of the Chinese-Japanese Treaty relating to South Manchuria and Inner Mongolia, the number of Japanese subjects in those regions will increase in future, the Imperial (Japanese) Government will increase the establishment of Japanese police stations in those regions, and therefore for the purpose of their control and protection, were the Imperial (Japanese) Government to withdraw its demand in this case, there is no doubt that it would not only cause great uneasiness in regard to the residence and travel of Japanese subjects in those regions, but would also give rise to causes of troubles between Japanese subjects and Chinese officials and people, eventually leading to grave complications. Since the Imperial (Japanese) Government has the duty of giving necessary protection to, and the right of exercising control over the subjects of its own country, not only can it not regard with silence the development of a state of affairs of this kind, but from the point of view of seeking harmony in the international relations between Japan and China, it has also the duty of exhausting every means for preventing the development of such a state of affairs.

It takes for granted that the stationing of the Imperial Japanese police at those stations, being a natural measure attendant on the right of consular jurisdiction, is not an infringement of the sovereign rights of China, but rather will improve the relations between Japanese subjects, the Chinese officials and people, and contribute not a little to the advancement of the economic relations of both countries, wherefore although the Imperial (Japanese) Government firmly believes that the Chinese Government will express its concurrence therein, it hereby declares that in case the Chinese Government should hesitate to give its concurrence, the Imperial (Japanese) Government will become obliged, in accordance with necessity, to execute it (the demand).

In reply to the foregoing on January 12 the Chinese Minister for Foreign Affairs sent the following note verbale to the Japanese Minister.

According to your note verbale dated January 5—[Repeats above note verbale.]

With respect to the foregoing, in accordance with the Japanese-Chinese Treaty, Japanese subjects may reside and travel and carry on industrial and commercial enterprises in South Manchuria; conduct agriculture and industries necessary thereto in cooperation with Chinese citizens. As the Chinese Government anticipated that the number of Japanese subjects would gradually increase, according to Article 5 of the said treaty, it was provided that Japanese subjects in South Manchuria and Eastern Inner Mongolia should submit to Chinese police laws and regulations. The Chinese police would be able to discharge the duty of protection and supervision. Nevertheless, the object of your country in posting police is the protection and supervision of its subjects. As provisions of treaty with respect thereto already exist, it is deemed best not to have any collisions with the Chinese right of policing through the new establishment of the police of your country. As also shown in the explanatory statement dated October 18, 1916, regarding the stationing of police it is clear that there is no necessity for establishing police of your country, there being some (offices) that belong to the Chinese right of policing, some that are provided by treaty, and others that pertain to functions of the sheriffs of the consular courts. The policing question mentioned in the present paragraph has nothing whatever to do with the so-called extra-territorial jurisdiction; and the Government cannot recognize it a proper measure; and since the conclusion of treaties with foreign nations, nothing similar hereto has ever yet taken place. You have repeatedly declared that the police mentioned in the present paragraph would not interfere with Chinese local administration or right of policing, according to mature consideration of this Government, the stationing of foreign police in Chinese territory, whatever may be the circumstances, would be obstructive both in spirit and in form of the sovereignty of China. Moreover it would be liable to create misunderstanding on the part of the people, and would rather be an obstacle to the cordial relations between the two countries. With respect to the police stations already established, the government and the local officials having protested one after another, and have never consented thereto. Therefore, the reasons for posting police of your country, stated in the note verbale cannot be recognized. Moreover, as the present question has nothing whatever to do with Chengchiatun, and as you have also held the view that the present question should be separated from that of Chengchiatun, I trust your Government will not again propose this question, and will not consider that the Chinese Government has approved the execution of the present question.

VI

The Chinese Government has declared to the Imperial Japanese Minister that it has the intention of employing more Japanese police advisers in future in the office of the governor of Fengtien Province.

(Remark) The opinion and attitude of the Imperial (Japanese) Government toward the contention of the Chinese Government stated in the foregoing reply, have already been declared in the note verbale of the Imperial (Japanese) Minister above set forth.

That Japan has special and close relations, political as well as economic, with China, is well and has long been understood by the American Government. In a note dated March 13, 1915,⁵⁴ addressed to Viscount Chinda, my predecessor, by Mr. Bryan, the then Secretary of State, he recognized this state of affairs and declared that the activity of Americans in China had never been political. Reposing confidence in this statement, the Japanese Government has attached no importance to the recent rumor repeatedly finding its way to the press despatches from China to the effect that the American Minister at Peking was more or less involved in the present political crisis in China. Again, with regard to the recent important representations made by the American Government to the Chinese Government relative to the political situation in China without previously consulting Japan,⁵⁵ the Japanese Government does not entertain the slightest doubt as to the fair and unselfish motives of the United States Government. However, it is constrained, much to its regret, to recognize as a fact that, since the Japanese public is specially sensitive toward Chinese problems, this action of the American Government, in conjunction with the rumor aforementioned, has generated in the minds of a certain part of the people a feeling of uneasiness. In such circumstance, the Japanese Government believes that if the United States Government sees its way by some appropriate means to confirming the statement made by Mr. Bryan and clearly reasserting its friendly attitude toward Japan in respect of Chinese problems, it would leave a good impression on the minds of the Japanese public and would certainly contribute in no small measure to the friendly relations between our two nations, and accordingly it now communicates its conviction most frankly to the American Government and desires to be informed of the latter's opinion.

ROBERT LANSING

The Secretary of State to the Japanese Ambassador

As evidence of the friendly attitude of the United States toward Japan in respect to questions relative to China, the American Government is pleased to remove any doubts which may arise as to its purposes by reaffirming the statements made in the note of Secretary Byran to Viscount Chinda, dated March 13, 1915.⁵⁶ In that note Secretary Bryan, after reviewing what he termed the beginnings of the policy of the United States and other Powers interested in the welfare of China for the maintenance of the territorial integrity and administrative entity of China and for equal opportunities in commerce and industries in her behalf, and after pointing out in what respects the proposals made by Japan to China in 1915 (in so far as the objects and purposes of those proposals were known and understood by the United States Government at the time) were in derogation of the policy mentioned as well as of the understanding based upon the exchange of notes of November 30, 1908,⁵⁷ and the treaty rights of the United States in China, said in conclusion:

The United States, therefore, could not regard with indifference the assumption of political, military, or economic domination over China by a foreign Power, and hopes that your excellency's Government will find it consonant with their interests to refrain from pressing upon China an acceptance of proposals which would, if accepted, exclude Americans from equal participation in the economic and industrial development of China and would limit the political independence of that country. * * *

The United States Government embraces this opportunity to make known that it has viewed the aspirations of Japan in the Far East with that friendship and esteem which have characterized the relations of the two nations in the past. This Government cannot too earnestly impress upon your excellency's Government that the United States is not jealous of the prominence of Japan in the East or of the intimate cooperation of China and Japan for their mutual benefit. Nor has the United States any intention of obstructing or embarrassing Japan, or of influencing China in opposition to Japan. On the contrary, the policy of the United States, as set forth in this note, is directed to the maintenance of the independence, integrity and commercial freedom of China and preservation of legitimate American rights and interests in that Republic.

I desire to direct your excellency's attention to the fact that, while Mr. Bryan's note thus expressed the views of the United States in regard to international relations in the Far East, I do not find that it anywhere went to the extent of stating or recognizing that Japan has special and close relations, political as well as economic, with China as a whole, as your excellency stated at our interview on June 15 last. Mr. Bryan merely said that the United States recognized that territorial contiguity created special relations between Japan and the districts of Shantung, Southern Manchuria and East Mongolia, but he did not admit that the United States might not in the future be justified in expressing its views in regard to Chino-Japanese relations involving even these districts. This view is borne out by the fact that Mr. Bryan felt justified in his communication of May 11, 1915,⁵⁸ in declining to recognize any agreement or understanding entered into then or thereafter between Japan and China impairing the treaty rights of the United States, the political or territorial integrity of China, or the international policy of the open door.

As the official memorandum which your excellency handed me on June 15 referred to Japan's interests both political and economic in China as "paramount," and as Mr. Shidehara informed the American Chargé at Tokyo that your excellency had telegraphed to your Government that I had expressed myself as quite in accord with the deep sense of the memorandum, I feel that in this restatement of the attitude of the United States Government I ought to make it clear to your excellency that I had no intention in our conversation of June 15 to convey the impression that this Government recognized that Japan possessed in China a paramount interest. It was my intention to vary in no way the formal declaration of Mr. Bryan, and, as I recall my language, I did not employ the word "paramount" but spoke of "special" interest in the same sense in which the term was used in the note of March 13, 1915.

The United States has no political ambitions in respect to China, but its historic interest in the welfare of the Chinese people and the territorial and administrative integrity of the Republic, its treaty relations and extensive commerce with China, render it impossible for the United States to be indifferent to matters affecting these interests, which the civil dissension in China, according to reports, threatened to do. As, however, the factional difficulties did not seem to threaten the status quo in the region of the Pacific and the principle of equal opportunity, there would seem to have been no necessity under the Agreement of 1908 to communicate to the Japanese Government the intention of the United States Government to express to China its views on the internal dissension in that country and its interest and hope in the composing of the political difficulties, but with the purpose of avoiding any possible misunderstanding on the part of your excellency's Government as to the motives of this Government, the subject of the proposed communication to China was promptly brought to the attention of the Japanese Government, notwithstanding the fact that the Japanese proposals of 1915 were made to China several weeks before Japan acquainted the United States with them in accordance with the exchange of notes in 1908. In the case of the Japanese demands growing out of the Cheng Chia Tun trouble, the United States was not informed of the action of Japan until after inquiry had been made by this Government.

In taking the action which has led to the representations by the Japanese Government the United States Government is of the opinion it has departed in no way from its traditional policy towards China or from the views expressed by Mr. Bryan in 1915, in neither of which has the United States claimed the prerogative to control China's political development nor recognized the right or paramount interest of any other country to extend political influence over China.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,

On June 15 the Japanese Ambassador read to me an informal communication the substance of which is as follows:

It is well understood that Japan has special and close relations, political as well as economic, with China. In a note dated March 13, 1915, from Mr. Bryan to Viscount Chinda,⁵⁹ the former recognized the special position above-mentioned and declared the activity of Americans in China had never been political. Relying on this statement the Japanese Government has placed little faith in the rumors frequently current in press despatches from China to the effect that the American Minister at Peking was more or less involved in the present political crisis in China. Again, in connection with the representations made to the Chinese Government by the American Government without first consulting Japan, the Japanese Government has no doubt of the unselfish motives and fairness of the Government of the United States.⁶⁰ The Japanese Government, much to its regret, is constrained, however, to recognize as a fact that, since the Japanese public is sensitive towards Chinese problems, the action of the American Government in sending the note to China generated in the minds of a certain part of the people of Japan a feeling of uneasiness. The Japanese Government believes, under these circumstances, that if the Government of the United States sees its way by some appropriate means to confirm the statement made by Mr. Bryan and to reassert its friendly attitude towards Japan with regard to Chinese problems, a good impression would be made on the minds of the Japanese public and the friendly relations of the two nations would be strengthened. Accordingly, the Japanese Government frankly communicates its conviction to the American Government and desires to be informed of the latter's opinion.

In reply to Ambassador Sato's informal representations I handed to him on July 6 an informal memorandum the substance of which is as follows: [See note of July 6, 1917, to the Japanese Ambassador above.]

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, August 14, 1917.

SIR: The Department sends herewith for your strictly confidential information, copy of a signed memorandum dated July 6, 1917, to the Japanese Ambassador in this capital, relative to Japan's claim to a preferential position in China.

The above memorandum was in reply to oral representations made to the Department on June 15, 1917, by the Japanese Ambassador, the substance of which was that Japan has special and close relations, political as well as economic, with China and that the American Government has long and well understood that these close relations existed; that in a note dated March 13, 1915,⁶² addressed to Viscount Chinda by Mr. Bryan, the then Secretary of State, recognized this state of affairs and declared that the activity of Americans in China had never been political. Reposing confidence in this statement the Japanese Government attached no importance to the recent rumor repeatedly finding its way to the press depatches from China to the effect that the American Minister at Peking was more or less involved in political affairs in the political crisis in China.

Adverting to the note of the American Government to the Chinese Government relative to the political situation in China,⁶³ which note was sent without previously consulting Japan, the Japanese Ambassador stated that his Government did not entertain the slightest doubt as to the fair and unselfish motives of the United States Government. However, it was constrained, much to its regret, to recognize as a fact that, inasmuch as the Japanese public is specially sensitive toward Chinese problems, the action of the American Government in sending the note in conjunction with the rumor hereinbefore mentioned, has caused in the minds of a certain part of the people a feeling of uneasiness. Under the circumstances, therefore, the Japanese Government expressed the hope that if the United States Government could see its way clear by some appropriate means to confirm the statement made by Mr. Bryan and to clearly reassert its friendly attitude toward Japan in respect to Chinese problems, a good impression would be left on the minds of the Japanese public and would contribute in no small measure to the friendly relations existing between the two nations. The Ambassador asked to be informed regarding the attitude of the American Government on this subject.

AGREEMENT EFFECTED BY EXCHANGE OF NOTES BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND JAPAN

MUTUAL INTEREST RELATING TO THE REPUBLIC OF CHINA

The Secretary of State to the Japanese Ambassador on Special Mission
DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, November 2, 1917.

EXCELLENCY: I have the honor to communicate herein my understanding of the agreement reached by us in our recent conversations touching the questions of mutual interest to our Governments relating to the Republic of China.

In order to silence mischievous reports that have from time to time been circulated, it is believed by us that a public announcement once more of the desires and intentions shared by our two Governments with regard to China is advisable.

The Governments of the United States and Japan recognize that territorial propinquity creates special relations between countries, and, consequently, the Government of the United States recognizes that Japan has special interests in China, particularly in the part to which her possessions are contiguous.

The territorial sovereignty of China, nevertheless, remains unimpaired and the Government of the United States has every confidence in the repeated assurances of the Imperial Japanese Government that while geographical position gives Japan such special interests they have no desire to discriminate against the trade of other nations or to disregard the commercial rights heretofore granted by China in treaties with other powers.

The Governments of the United States and Japan deny that they have any purpose to infringe in any way the independence or territorial integrity of China and they declare, furthermore, that they always adhere to the principle of the so-called "open door" or equal opportunity for commerce and industry in China.

Moreover, they mutually declare that they are opposed to the acquisition by any Government of any special rights or privileges that would affect the independence or territorial integrity of China or that would deny to the subjects or citizens of any country the full enjoyment of equal opportunity in the commerce and industry of China.

I shall be glad to have your excellency confirm this understanding of the agreement reached by us.

THE SPECIAL MISSION OF JAPAN,
Washington, November 2, 1917.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note of to-day, communicating to me your understanding of the agreement reached by us in our recent conversations touching the questions of mutual interest to our Governments relating to the Republic of China.

I am happy to be able to confirm to you, under authorization of my Government, the understanding in question set forth in the following terms:

In order to silence mischievous reports that have from time to time been circulated, it is believed by us that a public announcement once more of the desires and intentions shared by our two Governments with regard to China is advisable.

The Governments of Japan and the United States recognize that territorial propinquity creates special relations between countries, and, consequently, the Government of the United States recognizes that Japan has special interests in China, particularly in the part to which her possessions are contiguous.

The territorial sovereignty of China, nevertheless, remains unimpaired and the Government of the United States has every confidence in the repeated assurances of the Imperial Japanese Government that while geographical position gives Japan such special interests they have no desire to discriminate against the trade of other nations or to disregard the commercial rights heretofore granted by China in treaties with other Powers.

The Governments of Japan and the United States deny that they have any purpose to infringe in any way the independence or territorial integrity of China and they declare, furthermore, that they always adhere to the principle of the so-called "open door" or equal opportunity for commerce and industry in China.

Moreover, they mutually declare that they are opposed to the acquisition by any government of any special rights or privileges that would affect the independence or territorial integrity of China or that would deny to the subjects or citizens of any country the full enjoyment of equal opportunity in the commerce and industry of China.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, November 5, 1917, 2 p. m.

The following notes were exchanged on November 2 between Viscount Ishii and myself: [Quotes notes exchanged, printed ante.]

By agreement with Viscount Ishii the notes will be made public here on November 6 and in Japan on November 7. When the notes are given out the following statement will be given to the press by the Department:

Viscount Ishii and the other Japanese Commissioners who are now on their way back to their country have performed a service to the United States as well as to Japan which is of the highest value.

There had unquestionably been growing up between the peoples of the two countries a feeling of suspicion as to the motives inducing the activities of the other in the Far East, a feeling which, if unchecked, promised to develop a serious situation. Rumors and reports of improper intentions were increasing and were more and more believed. Legitimate commercial and industrial enterprises without ulterior motive were presumed to have political significance, with the result that opposition to those enterprises were aroused in the other country.

The attitude of constraint and doubt thus created was fostered and encouraged by the campaign of falsehood, which for a long time had been adroitly and secretly carried on by Germans, whose Government as a part of its foreign policy desired especially to so alienate this country and Japan that it would be at the chosen time no difficult task to cause a rupture of their good relations. Unfortunately there were people in both countries, many of whom were entirely honest in their beliefs, who accepted every false rumor as true, and aided the German propaganda by declaring that their own Government should prepare for the conflict, which they asserted was inevitable, that the interests of the two nations in the Far East were hostile, and that every activity of the other country in the Pacific had a sinister purpose.

Fortunately this distrust was not so general in either the United States or Japan as to affect the friendly relations of the two Governments, but there is no doubt that the feeling of suspicion was increasing and the untrue reports were receiving more and more credence in spite of the earnest efforts which were made on both sides of the Pacific to counteract a movement which would jeopardize the ancient friendship of the two nations.

The visit of Viscount Ishii and his colleagues has accomplished a great change of opinion in this country. By frankly denouncing the evil influences which have been at work, by openly proclaiming that the policy of Japan is not one of aggression, and by declaring that there is no intention to take advantage commercially or industrially of the special relation to China created by geographical position, the representatives of Japan have cleared the diplomatic atmosphere of the suspicions which had been so carefully spread by our enemies and by misguided or overzealous people in both countries. In a few days the propaganda of years has been undone, and both nations are now able to see how near they came to being led into the trap which had been skillfully set for them.

Throughout the conferences which have taken place Viscount Ishii has shown a sincerity and candor which dispelled every doubt as to his purpose and brought the two Governments into an attitude of confidence toward each other which made it possible to discuss every question with frankness and cordiality. Approaching the subjects in such a spirit and with the mutual desire to remove every possible cause of controversy the negotiations were marked by a sincerity and good will which from the first insured their success.

The principal result of the negotiations was the mutual understanding which was reached as to the principles governing the policies of the two Governments in relation to China. This understanding is formally set forth in the notes exchanged and now made public. The statements in the notes require no explanation. They not only contain a reaffirmation of the "open door" policy, but introduce a principle of noninterference with the sovereignty and territorial integrity of China, which, generally applied, is essential to perpetual international peace, as clearly declared by President Wilson, and which is the very foundation also of Pan Americanism as interpreted by this Government.

The removal of doubts and suspicions and the mutual declaration of the new doctrine as to the Far East would be enough to make the visit of the Japanese Commission to the United States historic and memorable, but it accomplished a further purpose, which is of special interest to the world at this time, in expressing Japan's earnest desire to cooperate with this country in waging war against the German Government. The discussions, which covered the military, naval and economic activities to be employed with due regard to relative resources and ability, showed the same spirit of sincerity and candor which characterized the negotiations resulting in the exchange of notes.

At the present time it is inexpedient to make public the details of these conversations, but it may be said that this Government has been gratified by the assertions of Viscount Ishii and his colleagues that their Government desired to do their part in the suppression of Prussian militarism and were eager to cooperate in every practical way to that end. It might be added, however, that complete and satisfactory understanding upon the matter of naval cooperation in the Pacific for the purpose of attaining the common object against Germany and her allies have been reached between the representative of the Imperial Japanese Navy, who is attached to the Special Mission of Japan, and the representative of the United States Navy.

It is only just to say that the success, which has attended the intercourse of the Japanese Commission with American officials and with private persons as well, is due in large measure to the personality of Viscount Ishii, the head of the mission. The natural reserve and hesitation, which are not unusual in negotiations of a delicate nature, disappeared under the influence of his open friendliness, while his frankness won the confidence and good will of all. It is doubtful if a representative of a different temper could in so short a time have done as much as Viscount Ishii to place on a better and firmer basis the relations between the United States and Japan. Through him the American people have gained a new and higher conception of the reality of Japan's friendship for the United States which will be mutually beneficial in the future.

Viscount Ishii will be remembered in this country as a statesman of high attainments, as a diplomat with a true vision of international affairs, and as a genuine and outspoken friend of America.

Communicate textually to the Foreign Office the above press statement and repeat it to Peking immediately for information only.

The following notes were exchanged on November 2 between Viscount Ishii and myself: [Quotes notes exchanged, printed ante.]

By agreement with Viscount Ishii the notes will be made public here on November 6 and in Japan on November 7.

Your telegrams of November 4, 11 p. m., and November 5, noon.

You may say to the Foreign Office:

The visit of the Imperial Japanese Mission to the United States afforded an opportunity for free and friendly discussion of interests of the United States and Japan in the Orient. By openly proclaiming that the policy of Japan, as regards China, is not one of aggression, and by declaring that there is no intention to take advantage, commercially or industrially, of the special relations to China created by geographical position, the representatives of Japan have cleared the diplomatic atmosphere of the suspicions which had been so carefully spread by German propaganda.

The Governments of the United States and Japan again declare their adherence to the open door policy and recommit themselves, as far as these two Governments are concerned, to the maintenance of equal opportunity for and the full enjoyment by the subjects or citizens of any country in the commerce and industry of China. Japanese commercial and industrial enterprises in China manifestly have, on account of the geographical relation of the two countries, a certain advantage over similar enterprises on the part of the citizens or subjects of any other country.

The Governments of the United States and Japan have taken advantage of a favorable opportunity to make an exchange of expressions with respect to their relations with China. This understanding is formally set forth in the notes exchanged and now transmitted. The statements in the notes require no explanation. They not only contain a reaffirmation of the open door policy but introduce a principle of noninterference with the sovereignty and territorial integrity of China, which, generally applied, is essential to perpetual international peace, as has been so clearly declared by President Wilson.

Statement to be given to the press on November 6 will be telegraphed you from Tokyo.

The Department is in receipt of information from the American Legation at Peking to the effect that the Japanese Minister there on November 4 (November 3, Washington time) handed to the Chinese Foreign Office a copy of the notes recently signed by me and Viscount Ishii.

The newspapers of the morning of the 6th also print an Associated Press story from Peking under date of November 5 stating that the Japanese Minister had informed the Chinese Foreign Office that the United States had recognized Japan's special interests in China and that both Governments had reaffirmed the open door. In view of the fact that it was agreed between the Governments that the notes should not be made public in this country until the afternoon of the 6th and not in Japan until the morning of the 7th, this premature announcement of the contents of the notes has caused the Department much embarrassment and created a very bad impression because of the seeming violation of the understanding as to publication.

You are instructed to present these facts to the Minister of Foreign Affairs and to request an investigation to determine the responsibility for the premature publicity given the notes in Peking which is so manifestly violative of the agreement of the two Governments. You may state that I am convinced that Viscount Motono must resent as I do this failure to preserve the confidential character of the notes until the time agreed upon between the two Governments for their publication.

DECLARATION OF THE CHINESE GOVERNMENT CONCERNING THE NOTES
EXCHANGED BETWEEN THE GOVERNMENTS OF THE UNITED STATES
AND JAPAN DATED NOVEMBER 2, 1917

The Government of the United States and the Government of Japan have recently, in order to silence mischievous reports, effected an exchange of notes at Washington concerning their desires and intentions with regard to China. Copies of the said notes have been communicated to the Chinese Government by the Japanese Minister at Peking; and the Chinese Government, in order to avoid misunderstanding, hastens to make the following declaration so as to make known the views of the Government. The principle adopted by the Chinese Government towards the friendly nations has always been one of justice and equality; and consequently the rights enjoyed by the friendly nations derived from the treaties have been consistently respected, and so even with the special relations between countries created by the fact of territorial contiguity, it is only in so far as they have already been provided for in her existing treaties. Hereafter the Chinese Government will still adhere to the principle hitherto adopted, and hereby it is again declared that the Chinese Government will not allow herself to be bound by any agreement entered into by other nations.

No. 7

AMERICAN EMBASSY,
Tokyo, November 16, 1917.

SIR: I have the honor to report, as stated in my previous despatch No. 1 of November 1,⁴ that I reached Tokyo on the afternoon of Thursday, October 25, and was duly received by the Emperor and presented my credentials on Tuesday, October 30, whereupon I assumed charge of the Embassy.

On Thursday, November 1, I made one of the required official calls on the Russian Ambassador, and during our conversation he remarked to me that he was deeply interested in the agreement which had been reached between the United States and Japan in reference to China. As the Embassy had not then received formal advice as to the result of the conversations between the Department and the Viscount Ishii, I was not in a position to make any reply to his comment.

On the following day, November 2, I paid an official call on the French Ambassador, and he at once referred to the agreement which had been reached in reference to China, between Japan and the United States, and then volunteered the information that the representatives of the Allied Powers had been called to the office of the Minister for Foreign Affairs on the previous day, namely, Thursday, November 1, and had been given copies of the notes exchanged between the Secretary of State and Viscount Ishii. Viscount Motono stated to the representatives that he handed these notes to them in confidence and for their information, to be transmitted to their respective Governments, and that he expected they would be duly and formally executed within a day or two, but would not be made public before the 7th of November, and possibly later. As a consequence of this information the notes became the subject of confidential discussion among members of the Diplomatic Corps during the following days. Those representatives whom I saw personally, all expressed warm approval of the result of the negotiations, and felt that the notes would do much to clarify the diplomatic situation throughout the Orient. I heard no criticisms except from the British Ambassador, who feared that the words "special interests" might be the cause of difficulty in the future.

On the afternoon of November 6 I received from the Foreign Office printed copies of the notes.

In the morning newspapers of November 7, the notes were given wide publicity, and editorial comments followed in practically all of the Japanese papers, and also in the foreign papers during the succeeding week. On November 11 I received the Department's cablegram of November 9, 4 p. m.⁴ requesting me to cable a brief summary of press comment, to which I replied on November 14, 6 p. m.⁴

⁴Not printed.

Speaking generally, the joint agreement was greeted with approval by the majority of the Japanese press.

Among prominent educators Mr. Kamada, President of Keio University, is of the opinion that it will be beneficial to both countries, as it recognizes Japan's privileges in the Orient, cements friendship with America, and contributes to the peace of the world. On the other hand Dr. Senga, Professor of International Law in the Kyoto Imperial University, regards the conclusion of this agreement by Japan as one of her most serious diplomatic failures, for she should never have agreed to restrict her freedom of action in China by admitting the open door and equal opportunities, his desire being that Japan and China form an economic league for excluding the influence of European and American countries in the Orient. Dr. Suehiro of the same university is, however, more lenient in his judgment. The Government, he says, must at the risk of being censured by the people for adopting a retrogressive and effeminate policy, abandon its ambition in China, for otherwise, even if it did not lead to a conflict with America, Japan would be regarded by other Powers as an Oriental Germany and be isolated accordingly.

The views of statesmen, politicians, and the official circles in general, as expressed, are more stereotyped. Moreover, those who have any political affiliations are more or less biased in their judgments. Thus the leaders of the Seiyukai and Kokuminto consider the agreement a great success for Ishii's diplomacy, while those who are connected with the Kenseikai, though stating that it was satisfactory on the whole, have attempted to minimize its importance. Viscount Kato, Minister for Foreign Affairs in the Okuma Cabinet and President of the Kenseikai, grudgingly admits that the declaration is a profitable one in so far as America recognizes that Japan has special rights in parts of China contiguous to Japanese territories.

I might add that I have observed two tendencies in the comments of those Japanese with whom I have had the privilege of talking during the past week: One is to interpret very broadly the definition of "special interests," and if possible to disconnect it from any geographical considerations. The second is to express a rather exaggerated delight at what is termed in official Government circles "Viscount Ishii's great diplomatic victory."

On the 8th instant I received the Department's cablegram of November 6, 5 p. m., in reference to the premature publicity of the notes in China. I promptly communicated in writing with the Minister for Foreign Affairs, transmitting the Department's message, and asking for an investigation, as directed. This note I despatched on the morning of November 9, but have as yet received no formal reply. In conversation last evening with Mr. Shidehara, the Vice Minister, he advised me that the Government was making a careful investigation through their representatives in China, and would report to me the results of this investigation as soon as it was completed. Immediately upon receipt of this report, I shall advise the Department by cable, and also transmit it, as directed, to the Legation at Peking.

On November 12 the Chinese Minister left with me a declaration of his Government concerning the American-Japanese exchange of notes of November 2, as follows: [Quotes declaration of the Chinese Government, printed ante.]

For your information I made substantially the following comment thereon to the Minister: There was no thought or intention to bind China; for that reason I had refrained from consulting him while the negotiations were pending; knowledge of negotiations pending and failure to object before completion might really have bound China; our friendship for China unchanged but the financing of the present war prevented large independent investments in China and made inadvisable attempts to secure such investments by financial competition with Japan; China could not longer, because of those conditions, continue to play the United States against Japan in the matter of such investments; that we were still anxious to manifest our friendship by aiding China financially; which, however, was possible only by some arrangement for cooperation with Japan thereby preventing Japan's sole appropriation of the Chinese investment field; I assumed China preferred us to join with Japan rather than to leave China to that country alone.

He asked what "special interests" meant. I said it was the statement of an axiom; that it was a statement which could not be successfully denied and could be universally applied and that, in view of declaration in last clause of note signed by Ishii, it was advantageous to China for both Governments declared themselves opposed it "any government" infringing China's independence and territorial integrity, a declaration which applied to the parties to the understanding as well as to others; that such a bargain seemed decidedly in China's favor; further in reply to his inquiry I stated I believed phrase "territorial propinquity" applied alike to Japan, Russia, France and England and that China might also apply it.

Further, that I believed Chinese Government had acted wisely in presenting memorandum above but that no reservation or caveat could change the natural consequence of propinquity.

Repeat to Peking.

AMERICAN EMBASSY,
Tokyo, November 28, 1917, midnight.

Your telegram of November 5, 6 p. m. [November 6, 5 p. m.], and November 21, 6 p. m. Following letter marked private and confidential received yesterday from Viscount Motono.

MY DEAR AMBASSADOR: [By your] excellency's private and confidential note of the 8th instant you were so good as to communicate to me the substance of a telegram from the Secretary of State calling my attention to the premature publication of the notes recently exchanged between Mr. Lansing and Viscount [Ishii] and you requested that an investigation be made to determine if possible the responsibility for such publication.

Being myself embarrassed as much as the Secretary of State by the disclosure of the contents of the notes in question before the time agreed upon, I did not fail to telegraph to the Japanese Minister to China and to cause thorough inquiries to be made at Peking where the leakage appears to have emanated.

Baron Hayashi now reports that on November 4 he confidentially communicated the text of the notes to Premier Tuan and to Mr. [?] Vice Minister for Foreign Affairs, in the absence of the Foreign Minister on an express message that the whole subject should be kept strictly secret pending official announcement of the documents at Tokyo on the afternoon of November 7. On the evening of November 4 Baron Hayashi received the call of the American Minister and in the course of the conversation with him referred to the subject. He sent to Doctor [Reinsch], American Minister, at the latter's request, a copy of the notes early next morning. On the evening of November 5 Mr. Smith, correspondent of the Associated Press, called upon the Japanese Legation and after having stated that both had learned of the recent exchange of the notes at Washington respecting the Chinese questions he asked for a copy of the correspondence, replying to the questions put to him by the Secretary of the Japanese Legation who received him. He said that private information had reached him from New York late at night on the previous day to the effect that the United States had recognized the special interests of Japan in China and that the Government of the United States and Japan had selected the policy of the open door. The Secretary of Japanese Legation admitted in strict confidence the accuracy of the report but declined to give out the text of the notes.

Baron Hayashi states that prior to the time fixed for publication neither he nor any member of his staff had ever divulged the fact of the exchange of the notes, still less the contents of such documents, to any quarters except to his American colleague and the Chinese Government as above explained. He is unable to discover nor has he any reason to suspect that the revelation originated from the Chinese authorities. He requested the cooperation of Doctor [Reinsch], American Minister, in tracing the source of the information which Mr. Smith had obtained but it now appears that Doctor [Reinsch], American Minister's, efforts in that direction have also proved unsuccessful.

Such is the result of the inquiries made at Peking and while regretting as I do the failure to determine the responsibility of the premature publication, I do not think that any further steps could at this moment be usefully taken to throw light on the mystery.

THE EXPORTATION OF FLOUR FROM CHINA. ATTITUDE OF THE UNITED STATES

File No. 611.9331/36

Minister Reinsch to the Secretary of State

[Telegram—Extract]

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Peking, October 18, 1916, 7 p. m.

In general the Chinese Government has maintained that flour is included within the treaty stipulation forbidding export of grain. This construction clashes with the interests of the Americans concerned who do not desire to ship flour from China but to prevent a situation enabling Shanghai mills to export flour milled from wheat bought far below world's current price because of prohibition of export: removal of this prohibition on wheat would partially restore the price balance. The exportation of flour with a restriction on wheat would be disadvantageous to our interest.

In order to prevent further export of native milled flour I beg to request authorization to state to the Minister for Foreign Affairs that in the event of the Government's granting any other exemptions in favor of Shanghai mills we must consider that it thereby waives the treaty powers of prohibition and entitles Americans export either grain, flour.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, October 21, 1916, 4 p. m.

Your October 18, 7 p. m. If the Chinese Government will definitely take the stand that flour is included within the treaty stipulation forbidding export of grain you will urge the acceptance of the following conditions:

1. That no fee of 80 cents gold a barrel nor any other fee for the removal of the embargo be charged since such fee amounts to an export duty and violates Rule 2.

2. That since the embargo upon the export of wheat has also been lifted repeatedly in recent years as shown by the customs returns, there shall be no lifting of the embargo upon flour at any port unless at the same time there be a removal at the same port of the embargo upon wheat, and

3. That if Chinese be allowed to export either flour or wheat Americans shall also enjoy that same privilege.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Peking, January 16, 1917, 6 p. m.

Your telegram October 21, 4 p. m. After a long evasive correspondence the Chinese Government obstinately takes the position that although the exportation of grains and their products are alike forbidden by treaty, authorization to certain native mills to export a total of one million bags flour is justified on the ground that it is a special exception to enable limited quantity to be exported by reliable Chinese merchants for the relief of Chinese residents abroad.

In view of the influence of the interests involved I am not hopeful of terminating discrimination until the exhaustion of the remaining balance of approximately two hundred thousand bags unless by the use of strong pressure.

I beg to request the Department's views as to the advisability of taking the position that the American company concerned will be supported in a claim for loss of prospective profits on the grain that it desired to export and that failing to receive satisfaction of the claim by other means our Government will insist on reference to arbitration to decide whether the action of the Chinese Government has not definitely cancelled its right to forbid grain exports.

No. 1348

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Peking, January 16, 1917.

SIR: Referring to previous correspondence concerning the export of flour by certain Chinese dealers in exception to the treaty stipulation forbidding such exports, I have the honor to enclose for the information of the Department the following copies of correspondence on the subject:

From Foreign Office, No.	428, of January	14, 1916.
To " " " "	411, " "	24, 1916.
" " " "	491, " Sept.	4, 1916.
From " " " "	508, " "	14, 1916.
To Shanghai " "	1919, " October	21, 1916.
From " " " "	1058, " Nov.	11, 1916.
To Foreign Office, " "	536, " "	22, 1916.
From " " " "	544, " Dec.	6, 1916.
To " " " "	543, " "	16, 1916.
From Foreign Office, " "	555, " January	10, 1917.

From this correspondence the Department will perceive that the attitude of the Chinese Government in this matter has been unsatisfactory—that it has throughout acted evasively and even disingenuously, and that it now stands obstinately on the fantastic contention that its exception to its own construction of the treaties—an exception made in discrimination against foreign interests, for the profit of a particular group of Chinese merchants—is justified by the facts that that discrimination has a definite though very large quantitative limit, and that it is made in favor of "reliable Chinese merchants."

I cannot escape the conclusion that this attitude of the Chinese Government is dictated by subservience to the powerful Shanghai milling interests concerned: and although I am taking occasion to lay the case in person before the members of the Revenue Council, which has authority in this matter, and insist that the discrimination be discontinued as from the Chinese New Year (the 23d instant), I am not hopeful that the desired object can be attained without bringing to bear some such actual or threatened coercion as indicated in my telegram of today's date.

JANUARY 14, 1916.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note (No. 399 of December 11, 1915), relating to the application of American merchants to export flour, in which you state that should the exceptional permission to export be continued American merchants should enjoy the same privilege.

This Ministry communicated with the Revenue Council and has since received a reply, as follows:

"The export of grain is prohibited by the treaties. Because the Chinese residing at Hongkong, Singapore and other places were in urgent need of purchasing food the Chinese Government gave special permission to Chinese merchants to ship flour to these localities as a measure of assistance. The reason for this action being to relieve the Chinese residing abroad it should not on this account be suspected that the stipulations of the treaty are being defeated. Moreover, in shipping grain the Chinese merchants are restricted to a certain amount and they must furnish guaranties stating that the shipment is solely for the relief of Chinese residing abroad. It would be impossible for merchants of low character to export grain for sale in quantity and at their own pleasure."

The temporary permission to Chinese merchants to export grain was given for the sincere purpose of relieving the Chinese residing abroad and is not different from the relieving of distress inside the country. The restrictions as to the amount and as to the furnishing of guaranties are very strict. The relief of Chinese residing abroad thus includes the idea of carefully respecting the law regarding the prohibition to export. The merchants of other nations cannot therefore rely on this as a precedent.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Peking, January 24, 1916.

EXCELLENCY: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note (No. 428) of January 14, dealing with the matter of the export of flour and grain from Shanghai. I regret to state that the Revenue Council has entirely ignored the fact that the flour exported from China under special permit was freely sold to any purchaser in Hongkong and other southern ports. It cannot therefore be distinguished from general commercial export; nor does the treaty provide for exceptional export for the assistance of Chinese residing abroad, under any circumstances.

I have recently been informed that the flour export business from Shanghai * * * has been under the sole control of the chairman of the Chinese Chamber of Commerce in the native city at Shanghai who controls the output of the Lee Dah and the Sun Dah mills at Shanghai, that most of the flour exported comes from these mills, and that the whole arrangement is a result of political influence.

It is therefore necessary for me to insist either that this concession be immediately canceled, or that a similar permission to export grains and flour be given to foreign merchants. In default of such action, I should be compelled to lay the matter before the Diplomatic Corps in order that joint action might be taken for the enforcement of the treaties.

No. 1919

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Peking, October 21, 1916.

SIR: Referring to your Consulate General's despatches of November 13 and 17, 1915,⁴ in regard to the exportation of native milled flour from Shanghai in competition with the American product, I have to advise you that the Legation has now received the following information in regard to this matter:

The treaty prohibition against the exportation of grain and other cereals, which has in general been interpreted by the Chinese Government as including flour as well, was last year relaxed by the granting of a special permission to export a large but limited quantity of native-milled flour from Shanghai: the Maritime Customs at Shanghai were accordingly authorized last year to pass one million bags of such flour for export to Hongkong, Dairen, Singapore, Java and Vladivostok: this authority lapses on November 30 next. It is not known what proportion of the amount so authorized still remains unexported, but on or about the end of last June there was such a balance of two hundred and sixty-eight thousand (268,000) bags.

The Legation is furthermore informed that the flour whose exportation is thus authorized, while paying no export duty, nevertheless pays, for the exceptional privilege so granted, fees to the amount of thirty (30) Shanghai candareens per fifty-pound bag, twenty-five (25) candareens of which go to the Central Government and five (5) candareens to the chamber of commerce at Shanghai, through whose intermediation the matter was arranged.

From the letter addressed to you by the Shanghai Superintendent of Customs on November 16 last (a copy of which was enclosed with your No. 649), and from certain references in the correspondence between the Foreign Office and the Legation on this subject, it would appear that special permission to export flour from Shanghai was granted by the Government to be availed of only by certain Chinese mills: the Legation has, however, understood from Mr. A. S. Fobes (Manager of Fobes Company, Limited) that this permission may be availed of by anyone upon payment of the fees specified.

The Legation desires you to make such inquiries of the Chinese chamber of commerce, of the office of the Shanghai commissioner of customs, of Mr. Fobes, and elsewhere, as will enable you to make a full report in regard to this relaxation of treaty stipulations in favor of native-milled flour, with a particular view to verifying or correcting the statements above quoted, and more especially establishing whether or not the special privilege of exportation has been reserved for the benefit of a Chinese monopoly, and its benefits denied to foreigners. It is desired that this report be submitted in triplicate.

[Extract]

No. 1058

AMERICAN CONSULATE GENERAL,
Shanghai, November 11, 1916.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of the Legation's despatch (No. C. 1919), dated October 21, 1916, in regard to the exportation of native-milled flour from Shanghai in competition with the American product, and to report as follows:

I have learned from reliable sources that native flour, by special permission granted last year, is allowed to be exported through the Chinese customs to the extent of 1,000,000 bags, by anyone presenting a huchao issued by the local superintendent of customs. Originally a time limit of till November 30 of this year was fixed for the exportation of the above amount, but owing to the fact that in the latter part of October last, the unexported number of bags amounted to between 300,000 and 400,000, the time limit was ultimately indefinitely extended to suit the convenience of the exporter, although it is understood that the first proposal was to simply extend the limit till the end of the year. * * *

This special relaxation of treaty stipulations prohibiting the exportation of cereals, was brought about with the purpose of rendering assistance to the Chinese emigrants (Chiao hsiang) residing abroad, on account of the scarcity and high price of foreign flour, and at first applied only to shipments made to Hongkong and Singapore, but later was extended to apply to Java, Vladivostok and Dairen as well. However, it is known that some of the flour thus exported has simply been sent to Hongkong and Singapore, and from thence exported to other countries, some even reaching France.

Although flour thus exported is exempt from the payment of export duties, it pays fees of Mexican 50 cents per fifty-pound bag, or say Taels .30, and in addition a yun tan or transportation tax which varies in accordance with the size of the shipment, but works out at an approximate average of Mexican 50 cents per 500 bags.

I am informed that the customs is not aware of any discrimination against foreign firms, but that their concern is simply with the honoring of huchaos as presented.

Mr. Koo Shung-ih, Chairman of the Nantao chamber of commerce, Shanghai, from whom Mr. F. S. Fobes obtained the information which he later gave to the Legation, was interviewed and largely corroborated the statements made by Mr. Fobes. He stated that to his knowledge some ten or more native mills in Shanghai had availed themselves of the privilege, but that on account of the fact that each fifty-pound bag is taxed the sum of Mexican 50 cents, together with the additional consideration of the high valuation of silver, there has been no special "scramble" on the part of native millers to export under the special regulations. To the above charges should be added the cost of freight to Hongkong or other destination and the yun tan tax. According to Mr. Koo, there have been exported to date some 800,000 bags. This it will be noted is a greater amount than that stated by my informant * * *. He adds that he knows of no arrangement by which the chamber of commerce receives any portion of the special privilege tax, and that the arrangements were made on the petition of the Chinese residing abroad; further, that there is, so far as he knows, no discrimination against foreign exporters, they being free to avail themselves of the same privilege, by obtaining the necessary permission from the superintendent of customs, Shanghai.

The Fisher Flouring Mills Company of Hongkong, within the last few days made application through this office to the superintendent of customs to export a quantity of flour, but the latter replied to my despatch in part, as follows:

* * * "and in all those cases of exportation of flour by Chinese merchants to Hongkong and Singapore, it was only by special leave of the Government that limited quantities of this product were shipped as a food supply to the Chinese residents at these places. This cannot be alleged as a precedent by all other merchants applying for permission to ship such products, as stated in my letter of November 16, last, in reply to your previous request, made in behalf of Fisher Flouring Mills Company, for permission to export flour and wheat. I have reported on the matter to the Revenue Council (Shui Wu Chu) and received its official reply to the effect that the application may be denied in accordance with the treaty provisions. I have now received further instructions from the Shui Wu Chu that no more flour should be allowed to be shipped to the Chinese residents referred to, when the quantities exported arrive at the original limit. Under these instructions we shall have to stop in the immediate future the exportation of flour as a food supply to Chinese residents abroad, which has been done with the special authorization of the Government.

Under these circumstances, I am unable to comply with the request of the American firm—Fisher Flouring Mills Company—to export flour and wheat to Hongkong."

The applicant has been informed that the matter is being referred to the Legation.

This reply is to the same effect as that received by this office under date of November 16, 1915, in response to a similar application. A copy of the reply was transmitted in our No. 649, dated November 17, 1915.

This letter does not bear out the assertions made by the chairman of the chamber of commerce * * *, that there is no discrimination affecting foreign firms.

It developed at the interview with Mr. Koo that the tax of Mexican 50 cents is paid to a Mr. Tau Lae-chuen, in the Bank of China Building, Shanghai, who it appears is a special officer designated by the Central Government to make these collections. It was stated that upon application being made to Mr. Tau, and upon the payment of the special fee, he issues a letter or certificate, which is presented to the superintendent of customs with the formal application for permission to export; and further that any firm, foreign as well as native, can obtain the necessary permission. This office has, however, been unable as yet to confirm this procedure, as Mr. Tau is at present absent in Tientsin.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Peking, November 22, 1916.

EXCELLENCY: I have the honor to recall to your excellency that during the past year I have had occasion to address to you several inquiries in regard to the conditions of the special authorization granted by the Government for the exportation of flour milled in China. It has been a disappointment to me to find that the information given in reply to my various inquiries has been inadequate. In order that I may comply with the instructions of my Government to furnish it with information as to the essential facts of what appears to be a departure from treaty stipulations which discriminates against American trade, I have to request that you advise me on the following points:

1. Does the Chinese Government contend that the exportation of flour or other products of grain is forbidden by the treaty provisions which forbid the exportation of grains of all sorts?

2. If such an embargo on the exportation of flour is actually maintained by the Chinese Government, has any special authorization been granted to export flour from Shanghai? If so, what are the conditions of such special authorization—particularly as to the quantity which may be exported and the period during which such authorization is made available? The Legation is informed that last year special permission was granted to export, through the maritime customs, flour to the amount of 1,000,000 bags; that at least 200,000 bags of the amount so authorized remains still unexported; and that the time for which authorization is valid has been extended indefinitely.

3. If such exportation is permitted, what duties, taxes, or fees are required to be paid upon it? The Legation is informed that no export tax is levied, but that a special officer, designated by the Central Government, collects in behalf of the Government a fee of fifty cents per fifty-pound bag of flour exported, and that there is, in addition, a transportation tax of approximately fifty cents per five hundred bags of flour.

4. To whom, and upon what conditions, are huchaos issued to enable merchants to avail themselves of the authorization to export flour, and particularly, may American merchants avail themselves of the authorization in the same manner as Chinese merchants? I have to point out that the superintendent of customs at Shanghai has persistently refused to grant a request of the American firm—the Fisher Flouring Mills Company—that it be permitted to export flour from Shanghai in the same manner as Chinese merchants, and while acknowledging that Chinese merchants had been allowed to export flour to Hongkong and Singapore, he has stated that the Revenue Council has officially informed him that the application of the American Company “may be denied in accordance with the treaty provisions.”

I beg to request that your excellency take steps to put me in possession, without delay, of the replies to these questions, as desired by my Government.

DECEMBER 6, 1916.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note of the 22d ultimo (No. 536), relating to the application, based on precedent, of an American firm to export flour. Upon receipt thereof this Ministry wrote to the Revenue Council to make an investigation, and has now received a reply as follows:

“Answers to the four queries contained in the American Minister’s note, setting forth the exact facts, have been drawn up.

“The first query was as to whether the exportation of flour or other products of grain is forbidden by the treaties. The Revenue Council notes that the various grains of the country cannot, according to the treaties, be transported abroad, that therefore exportation is forbidden.

“The second query was as to whether any special authorization has been granted to export flour from Shanghai. The Revenue Council would state that owing to the difficulty experienced by the Chinese residents of Hongkong and Singapore in purchasing food supplies, as a result of the sudden outbreak of the European War, special permission was granted to Chinese merchants to ship flour from Shanghai to afford relief. The amount to be exported was fixed and permission to ship was granted for a fixed period, at the expiration of which it was to cease. This case is one of the Chinese themselves shipping grain to relieve Chinese residing abroad and does not differ from the relief of our own countrymen in our own country. It has never been forbidden by the treaties and no violation of the treaties can be pointed to.

“The third query was as to whether fees or transportation taxes were collected. The Revenue Council would state that as this exportation of flour is for the special purpose of affording relief no taxes are collected. How could a special fee and transportation tax be collected?

“The fourth query related to the issuance of huchaos and also as to whether American merchants might avail themselves of the authorization in the same manner as Chinese merchants. The Revenue Council would state that in this special case, whereby authorization is granted to relieve with grain the Chinese residing abroad, huchaos are issued only to the most reliable Chinese merchants.

Other Chinese merchants cannot by making false representations receive them. Nor can foreign merchants rely on this as a precedent to make application to ship. There is no discrimination against American trade involved.

"It is requested that the contents of this communication be transmitted."

I have accordingly the honor to send you this note.

HSIA L-T'ING

[Inclosure 9]

No. 543

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Peking, December 16, 1916.

EXCELLENCY: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your excellency's note of December 6, relating to the export of flour and grain from China.

In its communication to your Ministry the Revenue Council states that the purpose of the flour shipments from Shanghai is to relieve Chinese residing abroad. We are, however, not concerned with the avowed purpose, but with the actual effect of the measure. The effect has been to place on the markets of Hongkong, Singapore, and other far eastern ports, huge quantities of Chinese flour as ordinary merchandise. This special measure is therefore in no way distinguished in its actual results from a general permission to export certain large quantities of flour.

The Revenue Council asks, "How could a special fee and tax be collected?" I would reply that it was collected by the chamber of commerce of Shanghai or by a special agent of the Government at Shanghai, to whom the administration of this measure was entrusted, and that it amounted to fifty cents per fifty-pound bag of flour exported and, in addition, a transportation tax of approximately fifty cents per five hundred bags of flour was collected.

As the Revenue Council states that American merchants will not be permitted to avail themselves of the authorization to export grain in the same manner as Chinese merchants, I am forced to protest in the most emphatic manner, and I have to state that my Government will hold the Government of China responsible for any damages to American merchants through refusal to allow them to participate in such export of grain as may be permitted to others.

In order to avoid grave difficulties, there are only three alternatives to be considered: (a) either all export of grain and flour must remain forbidden; or (b) Americans must be allowed to share in any permission to export which may be granted; or (c) the export of grain and flour must be freely allowed to all. To permit Chinese merchants under the guise of a special arrangement to export, while prohibiting Americans, is a discrimination to which the American Government cannot submit. I therefore am forced to make a request that orders be immediately issued permitting Americans to share in the permission which is enjoyed by others to export flour or grain.

JANUARY 10, 1917.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note of December 16, 1916 (No. 543), in reference to the application, based on precedent, of American merchants for permission to export flour and wheat. Upon receipt thereof this Ministry communicated with the Revenue Council, and has now received a reply as follows:

"The export of flour is regarded by the council as being under a special, not a general, authorization. The four special reasons are here restated:

"1. This country formerly did not allow flour to be exported. Because of the outbreak of the European war the Chinese residing abroad were in want of food and special authorization was given for flour to go forward as a relief measure.

"2. The flour permitted to be exported is limited to a fixed amount. After it has all been shipped no exportation will be allowed.

"3. Special authorization is given for reliable Chinese merchants to export flour. Other Chinese merchants not being able to do so, foreign merchants naturally cannot.

"4. Last year the neighboring countries had a shortage of grain and China, actuated by a spirit of friendship, gave special authorization for grain to be exported as a measure of relief, no objections being raised by foreign countries. Now that our own people are short of food the Government has naturally specially authorized the export of grain as a measure of relief, and this does not constitute the least violation of the treaties. Foreign countries cannot rely on the rule regarding ordinary merchandise to demand similar treatment.

"Of the three proposals now made by the American Minister, the first is that the export of grain and flour must remain forbidden. This is the regular procedure and the Government recognizes it as the natural course to take. But it is necessary to wait until the full amount of the flour, for which authorization to export has previously been granted, has all been shipped, after which the Government will then issue a strict prohibition.

"It is requested that the contents of this communication be transmitted."

EXCELLENCY: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note of January 10 in regard to the export of flour.

In reply I have the honor to state that it is difficult for me to understand how a responsible department of the Government, such as the Revenue Council, can make use of the arguments advanced in this note. I have already stated repeatedly in my communications to your Ministry that the explanation of the shipment of flour as a relief measure is a mere pretext to cover ordinary commercial transactions. I say this because the flour thus exported is sold on the markets of Hongkong, Singapore, etc., to anyone who will buy it. I am informed that upon the Hongkong market alone 350,000 barrels of Chinese flour were sold during the year of 1916.

The idea that reliable Chinese merchants will be permitted to export flour while other Chinese merchants and foreigners are excluded is so novel that I believe you will agree with me that any international court would consider it an insult to its intelligence were such an argument advanced before it.

As always, I have endeavored to show to your Government the utmost patience and consideration in this matter. That patience, however, is necessarily exhausted when such arguments as those discussed above are advanced. I am therefore under the painful necessity of informing you that I shall instruct American merchants desirous of exporting grain or flour from China to offer for exportation such quantities of either as they may desire to ship. Should permission to export be refused these American merchants while export is permitted under any excuse, whatsoever, to Chinese merchants or other foreigners, the American Government will hold the Chinese Government responsible for any damage suffered by the said merchants through the failure to grant permission to export.

With respect to the application of the most favored nation clause to the concessions obtained by Japan in Manchuria and Eastern Mongolia by the Sino-Japanese Treaty of May 25, 1915,⁶⁶ I have the honor to submit the following observations:

It seems to this Legation that the privilege of the most favored nation should be claimed and applied in liberal terms to any rights granted in the Chinese provinces with respect to residence, trade and general interests affecting the rights and the pursuits of individuals.

In the Convention concluded between China and Japan in May 1915, the Japanese Government secured the grant of rights of residence and trade in the interior of Manchuria and Eastern Mongolia. In the course of the negotiations and since the completion thereof, this Legation has assumed, vis-à-vis the Chinese Government, whenever the question has incidentally arisen, the principle that rights thus granted would automatically accrue, by the operation of the most favored nation clause, to the benefit of Americans and of the subjects of other nations having treaties containing that clause. Representatives of the Chinese Government have thus far not made any objection to this interpretation: as a matter of fact, they seemed to be in accordance with it, as well they might be in a desire to prevent the creation of exclusive alien-national spheres in any parts of China.

In the conversation reported by the American Ambassador at Tokyo in his telegram of August 21 last,⁶⁷ of which a paraphrase was transmitted to the Legation with the Department's instruction No. 490 of August 22, the Japanese Minister for Foreign Affairs is stated to have said:

* * * so far as the Sungari River is concerned, Japan has always contended that China's grant of the rights of navigation to Russia ensued automatically to the benefit of Japan and all other nations which have most favored nation treaties with China; that Russia had agreed now not to nullify this claim but that the matter had not been completed yet and as the agreements had not been finished they had not been published but would be as soon as completed.

The new understanding with Russia on this point is here represented as a concession of the validity of the claim that the most favored nation treaty applies to the navigation of the Sungari to the benefit of Japan. If this is true, the right would accrue to other nations as well, and the same principle could with equal justice be maintained with respect to the rights of residence, etc., granted to Japan in Manchuria. There is a broader importance and significance attaching to this matter. A gifted writer, in discussing the recent developments of Japanese policy, uses the following language:

* * * those who have been responsible for the framing of the new Japanese policy have held it essential to their plan to keep Europe and America chained to the principle of extraterritoriality, because that doctrine, imposing as it necessarily does mutual restrictions and mutual limitations in many fields, leaves it free to the Japanese to place themselves outside and beyond those restrictions and limitations, and by means of special zones and special weapons to extend their influence so widely that ultimately the treaty ports will be left isolated and at the mercy of the "higher machinery" which hegemony controls.⁶⁸

It admits of no doubt that should the point be granted that special rights of residence, trade, professional activities, etc., can be given to any nation in any province in China without automatically accruing to other nations by virtue of the most favored nation clause, it would easily be possible, under a maintenance of the fabric of treaties confining extraterritorial privileges of residence to the open ports, to create a situation under which Europeans and Americans would be limited to certain areas, while the broader opportunities in the interior would be enjoyed by Japanese by virtue of special conventions and agreements.

In view of the importance of this matter, not only to American activities in Manchuria, but as a precedent for action affecting the rest of China, I have the honor to request your instructions as to whether the Legation is justified in maintaining that the rights granted to Japanese nationals in Manchuria with respect to matters affecting the status, residence and activities of individuals, accrue to the benefit of American citizens by virtue of the most favored nation clause.

The Secretary of State to Minister Reinsch

No. 558

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, January 19, 1917.

SIR: Adverting to your despatch No. 1222 of October 12, 1916, relative to the question of favored nation rights under the new Russo-Japanese Convention, I have to state that the Department has given further consideration to the points raised by you in the above-mentioned despatch and has arrived at the following conclusions:

It is provided in Article XIV of the Treaty of Peace, Amity and Commerce of 1858 between the United States and China that:

The citizens of the United States are permitted to frequent the ports and cities of Canton and Chau-chau or Swatau, in the province of Kwang-tung, Amoy, Fuh-chau, and Tai-wan, in Formosa, in the province of Fuh-kien, Ningpo, in the province of Cheh-kiang, and Shanghai, in the province of Kiang-su, and any other port or place hereafter by treaty with other powers or with the United States opened to commerce, and to reside with their families and trade there, and to proceed at pleasure with their vessels and merchandise from any of these ports to any other of them.

Under such treaty provisions, it was held by the Department on November 30, 1897, that "citizens of the United States are entitled to frequent and reside at any port open to commerce by the treaty with any power." (Foreign Relations 1897, 76-80.) That ruling, although not specifically so stated therein, seems to have been based upon the theory that those treaty provisions are to be distinguished from the usual most favored nation clauses in treaties and to be regarded as an absolute grant of the rights therein set forth, based only upon the contingency of the opening to commerce of further ports and places in China. That construction of the provisions in question appears to be reasonable, since they do not, in terms, correspond to the usual most favored nation grants but appear to import the automatic extension of certain rights to American citizens upon the happening of certain contingencies.

However, it would appear that there might be some ground for contention on the part of an interested power, that these provisions, so far as they relate to the opening to commerce of a port or place, by treaty with any other Power than the United States, should be construed in the same sense as the usual so-called unqualified most favored nation clause, that is, as intended to apply only to gratuitous concessions.

Article XXX of the said treaty contains the following provisions:

The contracting parties hereby agree that should at any time the Ta Tsing Empire grant to any nation, or the merchants or citizens of any nation, any right, privilege or favor, connected either with navigation, commerce, political or other intercourse, which is not conferred by this treaty, such right, privilege and favor shall at once freely inure to the benefit of the United States, its public officers, merchants and citizens.

Were not the word "freely" used in the last quoted provisions there would seem to be little reason to doubt that the appropriate construction of these provisions would be to regard them as an instance of the so-called unqualified most favored nation clause, concessions under which, according to this Government's interpretation of such provisions, could only be claimed as a result of the grants by China to a third nation not based on reciprocity or mutually reserved interests as between the contracting parties to such grants.

However, the use of the word "freely" in the provisions last set forth must import a qualification to the clause, unless contrary to the rule of construction, this word is to be regarded as used without a meaning. It may be said in this connection that the usual qualification of a most favored nation clause is by a proviso, that any favor granted by one of the contracting parties to a third party shall likewise accrue to the other contracting party, freely, if freely given, or for an equivalent, if conditional, and such qualification, of course, is aimed to set forth in terms the intention that concessions thereunder may only be claimed when based upon grants to third parties of a gratuitous nature.

No reason is perceived why a nation may not also qualify its most favored nation grants in treaties by setting forth that concessions to third Powers shall be available also to the other contracting party without a price, irrespective of what price may be exacted for such concession when originally given.

If it be assumed that a nation has the power to qualify its most favored nation clause in the manner and with the effect last mentioned, it would seem to follow that China must be regarded as having accomplished this result by the insertion of the word "freely" in the last quoted treaty provisions. That word is the one which is ordinarily used in qualified clauses of this character in the alternative to the provision for a conditional grant. No alternative appearing in the provisions under consideration, it would seem that the United States must be considered to be entitled to the concessions set forth in such provisions as a gratuity and irrespective of the price paid by another Power for the grant to it of such concessions.

Therefore, the conclusion of the Department is, that, with respect to the rights of residence and trade and any other "right, privilege or favor, connected either with navigation, commerce, political or other intercourse" which is not expressly conferred by the said treaty of 1858, the United States is justified in maintaining that such of those rights as have been granted to Japanese nationals in Manchuria accrue to the benefit of American citizens by virtue of the treaty provisions herein discussed.

Peking, February 17, 1917.

SIR: I have the honor to enclose herewith a translation of an identic note (No. 562) of the 7th instant,⁴ in which the Ministry for

⁴ Not Printed.

Foreign Affairs communicated a set of regulations for the suppression of the liquor traffic in certain districts of Northern Manchuria, drawn up between the Chinese and Russian local authorities on May 21 last, inviting attention to the 13th Article and asking that in pursuance thereof the American Government make applicable to its citizens the prohibitions established by these regulations. With the note from the Foreign Office I enclose a translation of the Chinese text of the regulations as therein communicated;⁴ and I also enclose a copy of an unofficial English translation from the Russian text, furnished by the Russian Legation here.

In submitting these regulations for the approval of the Department, I beg to invite attention to the somewhat surprising provisions of Article 12, by which the Chinese Government, despite its long maintained claim to the retention of administrative sovereignty in the zone of the Chinese Eastern Railway, impliedly delegates to the Russian authorities the right of legislation in this matter for not only the railway line itself, but, indirectly, for the adjacent zone on either side of the railway. It is possible—though in noting the suggestion I am not disposed to recommend it as advisable—that the Department might think it expedient to accept the regulations, as applicable to American citizens within the 50-verst frontier zone bordering Russian territory, subject to a reservation as to the applicability of Article 12. I am inclined to believe, however, that such a reservation, implying on our part a more scrupulous solicitude in behalf of Chinese sovereignty than the Chinese Government has itself demonstrated in this matter, would tend only to complicate rather than to strengthen our contention in the matter of the status of the Harbin municipality and other questions connected with the administration of the Chinese Eastern Railway Zone.

COLLECTION OF LAWS AND ORDINANCES OF THE GOVERNMENT, PUBLISHED BY THE RULING SENATE AT PETROGRAD, SECTION 1, NO. 220, AUGUST 19TH, 1916, ARTICLE 1791

[Unofficial translation prepared by the Russian Legation at Peking]

PEKING, 1917.

In pursuance of the exchange of notes which took place August 22d/September 4th 1915, between the Imperial Russian Minister in Peking and the Minister for Foreign Affairs of the Chinese Republic, the undersigned, having been duly authorized thereto, have agreed as follows:

ARTICLE 1.—The importation into the 50 versts zone of the Province of Kirin and Heilungchiang adjoining the Russian frontier of all alcohol, alcoholic liquors and wines, irrespective of the method of preparation, is, with the exception of samshoo, prohibited.

ARTICLE 2.—The exportation out of the area of this zone into Russia of all alcohol, alcoholic liquors and wines, irrespective of the method of preparation and inclusive of samshoo, is prohibited.

⁴Not printed.

ARTICLE 3.—The purchase, sale, storage, conveyance and carrying in the above-mentioned zone of alcohol, alcoholic liquors and wines, exclusive of samshoo, is absolutely prohibited.

ARTICLE 4.—The preparation within the limits of the said zone of alcohol, alcoholic liquors and wines is not allowed and all alcohol and vodka distilleries, vodka depots and shops now existing in the said zone must, with the exception of Chinese samshoo distilleries and shops, be definitely closed. Stocks of alcohol, alcoholic liquors and wine on hand at the time of closure may be exported out of the 50 versts zone into China within a period of six months.

ARTICLE 5.—(The text of this article will be determined by agreement between Wai Chiao Pu and the Imperial Russian Legation in Peking.)

ARTICLE 6.—Persons guilty of a breach of the preceding articles shall be held legally responsible; while persons assisting in the discovering of the guilty shall receive rewards according to a fixed scale and alcohol, alcoholic liquors and wines discovered together with all apparatus and appurtenances used in the preparation, storage and conveyance thereof shall be confiscated and sent to the nearest competent Government institution for destruction.

ARTICLE 7.—The quantity of samshoo produced by the samshoo distilleries at present established within the limits of the 50 versts zone of the Province of Kirin and Heilungchiang adjoining the Russian frontier must be limited to the quantity of samshoo now distilled by them and exclusively required for the needs of the Chinese population.

NOTE.—A list of such distilleries together with particulars as to the productive capacity of each of them will be supplementarily communicated by the Chinese Government within a period of six months from the date on which this agreement goes into force.

ARTICLE 8.—The opening within the aforesaid zone of new samshoo distilleries in excess of those enumerated in the above-mentioned list shall not be permitted.

ARTICLE 9.—In like manner, the opening within the 50 versts zone of new samshoo shops and depots shall not be allowed and the quantity of samshoo imported into the zone together with the volume of business transacted by samshoo depots and shops may only be increased in proportion to the growth of the population of the zone and shall not exceed the limits of the normal individual demand, namely, 12 catties per head yearly.

ARTICLE 10.—The exportation of samshoo out of the above-mentioned 50 versts zone into Russia and the sale of it to Russian subjects within the said zone are prohibited.

ARTICLE 11.—The supervision over the strict observance of Articles 7, 8, 9, and 10 of this agreement shall be the responsibility of the Chinese Government institutions exercising control over samshoo distilleries, depots, and shops. It will be the duty of these institutions to render an exact account of the quantity of samshoo imported and of the total production in the district subject to the stipulations of this agreement and also, to establish external marks distinguishing samshoo offered for sale from all other preparations of alcohol.

ARTICLE 12.—The Chinese Government undertakes to introduce within a zone extending 10 versts (20 Chinese li) each side of the Chinese Eastern Railway line measures against alcoholism fully corresponding to all such measures as shall be adopted within the limits of the area of the said railway according as these measures are introduced. Due and timely notice of the introduction of such measures shall be given to the Chinese Government.

As regards samshoo, as soon as the preparation and sale of alcohol and alcoholic liquors shall be entirely prohibited and suppressed within the area of the Chinese Eastern Railway, the sale of that liquor to Russian subjects in the above-mentioned zone and its exportation out of that zone into Russia shall in like manner be prohibited. Further, the establishment of samshoo distilleries and shops in places where such did not previously exist shall not be allowed to exceed the amount at present produced and sold.

ARTICLE 13.—The Russian and Chinese Governments shall enter into negotiations with the Foreign Powers with the object of securing the application of the present agreement to foreign subjects in the places open to foreign trade situated in the regions in which this agreement is operative.

ARTICLE 14.—The Chinese authorities will see to it that no person infringes the stipulations of this agreement.

On the request of the Russian authorities, the competent Chinese institutions will place at their disposal the necessary detailed information respecting the struggle with alcoholism.

If Russian officials deem it necessary to visit any of the regions mentioned in this agreement in order to procure information, they shall give due notice thereof to the Chinese authorities who will render them every assistance.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Bogotá, February 26, 1917, 5 p. m.

I have just had conversation with Minister for Foreign Affairs regarding treaty.

Notice of probable postponement of consideration of the treaty as reported in press despatches has produced press attacks. Editorial yesterday morning by General Carlos Cuervo, known to the Department of State because of his speech at banquet in Boston following second Scientific Congress, advocates that the Colombian Government withdraw its approval of treaty, stating that the long delay has placed Colombia in a ridiculous position and suggesting that, because of actual world conditions, more satisfactory arrangements might be made by Colombia. This might mean treating with another nation.

Minister for Foreign Affairs requests me to ask for authorization present note to Foreign Office for publication giving, if it is possible, text of President's letter to Senate Committee, and the reply thereto. Colombian Government has been informed that Senator Stone suggested that treaty would receive more favorable treatment, if considered in special session of the Senate.

Please instruct by telegraph.

SIR: In confirmation of my cablegram of to-day, 5 p. m. [26], I have the honor to inform the Department that I was called to the Ministry for Foreign Affairs by the Minister this afternoon regarding the treaty pending between the United States and Colombia relative to the Panama Canal, et cetera.

As I stated in my cablegram, the notice, as it has appeared in the local press, to the effect that the Senate would not be able to consider the question of the approbation of the treaty in question during the present session has aroused considerable resentment and newspaper attacks. I enclose a copy together with translation, both in duplicate, of the editorial by General Carlos Cuervo Marquez mentioned in the cablegram referred to above.² This is one of similar articles which have been appearing of late in the daily press. When it was learned that the President had asked the Committee on Foreign Affairs to take up the consideration of the treaty it was said that the President had only done so because the United States found itself facing the possibility of war and saying that it probably would be better for Colombia if the treaty were not approved. Later, upon the notice that the treaty would not be considered during the present session, came a cry of resentment. In other words, when confidence was felt that the treaty would soon be approved there appeared in some articles a spirit of bravado and now when it would seem that, even though facing the danger of being compelled to enter the European war, the United States may again delay the consideration of the treaty the attitude changes to resentment and it has been remarked that, while twenty-five millions of dollars can be paid for the Danish West Indies, Colombia is to suffer the loss of Panama without indemnification, Panama which is worth much more. General Cuervo was to have dined at the Legation last evening together with Dr. Francisco José Urrutia but upon the appearance of the editorial in reference he politely recalled his acceptance. Dr. Urrutia was most amiable and still continues to express the hope that the treaty will be approved. It might be added that the indemnification considered would greatly benefit this Government at this time.

The Minister for Foreign Affairs called me this afternoon to make the suggestion that I request authorization to present a note to this Government for publication which would tend to calm the resentment aroused by the belief that the Senate intends to continue to delay the discussion of the treaty and possibly eventually to disapprove it. As the Colombian Minister at Washington has been ill, the Consul informed this Government that Senator Stone had advised the President that it would be difficult to obtain the necessary majority in favor of the treaty if taken up during the present session and that he had suggested that the matter would be given more favorable consideration if treated upon in special session. The Minister for Foreign Affairs believes that the publication of this, through a note from this Legation, would have a beneficial effect upon the public opinion. In this I concur.

owing to the short session of Congress and the extraordinary pressure of business it was felt inadvisable to press for action on treaty in the Senate at this time. The Senate has been called in special session on March 5, one of the principal reasons for the President calling it being the desire of the Government to have action on the treaty. You will also state that it is sincerely hoped that there will be no misunderstanding on the part of the Government and people of Colombia as to the situation set forth above and that it is felt that the interests of the two countries would be best served if the Government of Colombia would refrain from taking any hurried step at this time in regard to withdrawal of its approval of the treaty.

You may also direct the attention of the Minister for Foreign Affairs to the very critical international situation which has been absorbing the attention of Congress and which has prevented, on account of the many details to be considered, action on various pressing matters, and you may say that a special session of the Senate will leave ample opportunity to give the treaty full consideration.

You will inform the Minister for Foreign Affairs that this Government has no objection to publication of President's letter and Senator Stone's reply thereto. Text of both letters follow in subsequent cablegrams.

SIR: Convinced that at this momentous and solemn hour in the history of humanity the supreme and clear duty of all the countries of America is to secure the benefits of collective action for the defense of their noble ideals of liberty within justice and the economic interests of the continent, my Government has endeavored to settle old boundary litigations with neighboring Republics in the regions of the Orinoco and Amazonas, accomplishing to that end an amicable settlement, in which, as I have already stated to your excellency, Colombia has sacrificed valuable portions of her territory for the sake of peace and concord.

Animated thusly, and for the selfsame aim of fostering harmony and solidarity, my Government, fully alive to the urgency of unifying continental interests, hopes to-day for the ratification of the pact which, signed in Bogotá on April 6 of the year 1914, is to renew the old-standing friendship between Colombia and the United States.

Admittedly the pact in itself comprises an act of justice and of international value. That has been acknowledged by eminent men in this country and in Latin America.

Furthermore, filed in the archives of the Legation under my charge, there are numerous letters that have been received from leading capitalists and business men in such centers of progress as New York, Philadelphia, Chicago and many other cities. In all of these letters is echoed a lively interest in favor of the approval of the treaty between Colombia and the United States, a treaty which, submitted by the Executive branch of this Government to the approval of the Senate, has lain in the councils of this body since 1914.

It is impossible to allow the pending question between our two countries go on any longer without receiving a satisfactory solution. And all the more so when that solution is pressingly urged by the demands of justice, by potent reasons of international wisdom and by valuable interests of the American people.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,

Department's February 28, 7 p. m. Following is text of the President's letter to Senator Stone:

I take the liberty of writing to ask you if it will not be possible to press the pending treaty with Colombia again for ratification. I must admit my surprise that there should be any objection to its consideration or to immediate action upon it in view of the unusual circumstances of the moment.

The main argument for the treaty and for its immediate ratification is, of course, that in it we seek to do justice to Colombia and to settle a long standing controversy which has sadly interfered with the cordial relations between the two Republics. In addition to that argument which should be conclusive, there is this only too obvious consideration, that we need now and it is possible shall need very much more in the immediate future all the friends that we can attach to us in Central America, where so many of our most critical interests centre.

I would very much like your advice as to this matter. It seems to me that those who oppose this treaty must be thoughtless of the present situation.

No reply was sent by Senator Stone to this letter but the following statement was issued by him to the press:

I am in full sympathy with the President's desire to have the treaty with Colombia ratified. I think its ratification is of great importance from both the standpoint of business and from the standpoint of national security. I would put behind us as far as possible the events that led up to the secession of Panama, and the establishment and recognition of an independent Government there. I would forego as far as possible a discussion of the means by which the Canal Zone was acquired. All these things have gone into history and I would not recall them in a way calculated to excite controversy on party lines.

I would like to have the treaty considered and disposed of solely on its merits. It is important for commercial reasons that the people of Colombia and of all the Latin American States should know and feel that the United States desires to deal with them generously and in the spirit of justice and that it is our sincere wish to establish between them and this country a spirit of mutual confidence, friendship and cordiality; and for even more important reasons which concern the national defense it is especially desirable that this cordial spirit of international good will should prevail between the United States and Colombia.

This is the view of President Wilson and so far as I know, of all democratic Senators. Unfortunately it appears that a sufficient number of republican Senators are opposed to it to defeat its ratification, since it requires a two-thirds vote to ratify it. I think it would be useless to press the consideration of the treaty at this session, but if the President should call an extra session of the Senate after March 4 I will do all I can to bring the matter to some conclusion.

REASONS WHICH PROMPT THE RATIFICATION OF THE TREATY WITH COLOMBIA

[Handed to the Secretary of State by the Colombian Minister March 12, 1917]

1. The United States needs to perfect its title of ownership in the Panama Canal as recognized by eminent Americans.

2. Colombia's claim is extremely just from all points of view. Mr. Roosevelt himself has categorically confessed that he took the Isthmus, despite the fact that the United States by the Treaty of 1846, and in compensation for the advantages received therefrom, was pledged to maintain the sovereignty and property of Colombia over the Isthmus of Panama.

3. The twenty-five millions which the United States offers as indemnity are not even the tenth part of the damages suffered by Colombia.

4. Mr. Roosevelt himself has recognized the duty of giving satisfaction to Colombia inasmuch as he authorized his Secretary of State—the eminent jurist, Mr. Elihu Root—to draw up a treaty with the Colombian Plenipotentiary, Mr. Enrique Cortes. That authorization is a manifest admission of the obligation on the part of the United States to repair the damages caused to Colombia.

5. During the Taft Administration Minister DuBois was twice sent to Bogotá to propose arrangements which have served as a basis for the treaty now awaiting the approval of the American Senate.

6. The ratification of the treaty cannot be refused for reasons of political partisanship. It is a matter of national interest, and it is beyond question that the American people desire the settlement of the pending question with Colombia.

7. In the present world crisis the United States should undertake continental politics tending, at all odds, to secure the unification of the Americas. When this unification shall be solemnly proclaimed in a compact whose objective be the preservation of peace and the fostering of the progress of all the nations of this Hemisphere, then the Monroe Doctrine shall have been complied with in its broad and generous purpose.

Washington, March 17, 1917, 6 p. m.

Department's February 28, 7 p. m. Senate adjourned at 3 p. m. yesterday until April 16. Consideration of the treaty was suspended until the extra session of Congress in April.

You may explain to Minister for Foreign Affairs that as extra session was called for April 16, there was but little time in special session of Senate for discussion of treaty and for that reason it was felt that there would be more chance of success in coming session of Congress. The prospects of confirmation were observed to be growing distinctly better under the influence of opinion in the country and it was felt to be wise to let this influence mature, as it is expected it will now that the significance of the treaty has been made clear at the session just interrupted.

AMERICAN LEGATION,

Bogotá, March 24, 1917.

SIR: Previous to the receipt of the instruction of the 17th instant the press had published a cable stating that the consideration of the treaty in question had been withdrawn and conveyed the impression that this further delay meant its ultimate defeat. Upon the receipt of the Department's cablegram of March 17 I verbally informed the Minister for Foreign Affairs of its contents. The Minister seemed somewhat relieved and asked me to present a note to the same effect for publication so as to calm the feeling of doubt and pessimism aroused by the press notices. In compliance with the Minister's request and feeling that the publication of the sense of the Department's instruction would allay somewhat the increasing irritation of the public, I sent the note, a copy of which I enclose herewith. This note was published on the following day and appears to have had the effect desired. However, as I stated in my cable of this morning, the long delay in the consideration of the pending treaty has not been forgotten and is the cause of deep resentment.

The question of the treaty is no doubt the great subject of the day in Colombia. The Minister for Foreign Affairs is apparently greatly worried, fearing the failure of the approval of the Senate. This spirit prevails throughout the governmental, political and influential social and commercial life of the capital. There is much talk of the moral and financial benefits to be derived by Colombia should the treaty be approved and the ratifications exchanged. Its refusal by the Senate would cause a deep-set and long standing bitterness towards the United States. As I mentioned in my reply to the Department's cable of the 22d instant, the tension of feeling is great.

MR. MINISTER: With reference to my Note No. 237 of the 7th instant by which I had the honor to inform your excellency that a special session of the Senate had been called on the 5th instant and that one of the principal reasons for such session was the desire of my Government to obtain action on the treaty pending between Colombia and the United States, I now have the honor to advise your excellency that at that session, which adjourned on March 16th, it was decided not to urge the consideration of the treaty because of the lack of proper time.

Your excellency's Government well knows the keen and sincere desire of the President to obtain the ratification of the treaty. It was only because of the unusual press of business presented at the short special session that the discussion of the treaty was suspended until the extraordinary sessions of Congress beginning on the 16th of April next, when it is felt there will be more chance of a successful issue. The prospects of the approbation of the Senate were observed to be growing distinctly better because of the change of opinion throughout the country. No. 24

AMERICAN CONSULATE,
San José, January 27, 1917.

SIR: I have the honor to report that this morning at ten a revolution was started in San José by Minister of War Federico Tinoco, who immediately took possession of the central and large armory of the city and the telegraph and cable offices. There was no surface indication of any unrest on the part of the people or discontent as to the policy of the administration of President González. Some firing was had later at the Post Office and rumor has it that three civilians were killed there, being Ricardo Peña and two postmen. Col. Picardo Chacon is also reported killed because he refused to surrender. At 12.30 today the President's Mansion and adjoining armory were taken by the revolutionaries, there being but 100 men with rifles there to defend them.

About 11 a. m. Secretary of State Acosta called this Consulate by telephone and said that President González was coming here for refuge. I suggested that he had better go to the Legation, but said if he came to the Consulate everything possible would be done for his protection. Later it was reported that he had reached our Legation about midday and was still there with other authorities, including Maximo Fernandez, President of Congress and Manuel Castro Quesada, the Minister to Washington.

Mr. Harry Berliner of the Department of Justice who was in the city and had been at the Consulate yesterday was very active and useful in rendering aid, as otherwise, the Consulate would have been without any aid whatever. Captain A. C. Cron of the 11th U. S. Infantry, Lieut. Uhl detailed at West Point, here on leave, also called and tendered their services, as also Dr. Louis Schapiro, Chief of the Rockefeller Foundation in Costa Rica.

Many American citizens, tourists and others called at the Consulate during the day to seek information but nothing of value could be told to them. So far as is known all of the armories have been finally surrendered to the representatives of General Tinoco. The Minister of Government of Police who was on his way from the town of Heredia about seven miles away with some troops was overpowered by the followers of General Tinoco and he was bound and brought a prisoner to the town. It is reported that Lic. Dr. Pacheco, chief counsel for the Northern Railway Co., the line between here and Limón controlled by the United Fruit Company, has advised the manager to do nothing in the way of attempting to run trains without the approval of the former Minister of War, Tinoco. Proclamation has been issued by the Military Dictator, former Minister of War Federico A. Tinoco announcing that he has taken control to save the country. Another has been issued by his Secretary of State for War and Marine. Copies of each of these are enclosed herewith.¹ El Imparcial, the daily paper which has been supporting the administration of President González came out with a special sheet praising the action of General Tinoco. A copy of this is also enclosed.¹ It might be interesting to know that the editor of the special sheet had recently been deposed from the paper and another man put in his place, but this morning the other man was forcibly removed and the editor friendly to the revolution put in control.

Rumor also has it that about two o'clock this morning, i. e. Saturday, 27 inst., at 2 a. m. some loyal supporters of President González heard of the intended revolution and succeeded in getting some provisions and munitions into the armory of District No. 1, being nearest the Executive Mansion, so that it held out against the revolutionaries until after midday.

That the revolution was well planned is evidenced by the number of men in civilian dress who were given rifles and placed on picket duty. Men in uniform were stationed at the most prominent crossings of streets.

A report came to the office tonight that General Tinoco would have a demonstration before our Legation tonight and would request recognition of his Government. On attempting to advise our Minister of the same I was advised that the telephone communications with the Legation had been broken and Mr. Berliner went to advise him in person, if possible.

Further information which will likely be more reliable than that gathered under existing circumstances will be reported as obtained.

A few minutes later I was informed that the President's carriage had brought the President, Castro Quesáda, an aide de camp and secretary, with guns and pistols drawn. By the time I could dress and get down stairs, about ten, [?] the Legation was filled with frightened men to such an extent that I had to use the pantry for my office. I have since fed and sheltered the President and ten to fifteen others. Conditions for work have been extremely bad.

It is important to note that the condition appears reverse of that described in 51 of instructions to diplomatic officers; it was the Government which sought asylum.

When it was reported that American lives were in danger, I authorized the statement that there would be no intervention. At once quiet came and matters proceeded as before the coup d'état. My January 30, 6 p. m., describes steps should be taken legalizing de facto Government.

I have arranged for safe conduct of González and Castro Quesáda to the Fruit Company's ship Metapan sailing to-morrow for Havana and New York.

Tinoco has since declared amnesty for all and the situation is cleared for the next step, namely, what degree of recognition shall be accorded to Tinoco for a modus vivendi.

The Costa Rican Minister to the Secretary of State

[Translation]

COSTA RICAN LEGATION,
Washington, February 28, 1917.

EXCELLENCY: Pursuant to instructions from Mr. Alfredo González, Constitutional President of the Republic of Costa Rica, I have the honor to present to your excellency herewith a memorandum relating the facts connected with the treason perpetrated by Minister Tinoco on January 27 last, and to reiterate the request made by the President viva voce to your excellency on the day you had the kindness to receive that high official in the State Department.

The President wishes to have it clearly settled that he did not come to ask that American forces go to my country in order to overthrow the de facto Government presided over by Tinoco and to restore him, González, to the post that lawfully belongs to him, nor to place therein any of his personal or political friends. On this point Mr. González maintains the same invariable attitude which he expressed when your excellency saw fit to intimate to him the expediency of his reoccupying his post until the end of his term.

Mr. González is not actuated in this matter by the slightest idea of personal advantage, the only thing he desires being that his country may return as soon as possible to constitutional order. For this the smooth and unobstructed course which he approves is the same one which both your excellency and His Excellency President Wilson stated to Mr. González as having already been adopted by the American Government in this affair, viz., the non-recognition of the Tinoco Government, either now when he is acting as a dictator or later on when a farcical election, carried out and directed under his control, invests the traitorous Minister with the pompous and illegal title of Constitutional President of Costa Rica.

Neither Tinoco nor any of his relatives or friends can represent the spontaneous wish of the Costa Rican people, and the most effective and practical way in which that people can continue to enjoy the peaceful and constitutional life it has been leading for half a century consists in having the traitor not reap the fruits of his crime, whether it be in a direct form or in an indirect one through some of his protégés.

And in order that neither Tinoco nor any of those surrounding him may be able to perpetuate themselves in power, nothing is needed but a negative act by the United States Government, that is, the non-recognition of that régime.

In view of the bad economic situation of the Costa Rican Government, which situation President González thought he could remedy by establishing the tax reforms undertaken by him, the life of that Government is impossible without the cooperation of foreign capital, or, more properly speaking, American capital, for it is well known that Europe is not now in a position to divert a cent of its resources in order to finance governments on this continent, and this capital could not go to Costa Rica without a responsible Government being first established there with which to deal.

With the resources which Tinoco and his followers could lay their hands on in the interior of the country, the present Government could not live over two or three months. They would then necessarily be compelled to capitulate in favor of some third party whom both Mr. González and his friends and partisans would be willing to support resolutely notwithstanding such third party were our political enemy. The only thing we ask is that it may not be Tinoco or any of his relatives, or any of the persons intimately connected with the criminal move of January 27 or with the pseudogovernment which was afterwards established.

With the assurances [etc.]

MANUEL CASTRO QUESADA

[Inclosure]

MEMORANDUM PREPARED BY MANUEL CASTRO QUESADA, ENVOY EXTRAORDINARY AND MINISTER PLENIPOTENTIARY OF COSTA RICA, FOR CONSIDERATION BY HIS EXCELLENCY THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

On the 27th of January last, about ten o'clock in the morning, the Costa Rican Minister of War, Don Federico A. Tinoco, in defiance of the authority of the Constitutional President of the Republic, Licenciado Don Alfredo González Flores, proclaimed himself as Chief Executive of the nation under the title of Provisional Chief.

The movement was supported by the officers in command and subordinate officers of the barracks known as El Principal and La Artillería in which two places are located the entire military armament and equipment of the Republic, so that whoever secures control of those depots, secures, ipso facto, control of the whole country. The commanding officer of the Second Section of the Police, together with his subordinate officers, also incorporated themselves with the movement at its inception, and there then remained faithful to the legitimate President only the First Section of the Police and the Presidential Guard. President González, therefore, could have put forth some measure of resistance; but this he preferred to avoid, as resistance would have meant a number of innocent victims and incalculably disastrous consequences for the country.

Such, then, were the considerations that moved President González to refrain from resistance by force. He at once released the troops that were faithful to him, and took refuge in the American Legation, whence, at the end of a week, and still under the protection of the Stars and Stripes, he set forth to take ship at Port Limón.

The facility with which Mr. Tinoco was able to carry out his criminal purpose may be explained by the blind confidence wherein he had been held by the President, and by the unshakable faith that is the natural inspiration of military loyalty and honor. Tinoco, besides being the Minister of War, was Commander General of the barracks of the capital and Director General of Police, three offices that have always heretofore been exercised by different persons, but which the President entrusted to Tinoco in the belief that his loyalty was a guaranty against any possibility of disturbance of the civil order.

Mr. Tinoco, from the moment of the inauguration of the Government he betrayed, had had in view the coup he finally achieved, and had from the beginning devoted himself to the development of his plans. To that end, and counting always on the absolute liberty of action allowed him by the President in his branch of the Government, he gradually introduced into the barracks elements that he knew would support him in the treason he was preparing for; by gifts and favors he attracted to his side the military personnel of the government, dismissing or assigning to posts in which they could not interfere with his designs all officers who, he feared, would not adhere to his plans; and so, when the moment arrived, Mr. Tinoco was able, without resistance on the part of the barracks—indeed, with their active help—to become master of the situation and to impose his will on the Republic.

On that instant was inaugurated in Costa Rica a régime absolutely opposed to existing law, and presided over by the person least qualified to direct the destinies of a nation. Unscrupulous and wholly without enlightenment, Mr. Tinoco has never participated in public affairs, and his history for the past forty years is confined to the fact that he is the son of a distinguished family which sent him to be educated abroad. His acquirements resulting from that education were limited to a certain skill in dress and deportment such as characterizes a man of fashion. With no other endowment than such personal graces, he returned to his country where he soon became known for his amorous adventures, an inordinate addiction to gambling, and duelling. He is a very pleasant fellow, and when a disease completely obliterated his scalp, eye-brows, eye-lashes, beard and mustache, and his physical condition became such as to interfere with his social triumphs, he dedicated himself to politics, and by means of his consummate skill in ingratiating, obtained, through a leader of one of the political parties in Costa Rica, a seat in Congress as a deputy. He there demonstrated his absolute ignorance concerning all public questions, but as he was known to be impetuous and very ready to resent by force any offense or insult, he was favored by his party and served it in politics as a sort of bravo of the Middle Ages.

The political evolution of 1914 placed the Presidency of the Republic in the hands of Don Alfredo González, and that gentleman, having entertained a true affection for Tinoco, and having believed him to be a loyal adherent, decided to entrust to him the Ministry of War, in the conviction that he could rely on his strong arm with entire security and so dedicate himself without anxiety to the great work to which all his energies were to be devoted, e. g., the reconstruction on a scientific and rational basis of the nation's finances which had theretofore been administered on foundations empirical and absurd.

From the very moment when Tinoco was raised to the office of Minister, the entire country predicted the very thing that happened. Indeed, on a certain occasion his excellency the President of Nicaragua, Don Adolfo Díaz, through the medium of the Costa Rican Minister at Managua, warned President González that Tinoco would betray him. But President González was deaf to all such warnings, both from within as well as from without the country, and instead of removing Tinoco from office continued day by day to repose in him more and more of his confidence and conferred upon him an increasing measure of public duties, until, as above stated, on the day when Tinoco perpetrated his great crime, that false friend occupied the offices of Minister of War, Commander General of the Barracks of the Capital and Director General of Police.

The time fixed by the Constitution for holding the presidential elections approached, and the writer, believing that the best interest of the country called for the continuation in power of President González, for an additional term, conferred with Minister Tinoco and proposed the idea. Tinoco manifested entire concurrence therewith, availed himself of the opportunity to reaffirm his loyalty and adherence to the President, and in company with Don Juan Rafael Arias, Minister of the Interior, and the undersigned, called upon the President and begged him to accept the candidacy for a second term.

The President, in positive and unequivocal terms, made it clear to us that he would not accept reelection, and, to avoid misunderstanding on this point, and to make his intentions perfectly understood by all, immediately summoned the other members of the Cabinet, Messrs. Acosta, Foreign Minister; Guardia, Minister of the Treasury, and Pinto, Minister of Public Works, and in their presence reiterated his unshakable determination not to accept reelection. One of Mr

González's principal reasons for not accepting that proposition, and which he expressed to his neighbors, was that, engaged as he was in agrarian, taxation and banking reforms, reforms that had for their object the introduction of a more just distribution of public burdens and national production to prevent the holding of immense extensions of uncultivated land by a single person, and the devising of means whereby all Costa Ricans might develop the great possibilities of labor offered by their country, his work must of necessity interfere with the interests of the wealthy classes to the benefit of the poorer classes; and that, therefore, the great power represented by capital, which up to that time had weighed heavily upon the poorer classes, who had borne the largest part of the burden of national support under the system of indirect taxation that alone, thus far, had existed in the country, would bitterly oppose his reelection and interpose every obstacle thereto within their reach.

The President said to us, "I understand that my reforms will seriously affect my popularity. If I wish to continue in power, I must not provoke the hostility of the wealthy class; but as I seek only the welfare of Costa Rica, I cheerfully sacrifice any personal ambition I may have and shall continue to carry forward my projects of reform. I, therefore, cannot launch my candidacy for a second term, but instead will have the satisfaction of knowing that I have endowed the country with equitable and just laws that will place upon all the inhabitants of the country the obligation to contribute to the public expenses thereof according to their economic capacity, a contribution that will increase progressively for the more powerful classes."

The writer quotes the above declaration of President González because the fundamental reason put forth by Tinoco in his proclamations and documents in justification of his act is that he brought about the coup d'état solely for the purpose of preventing the President's reelection. And yet, as has been stated, Tinoco himself heard the President's answer that he would not accept the candidacy for a second term!

The fact that after the treason was consummated Tinoco surrounded himself with numerous adherents relatively important, finds explanation in reason of different nature. In the first place the fear inspired by the Tinoco brothers—men without scruples, possessed of a history showing a homicide and a series of acts of violence of abominable character,—moved most people to prefer to affect a measure of acquiescence rather than bring down upon their heads the wrath and vengeance of men known to the country as wholly implacable. Another cause lies in the satisfaction resulting to the reactionaries and great owners of uncultivated lands from the knowledge that with the González Government disappears the land tax.

In this connection the writer is constrained to remark upon the notable assistance given to Tinoco by the American concern known as the United Fruit Company. Assistance was given by that company to such an extent that the American Minister at San José found it necessary to send one of the clerks of his Legation to Port Limón in order to transmit to the Department of State a report of what was going on. The company positively refused to allow the use of its wireless stations or telephone lines, and even the special train asked by the Minister to send the clerk to Port Limón was not granted until after five hours of constantly repeated requests. This interest of the United Fruit Company is explained, in the first place, by its disinclination to accept the new system of taxation, and, in the second place, by the personal friendship which for many years has united Mr. Minor C. Keith (one of the principal directors of the company) with the Tinoco family. Mr. Keith, who is before all a business man in the broadest sense of the term, well knows what a good business can be done with the aid of a government that is somewhat unscrupulous, and knows also that no one in Costa Rica is better qualified to collaborate with him than Tinoco.

It is a matter of common knowledge that Mr. Keith is now seeking to advance a project that will give him control over all the water power of the country, a project which about six months ago was submitted to the consideration of President González, but which the latter indignantly rejected, acting in that matter as he has acted in all matters throughout his entire life, as a patriot and as a man of spotless honor.

Without the possibility of a doubt we can assert, however, that, under Tinoco, the project will prosper, and under conditions more burdensome to the country but advantageously to the concessionary and those who will assist him in carrying through the concession.

Such, then, in general lines, are the events that have just taken place in Costa Rica, and such is the moral aspect of their protagonist.

File No. 818.00/203

The Agent of the De Facto Government of Costa Rica to the Secretary of State

THE ARLINGTON,
Washington, March 12, 1917.

MR. SECRETARY: I have the honor to hand you herewith a memorial in which are set forth the reasons underlying the deposition of Don Alfredo González from the Presidency of Costa Rica on the 27th of last January, and the proclamation of Don Federico Tinoco as Provisional Chief of the Republic pending the establishment, by free popular elections, of the constitutional régime.

As an accompaniment to the memorial, I enclose a translation of certain statements made by Don Máximo Fernández, ex-leader of the Republican party in Costa Rica, in an interview granted by him to La Información of San José and published in that newspaper's issue of February 24, ultimo, copy of which issue I also enclose herewith.¹ These statements are of the first importance in making clear the truth respecting the project for his reelection pursued by Don Alfredo González and the methods by which he proposed to carry out his project.

I take pleasure in placing myself at the disposition of the Department of State for the purpose of explaining, or adding to, the facts set forth in my memorial, and answering any adverse criticism or charges that may have been lodged against Don Federico Tinoco at the Department.

With assurances [etc.]

R. FERNÁNDEZ GUARDIA

MEMORIAL

The undersigned, as agent of the de facto Government of the Republic of Costa Rica, has the honor to submit for the consideration of the Department of State the following statement, in order that the Government of the United States may be fully informed as to the facts and reasons that underlay the upheaval of the 27th of January, 1917, in Costa Rica, which resulted in the overthrow of the administration of Don Alfredo González and the proclamation of Don Federico Tinoco as the Provisional Chief of the Republic.

At the outset it must be observed that after more than forty years of peace and constitutional government a country as quiet and well ordered as Costa Rica could not have had recourse to such measures unless swayed by reasons of a powerful and urgent nature. Such reasons were in fact present, and, for a proper comprehension thereof, should be studied from their very inception. This makes it necessary to enter into a brief historical narrative.

Costa Rica, from the time of her emancipation from Spain, has been governed practically by a sort of oligarchy similar to that which has controlled Chile—with this difference, however, that what may be called the Costa Rican oligarchy is not an oligarchy exclusively of patrician families, but, rather, one of intellect. In its ranks have always figured many men of humble origin, who, nevertheless, because of their recognized merit and honorable character, have discharged the highest functions of the State. In a word, what, for want of a term that would better describe that particular directive group, I call the Costa Rican oligarchy, is entirely open to all men of true merit, whatever their origin.

Incontestably it is true that the presence of so substantial an institution in Costa Rica's political life has contributed more than any other element to the good government with which she has been blessed, for it has kept from power politicians who were actuated by mere vulgar ambition and men of mediocre abilities. But about twenty-four years ago a political party was born, demagogic in its methods, which from the very first showed that its main aspiration was to supplant in the Government of the Republic the country's ablest men. That party, in 1901, took the name Republican and its leader since that time has been Don Máximo Fernández.

It would be useless to deny that up to the present the Republican party has enjoyed much strength. None the less, it is certain that the principal source of that strength has been derived from the ignorant masses. It is also unquestionably true that the Republican party has never controlled the majority of the voters in Costa Rica. Its advantage has been in maintaining a compact organization, whereas what I have described as the oligarchy has frequently split up into factions, as occurred in the last presidential elections in 1913, when the Republican candidate received 28,000 votes as against the 38,000 that were divided between the National Union party (20,000) and the Civil party (18,000), for which reason, notwithstanding the fact that the Republicans were thus in the minority, they came into power in May, 1914—though not with their candidate, Don Máximo Fernández. Don Alfredo González instead became President without having received a single popular vote.

So strange a result calls for explanation: It is provided in the Constitution of Costa Rica that when three or more candidates present themselves for the Presidency and no one of them secures an absolute majority of the votes (i.e., one-half of all the votes cast at the polls, plus one or more), it shall devolve upon the Congress to decide the election by choosing between the two who shall have received the greater number of the votes cast by the people.

Because of the fact that the forces of the three parties that were contesting in 1913 were about evenly balanced, it became evident that no one of them could secure the absolute majority prescribed by the Constitution and that the election must of necessity be thrown into Congress, whereupon the National Union and Civil parties, both of which represented factions of the above-mentioned historic oligarchy, resolved to enter into a compact whereby the deputies in Congress of each should vote for that candidate of either who might receive the larger number of the popular votes. Thus, when the adherents of those two parties presented themselves at the polls, they cast their votes conscientiously and indiscriminately for Dr. Durán (the National Unionist candidate) and for Don Rafael Yglesias (the candidate of the Civil party).

Dr. Durán received the larger vote and was, therefore, unquestionably legally elected President of the Republic, since he received 38,000 direct votes against 28,000 cast for Don Máximo Fernández. Such at first was the understanding of the whole country. It was an election, too, to which no one made objection, for it had been conducted with perfect freedom.

The election, however, was to be perfected by Congress, which was composed of 43 deputies, distributed as follows among the three parties: National Unionists, 18; Civilists, 12, and Republicans, 17, an alignment that gave to Dr. Durán a majority of 13 votes; and, this being the situation, certain leaders of the Republican party who could not bring themselves to accept its defeat—notably Don Manuel Castro Quesada—resolved to exploit the ambitions of Yglesias in order to prevent the accomplishment of the freely expressed will of the majority of the people of Costa Rica, and, to that end, proposed to make him President if he would break his agreement with Dr. Durán.

Yglesias allowed himself to be seduced. He violated his compact with the National Union party and entered into a new agreement with the Republicans, an agreement which, it should be noted, could not have been carried out except by the violation, also, of the constitutional provision that imposes on the Congress the duty to elect the President by choosing between the two candidates who receive the greatest number of all the votes cast. In the case in question Fernández and Durán were the two candidates who received the greatest number, Yglesias having in fact been excluded.

Subsequently those leaders of the Republican party declared that they had never intended to act in good faith with Yglesias, whom they particularly abhorred. They asserted that the real purpose they had in view was to profit by the natural indignation excited in Dr. Durán and his party against Yglesias in order thus to bring about a condition of affairs in which the National Unionist deputies, rather than permit the unconstitutional election of the disloyal ally, would vote for Don Máximo Fernández. But the plan came to naught because of the positive refusal of the Nationalist to deliver the Government of the Republic over to Fernández.

It was then that the leaders of the Republican party planned a combination by means of which the candidates Fernández and Durán were to be sidetracked by virtue of a renunciation they were to present to Congress and which would permit that body to elect a Designate (Vice President) to exercise the executive power during the term 1914-1918. The Republican authors of this plan proposed, as such Designate, Don Manuel Castro Quesada and other Republican leaders, but these were all rejected. Don Federico Tinoco, the sole Republican leader who had not entered into the combination with Yglesias, and who was opposing that combination openly, then suggested the name of Don Alfredo González, who, after much discussion, was accepted.

This was a combination, then, that was brought to fruition through the failure of the Republicans to abide by the agreement entered into with Yglesias, as Yglesias himself had failed to abide by the compact signed by him with Dr. Durán. Thus González entered upon the exercise of executive power on a foundation consisting of two breaches of the given word, of a violation of the Constitution, and of a mockery of the will of the people of Costa Rica, expressed at an election both free and popular. He was elected first Designate and the Congress called him to exercise the supreme power as President of the Republic, technically by virtue of the withdrawals of Fernández and Durán.

The agreement between Dr. Durán and Don Alfredo González that brought the latter into power was signed on the 28th of April, 1914, in the house of Don Federico Tinoco, who had acted as mediator between them. In the belief that he could prevent a pronunciamiento by the military forces, the adherence of which to Durán was notorious, and which might have been occasioned by the failure of the Civilist deputies to fulfill their agreement with Durán, that gentleman patriotically renounced his unquestionable rights. The conditions imposed upon González by Durán in the agreement of April 28, 1914, were few in number and wholly of a patriotic character—such, for instance, as not to enter into contracts involving the national sovereignty, not to sell the Pacific Railroad, not to interfere in the politics of other Central American Republics, and to guarantee, in an effective manner, the freedom of elections.

On the same day Dr. Durán, Don Alfredo González and Don Federico Tinoco presented themselves before President Jiménez and communicated to him the agreement that had just been signed by the two gentlemen first named, together with a document subscribed by twenty-two deputies, wherein they agreed to vote for Don Alfredo González in the manner above set forth. They also asked President Jiménez to guarantee that agreement against the danger of a protest by the military forces. President Jiménez acceded to their request and placed all the military forces as well as the police under the orders of Tinoco, who thereupon undertook to guarantee the execution of the compact between González and Durán. González took refuge in one of the barracks of the Capital, from which place of safety he did not venture forth until the 8th of May, 1914, when he emerged to take possession of the Presidency of the Republic.

As may be seen, the foregoing presents many of the characteristics of a coup d'état, and, therefore, the legality of the election of Don Alfredo González would seem to be very doubtful. It is unquestionably true that the Congress ignored the constitutional mandate to elect the President by choosing one of the two candidates who had received the greatest number of votes. It is also true that the candidates Durán and Fernández could not renounce their rights until after the election had been held by the Congress. Furthermore, the fact that Don Alfredo González set out from the barracks in the midst of an elaborate display of military suggested an intention to exert pressure upon Congress, a proceeding that naturally brought about violent protests; and there can be no doubt that the country had never considered Don Alfredo González as a truly constitutional President.

The surprise caused by González' election by the Congress was enormous. He was at that time a man almost wholly unknown. He had never exercised any other public functions than those pertaining to the office of deputy in Congress during the administrations of González Víquez and Jiménez, and he never at any time distinguished himself in that office. A bill introduced by him relating to a mortgage bank was looked upon by every one as puerile, and that was the only measure that marked his political career.

But to resume: Why the office of President had not been cast upon Dr. Durán, or at least upon Fernández, or even upon Yglesias—since these were the men who had been discussed for the office and who had received the popular votes—the people could not understand. It was a deception that was so great and far-reaching that even the Republicans themselves were not satisfied with the result. However, thanks to the peaceful temperament of the Costa Rican people, no disturbance of the public order resulted, though feared. The acts of the unknown and unheralded President, the people resigned themselves to await. They trusted González to hold himself free from the influence of certain Republican leaders and to avail himself of the support that was loyally and disinterestedly offered him by Dr. Durán and his friends, among whom were nearly all the men of the highest political reputation in Costa Rica.

But these were illusions that were of short duration. President González lost no time in betraying a spirit of stubbornness and an autocratic attitude that made all approach impossible. Nevertheless, in Congress the Nationalist deputies loyally gave their support to his policies up to the day on which González openly broke the agreement he had signed with Durán, that is to say, up to the time of the congressional elections at the end of 1915.

It has already been shown that one of the clauses of the agreement of April 28, 1914, stipulated that President González should guarantee the freedom of elections during his entire administration. The freedom of elections had already come to be looked upon as an ineradicable principle in Costa Rica's national life. It had gradually come to be enjoyed by the people until, during the two previous administrations: of González Víquez (1906-1910) and Jiménez (1910-1914) it had become complete. Don Alfredo González did not know how, or did not wish, to emulate his predecessors in that regard. Greatly to the chagrin of the citizens, he openly violated that liberty.

The congressional elections in 1915 constitute a black page in the history of Costa Rica and represent a sad retrogression in the progress of the country toward the establishment of true republican institutions. Thousands of citizens were arbitrarily excluded from the lists of voters. From those lists, in the Capital alone, which has scarcely forty thousand inhabitants, nearly two thousand citizens were eliminated. Under such conditions the result of the election was a foregone conclusion. The parties in opposition, which had united against the González Government, and although unquestionably composing the vast majority, were enabled to elect only two deputies in the whole Republic.

From the day on which González committed this violation of the freedom of elections, the people of Costa Rica became convinced that he could not serve out the balance of his term in peace. The outrage against the law and the liberties of the people was too flagrant to be tolerated by the country and the breaking of his given word made that outrage even more intolerable. To all accusations launched by the opposition press against the breach of the agreement with Dr. Durán, González replied in his newspaper, El Imparcial, that he was under no obligation, as President, to fulfill an agreement signed by him as Alfredo González, the individual. This is an answer that paints more effectively than I could hope to do the character of the man who had made bad faith into a principle of government.

So convinced was the undersigned that such must be the result of so outrageous a violation of the freedom of elections that, in a conversation he had at that time with Major Edward J. Hale, United States Minister to Costa Rica, in the presence of Mr. Samuel T. Lee, United States Consul at San José, he predicted that sooner or later revolution would come. Possibly Minister Hale has informed the Department of State of this conversation.

After the elections of 1915, González' unpopularity, then already very great, increased from day to day until it became, if I may so express it, unanimous. It was an unpopularity in fact such as had never been known in Costa Rica from the time that State came into existence as a nation. And that violation of the suffrage was not the only basis of President González' unpopularity. There were many others: his notorious incapacity, for example, and his utter lack of preparation and training for the high office of which, through mere casualty, he had become the incumbent. This might have been remedied had he had the modesty to surround himself with competent men, but he could not bring himself to a recognition of any superiority.

Under such conditions the administration of public affairs resulted in veritable chaos, particularly with respect to the finances. The custom established by his predecessor, Don Ricardo Jiménez, of making public all expenditures in behalf of the State ceased when González came into power, and this was an omission that in large measure made possible the great squandering of the public funds during his government. Public opinion could not look with patience upon the spectacle of the expenditure by González of relatively enormous sums in ostentatious living and in the embellishment of his native city (Heredia) at a time when poverty was rife throughout the country and in the face of the economic crisis that existed, and at a time, moreover, when, because of lack of funds, public service works of peremptory necessity stood paralyzed.

A further tax on that patience was the sudden and inexplicable enrichment of certain of his intimate friends and the prodigality of others. The numerous brothers of González and all his relatives were placed on salary or in one way or another were receiving the nation's money. Under the González administration Costa Rica saw for the first time a Secretary of State engaged in business transactions with the Government, the case of Don Juan Rafael Arias, Secretary of the Interior.

Another cause for profound disgust was the discourteous, at times insolent, manner in which González treated the most eminent men of the country. On one occasion he insulted even former President González Víquez, a man who is admired and loved by every one in Costa Rica because of his great virtues and his goodness and kindly character. Also, in this connection, mention should be made of the unjust destitution of the former Minister of Costa Rica in Washington, the late Don Joaquín Bernardo Calvo, whom González condemned to death in miserable surroundings and afterwards opposed a plan, undertaken in Congress, to grant a moderate pension to the family in recognition of Calvo's twenty years of loyal service to his country at the Capital of the United States.

Another ground of serious displeasure throughout the country was the intrusion of foreigners in the Government of the Republic. It was universally known that González was much under the power of Dr. Diéguez, a Guatemalan émigré, and particularly of a German agent by the name of Johann Kümpel, the author of the tax measures recently voted by the Costa Rican Congress. The decisive influence of Kümpel on the mind of President González, his Prussian insolence and his despotic ideas, particularly wounded the pride and dignity of Costa Ricans.

This pernicious influence of Kümpel made itself felt in all of González' policies and was apparent even in the public documents bearing the Presidential signature, as is shown by the fact that they were replete with phrases referring to ill-digested democracy and false liberalism—phrases that had appeared frequently in the newspapers over the signature of Kümpel. In a letter, for instance, addressed to a daily paper of the Republic of El Salvador, González went so far as to describe the liberties of the people as inútiles zarandajas (useless trifles).

All these things indicate clearly that González was becoming infatuated with the idea of converting himself into a dictator; and again the country began to concern itself with the idea of revolution, an idea which had agitated it profoundly at the time of the elections of 1915. But counsels of prudence prevailed.

It was resolved to wait and see what attitude González would assume toward the presidential elections, which were once more approaching.

Suddenly, toward the end of last December, alarming rumors began to be circulated to the effect that González would stand for reelection. The Constitution of Costa Rica prohibits the reelection of a President for the next ensuing term, but it was given as a pretext for the reelection of González that he had exercised the executive power only in the capacity of a Designate. Those who favored the project—of whom Don Manuel Castro Quesada was the leader—maintained that González was indispensable to the welfare of the country and to the perfection and enforcement of the new tax laws.

In fact the deputies elected in 1915, the country being then practically in a state of siege, and who really represented only the will of President González, had just voted in extraordinary session a land tax and an income tax that provided for an enormous increase in the taxation of the country, which was already staggering under the weight of indirect taxation. In the beginning González' plan had been to substitute one system of taxation for another and he so informed Congress in a presidential message. The project was thereupon accepted by Dr. Durán and his friends. But immediately González contradicted himself in another message, wherein he declared that it was no longer his idea to supplant the existing tax laws, and added that, not only was he not disposed to economize, as recommended by former President González Víquez, but that it was necessary to increase the public expenditure fifty per cent.

These astonishing statements caused consternation throughout the country, and these projects of President González were judged to be so ill-advised and prejudicial that the very deputies elected by him especially for the purpose of imposing the new imposts on an unwilling country showed themselves indisposed to vote them. However, as Don Máximo Fernández, who was President of the Congress and leader of the Republican party, exercised a decisive influence over those deputies. González proposed to make him President of the Republic for the term 1918-1922 if he would, in exchange, secure the adoption of the tax measures. Fernández accepted the proposal and the laws in question were enacted.

Nevertheless, this did not prevent President González, about the middle of January last, from despatching Castro Quesada with a message to Fernández informing the latter that he (González) had retired from his agreement and proposed to bring about his own reelection in a violent manner. The people of Costa Rica were in no way surprised when they learned of this new act of bad faith on the part of González, for already they well knew the value that could be placed on the President's word, and, because of this, from that moment they began to prepare to resist, by all means possible, the perpetuation of González in power.

González now maintains that he never seriously thought of reelection. He must know the truth on this point, although it is possible that he has not stated it; but what is an unquestionable fact, not denied by him or by any of his friends, is that his positive resolution was to prevent the free election of his successor. As soon as they became certain of this resolution, the opponents of González' Government—among whom, without exception, were all of the men of real worth in Costa Rica—determined to resort to the extreme measure of revolution as the only means of securing a return to the régime of freedom and good government to which Costa Rica owes the honorable reputation she enjoys in the family of nations. With respect to the means to be employed to that end, opinions were divided. Whereas some were for civil war as a necessary evil, maintaining that excessive love of peace had corrupted and enervated the people, others opposed that plan and expressed a preference for a coup d'état, whereby the same result could be accomplished without any great disturbances. The latter opinion prevailed and was the real origin of the upheaval of the 27th of January last.

The only man who could bring those hopes to fruition was Don Federico Tinoco, because, although in later years he had affiliated with the Republican party, by family tradition and education he was allied with what I have called the Costa Rican oligarchy, and the latter had confidence that if he should come into power he would surround himself and the Government with men of real merit. Furthermore, Tinoco was the guarantor in the agreement of April 28, 1914, and was morally bound to see to it that that agreement was fulfilled, as had been many times demanded by the friends of Dr. Durán. In reality Tinoco, in deposing President González, yielded to the irresistible pressure of public opinion, as shown by the circumstance that, from the first moment of the coup d'état from the entire country, especially all the men of political and social importance, gave their support to the new government.

This is a notorious fact, indisputable and easily susceptible of proof. Whatever may have been the origin of Tinoco's Government, that Government represents the will of the vast majority of the citizens and enjoys undeniable and widespread popularity. It is enough to say that the seven former Presidents now living in Costa Rica have given it their support, that all have accepted, with every manifestation of gratification, appointment to the commission charged with the preparation of the reforms to be made in the Constitution with a view to correcting the defects that have crept into the operation of that instrument through the methods above set forth. Five of those gentlemen: Don Bernardo Soto, Don Ascensión Esquivel, Don Cleto González Víquez, Dr. Durán and Don Rafael Yglesias, are serving in the capacity of active members, and the other two: Don José J. Rodríguez and Don Ricardo Jiménez, as counsellors. These seven former Presidents represent more than thirty years of Costa Rican history and all are men of the highest standing.

Further proof of the great popularity of the coup d'état lies in the extraordinarily peaceful manner in which it was effected. No one was killed, no one was arrested or placed in restraint for more than twenty-four hours, no one was injured. Instead, the 27th of January, 1917 was a veritable festal day in Costa Rica. The normal life of the Capital was scarcely altered during the few hours covered by the incident. On the same night all the theaters were filled as though nothing unusual had taken place. Even the foreign colonies manifested their gratification, with the exception, possibly, of the German colony, which looked upon the change in government as a stroke directed against the German interests in Costa Rica.

Since then the country has continued to live in the most perfect peace. Tinoco made up his Cabinet of men of excellent reputation, and belonging to the different political parties, in order to demonstrate his intention to make his Government truly national. The courts of justice have continued in operation without the slightest interruption; the laws are being scrupulously enforced, liberty is complete, and absolute confidence reigns throughout all classes of society.

Immediately after the coup d'état, a notice of convocation was sent out to the people, in accordance with existing law, with a view to the election of a Constituent Assembly. The elections are to be held on the first of next April and the Assembly was to begin its sessions on the first of the following May, but later, in obedience to the general desire that the country should return as soon as possible to the constitutional régime, a decree was issued on the 23d of February last providing that the Assembly shall meet on the 11th day of April and that the election of a President, by direct popular vote, shall be held on the first day of that same month.

This Constituent Assembly is being convoked by virtue of the law of 1901, which contains the provisions enacted for the purpose of governing reforms in the Constitution. The procedure is, furthermore, in accordance with the constitutional historic right of Costa Rica. By means of the same instrumentality all former changes in the constitutional order have been effected, to wit, those of 1838, 1842, 1859 and 1870.

In deposing President González, whose government had become an intolerable burden to the country, Costa Rica has made use of a sacred right that resides in all peoples: the right of rebellion. On that right has been built all the liberty in the world. To deprive a people of the right of rebellion is to condemn it inevitably to be the victim of tyranny; otherwise political assassination would be encouraged as the sole means left to rid the people of bad government. In a country as peaceful and well ordered as Costa Rica, but at the same time as jealous of its liberties, there could be no other way of avoiding the danger of rebellion than to guarantee effectively the freedom of elections, a freedom that Don Alfredo González failed to respect in 1915 and which he was preparing soon to violate anew in a manner even more serious.

The little upheaval in Costa Rica has now passed into history. She has resumed, well satisfied, the even course of her life of peace and industry by means of a general reconciliation of all political parties, which have grouped themselves spontaneously about the new Government. She is now concerned only with the fact that foreign countries do not fully understand this thing that the people have been obliged to do under the compulsion of imperative reasons and circumstances that have been stronger than its love of order and its traditions of peace.

Every change of government, whatever may be the manner in which it is brought about, strikes at many interests and ambitions. Don Alfredo González and the tiny group made up of his friends builded upon their desire to maintain themselves in power during a long period of years, although against the expressed will of the people of Costa Rica. It is natural and human they have not yet been able to resign themselves to an abandonment of their illusions and that they should foster the desire to revenge themselves upon the man who has destroyed those illusions—the very man whom they once loved to eulogize, the man whom they now picture as a vulgar bandit.

If Don Federico Tinoco were in fact a man such as Don Alfredo González and Don Manuel Castro Quesada are now making him out to be before the people of the United States, it would be interesting to ask them why they distinguished him for so many years with their intimate friendship and why they availed themselves so often of his services. One would be led to believe, also, that the only two men of honor now existing in Costa Rica are González and Castro Quesada, because they are practically the only men of any political importance who are not now giving their support to Tinoco.

Don Federico Tinoco belongs to one of the most prominent families in Costa Rica. He was educated in the United States and in Europe and is a man of refinement and good habits. His wife is one of the most distinguished ladies in Costa Rica and the home she has made with her husband is a model of dignity and refinement. All that can be said against Tinoco is that he is a man of force and, therefore, has made enemies. But there is not a strong man on the face of the earth who has not made enemies. Yet even those very men who were formerly his political enemies have now become his resolute supporters, notably the ex-President Don Ascensión Esquivel, because all consider him to be the only man who, in the present circumstances, is capable of maintaining the unity of political parties which is indispensable to the peace and welfare of the country. If for any reasons Tinoco should be obliged to separate himself from the Government of the Republic, Costa Rica would immediately become the prey of anarchy and would soon find herself in a situation similar to that of unhappy Mexico.

On the other hand, in the short time he has governed the Republic, Tinoco has given convincing proofs of his prudence and political tact, proofs that have won for him the good will of all, and at the same time he has been able to inspire on all sides the greatest confidence, as is shown by the decided support that is being extended to him by all the financial institutions of the Republic, which have just loaned his Government three million colones on the most favorable terms. In so far as relations with the other Central American countries are concerned, Tinoco has declared positively that he will faithfully adhere to and fulfill the Conventions of Washington, and, furthermore, has categorically given the Government of Nicaragua to understand that he will not permit any activities on the part of its enemies in Costa Rica.

The undersigned rests in the hope that the Department of State will give its distinguished consideration to the facts above set forth.

MR. SECRETARY: The United States having declared that a state of war exists with the Imperial German Government, my Government has instructed me to reiterate to your excellency the assurances of Costa Rica's most sincere and loyal friendship for the United States.

The Costa Rican Government considers that it is the duty of all American Republics to support, at least morally, the noble attitude assumed by the United States in defense of the highest ideals of law, of right and justice, and of democracy.

The Republic of Costa Rica regrets that, because of its lack of material strength, it cannot in this crisis tender to the United States more substantial cooperation; but if it might be permitted to demonstrate its solidarity with the Government and people of its great sister Republic of the North in such manner, for instance, as by permitting the use of its waters and ports for war needs by the American Navy, that form of cooperation would be undertaken with the greatest satisfaction.

With great pleasure I reiterate to your excellency [etc.]

Respectable advocates recognition much disturbed and discouraged over rejection of provision for senate by constitutional convention regarded as very important reform. They fear rejection of other essential checks in project of constitution prepared by ex-Presidents, and doubt reconsideration, as changes advocated by Tinoco himself.

These all look towards facilitating a dictatorship. However, they have of their own initiative told him he would lose support of ex-Presidents if changes in their plan permitted, so not final. Other objections they have are: first, ex-Presidents not made members of constitutional convention; second, personnel wholly chosen by Tinoco and very poor; third, same men automatically become Congress; fourth, convention immediately appointed designates for full terms, first being brother of Tinoco instead of providing for Vice President to be elected by the people in advance of adoption of constitution.

Regarding conditional refuge granted González family, believe that as a matter of seeking refuge they are, if turned out, in no danger of arrest. Lara volunteered assurance of that this morning, expressing only solicitude lest Department misinterpret events and measures taken. Real danger to González family when they leave Legation is that will be regarded as hostages in case of attack against Tinoco from without or within. Convinced of this by two circumstances: first, insistent refusal until last moment to allow father and women to leave; second, explanations of Lara of this fact. If this is sufficient to warrant granting assurances it might involve indefinitely long residence.

Mr. R. Fernández Guardia to the Secretary of State

THE ARLINGTON,
Washington, May 19, 1917.

MR. SECRETARY: I have been instructed by the Government of Costa Rica to bring to your excellency's attention the pernicious activities that are being carried on by Don Alfredo González, Don Manuel Castro Quesada and a few others, under the pretense of support by the United States, with the very evident object of arresting the successful progress of the new Administration in Costa Rica and sowing dissension among the people.

Ever since Don Alfredo González came to Washington in the month of February last, he has not ceased to write to his relatives, and to the few friends he still retains in Costa Rica, to the effect that he is counting on the support of the United States to bring about his restoration to power by armed intervention.

The Government and leading men of Costa Rica well know that the claims of such support made by González are false; but the less intelligent among the people of the country, who are always in the majority, allow themselves to be impressed by his persistent reassertion of these false claims. Furthermore, certain misleading articles published in the newspapers of this country, such as the enclosed, from the New York Herald of the 15th instant, are being broadly disseminated throughout Costa Rica, and the authors and instigators of these articles give to them the appearance of having been inspired by the United States Government. On the other hand, the German colony, which is both numerous and rich, ably exploits those maneuvers for the purpose of instilling into the Costa Rican people a feeling of hostility towards the United States. This my Government looks upon with deep chagrin, for, as it has abundantly shown, it is genuinely desirous to maintain with this country the most cordial and dependable relations.

Forced by the facts above stated, the National Constituent Assembly, on the 17th instant, adopted legislation conferring on the President of the Republic the powers necessary to protect the country against any alteration of the public order that might result from the activities of German subjects by connivance with the friends of González; by the same act of that Assembly the President is empowered to pursue such international policy as may be for the best interests of the country. This act, therefore, constitutes a legislative confirmation of the statements, and the offers, which I had the honor to make to your excellency in my note of the 9th of April.

The Government of Costa Rica, convinced that the Government of the United States is wholly ignorant of the disloyal activities to which I have drawn its attention, takes refuge in the hope that it will disavow the use to which its name and its prestige is being put by Don Alfredo González and the small group of his friends in the effort to sow among the Costa Rican people the seeds of distrust and to unrest. By so doing it will once more earn the gratitude of the Government and people of Costa Rica.

You will ask for an unofficial interview with General Tinoco, and having obtained it, recall to General Tinoco his interview with Minister Hale of February 12, 1917, when General Tinoco was informed that no Government set up by him would be recognized by the United States. You will express surprise that an opinion seems to be prevalent in some quarters in Costa Rica, and indeed apparently shared by General Tinoco himself, that the United States is considering a modification of its position as then expressed, and you will state that by the express direction of the President of the United States you are instructed to reaffirm his previously expressed determination not to recognize General Tinoco as President of Costa Rica.

Having made clear to General Tinoco the finality of this decision of the President of the United States, you will communicate to General Tinoco the following:

The Government of the United States is impressed with the fact that economic and financial difficulties with which Costa Rica is now beset render it of the greatest importance that there be promptly established a Government which, internally, will command that popular confidence which can only be inspired and retained by rulers of known regard for law and order, and which, externally, will receive generally the recognition of foreign nations. The United States cannot believe that General Tinoco will permit a conception of his personal interests and ambitions to defer the establishment of such a Government, and thus render far more acute and distressing the problems which are already embarrassing the people of Costa Rica. If this confidence of the Government of the United States is not misplaced and if it is the intention of General Tinoco to retire in the immediate future in favor of an independent successor, to be selected in a law-abiding manner, the Government of the United States will hope to see such transfer of power accomplished in an orderly manner.

Following your interview with General Tinoco, you may discreetly convey a knowledge of the attitude of the United States, as above expressed, to any person or persons in Costa Rica whose confidence you have and who, in your opinion, if in possession of such knowledge, could and would exert influence on General Tinoco in favor of his voluntary withdrawal.

Your June 9, 3 p. m. Interview lasted half an hour; present Tinoco and Lara. Finality of decision of the President of the United States strongly emphasized. Copy of quoted portion of your telegram handed to Tinoco. He requested me to convey to the President through the Department that he still has highest regard for the President of the United States and for the country but that Costa Rica is rich and can sustain a Government without outside help; that recognition desirable but not necessary and that he was not begging for it; that as President he has support of the people, the ex-Presidents, and the Constitution, and that he will remain President for the full six years; that he has right and law on his side and would be committing treason to the people and the country to retire at the intimation of a foreign Power and that he will not do so except in the face of brute force.

Impression received was that expression of intention not to withdraw was sincere. Tinoco was penniless on assuming presidency, has no profession and is the kind that would hold on under the pretext of upholding national dignity but for no other real reason than means of support or opportunity for enrichment until forced out.

I conveyed knowledge of attitude of the United States to John Keith, Cleto González, Luis Anderson and Gaspar Otuno, a Spaniard, president of bank, highly respected, known as a man of independent conduct and expression. All these are of the opinion that Tinoco will not retire until himself convinced by compelling facts that impossible to go on.

Wednesday afternoon Tinoco summoned ex-Presidents, informed them of the nonrecognition and asked for suggestions as to formation advisory finance council to devise ways and means for maintaining Government in the face of nonrecognition. My information which so far is meager as to the matters discussed, is that suggested retirement not among them.

The Costa Rican Minister to the Secretary of State

[Translation]

COSTA RICAN LEGATION,
New York, June 15, 1917.

EXCELLENCY: Señor Don J. Rafael Oreamuno, Secretary of the Legation, reports to me that on the 12th of this month he had the honor to have a conference with the Honorable Mr. Stabler, Chief of the Latin American Division of the Department of State and that in the course of that conference the Honorable Mr. Stabler saw fit to show him a declaration written by the most excellent President Wilson in which that High Functionary declares he will recognize no Government in Costa Rica that owes its origin to any means other than those established by the Constitution.

Pursuant to instructions from the legitimate President of Costa Rica, the Licentiate Don Alfredo González, I have the honor to express to your excellency the intense satisfaction he experienced in noting the sentiments of the aforesaid declaration, albeit it contained but a confirmation of the assurances given him in February last by the Most Excellent President Wilson that in no way, on no ground, at no time would he recognize as President of Costa Rica Don Federico Tinoco, or any of his relatives or close friends.

As I had the honor to state in my note of February 28 last to your excellency, Señor González is firmly convinced—and the course of events has more and more strengthened his conviction—that without the American Government's recognition Tinoco will find it impossible to hold the power he has usurped. The short five months in which he has exercised it are proof evident of this, seeing that in order to meet expenses he has had to negotiate most costly loans with the banks in the country which among other most injurious effects has had that of reducing the value of the national currency to one-half, or less, of what it was when Tinoco broke into the power. As the lending capacity of those banks is already exhausted, it appears from trustworthy reports that have reached me lately that Tinoco, confronted by the banks' refusal to supply with any more funds, intends to resort to unlimited issue, which would be unavoidably attended with the consequence that the internal situation of the country would become still worse than it is now, since the incalculable depreciation of money would eventually upset the finances of the nation, public and private, and throw them into complete bankruptcy.

The discontent that is felt in Costa Rica could not be greater; hunger is beginning to threaten all classes and the only thing that props the demoralized spirit of the Tinoco Government and moves it to fight and hold on to the last is its firm hope of early recognition by this Government.

Whenever Tinoco gains such recognition, that is to say, whenever the foreign speculators who spurred him to commit the treasonable act that lifted him into power see that they could in full safety close the transactions which Tinoco holds out to them, the insuperable difficulties which now stand against his Government would vanish, for that time at least, two, three or four years, during which he will lay his hand on the proceeds of the whole patrimony of the country which he would deed away for good and forever. And then the situation would revert to to-day's state of anguish with that difference that there would be no remedy left as the Republic would have sacrificed at ridiculous prices the property it still owns.

And this view of affairs is understood and felt by the country and one need not be a great prophet to predict that before the final ruin here depicted is consummated the Republic will be thrown into bloody convulsions trying to free itself of the man who is now exploiting and ruining it. To avert such a calamity, it is necessary that Tinoco lay down the power and to that end, President González, encouraged by the firm and positive attitude taken by the most excellent President Wilson, directs me to submit to your excellency's consideration the following ways of action:

1. Prohibit all exportations from the United States of war material for the Government of Costa Rica, and also of bank notes to increase the circulation of that country.

2. Buy out the French and English claims through American capitalists and take possession of the management of the customhouses and of the national liquor manufactory which, under the loan contracts are pledged for the various loans, and may be managed by the creditors in case the debtor Republic fails to meet its liabilities, which is sure to happen in a very short time under the rule of the present Government.

3. Get the creditors of the de facto Government of Costa Rica to collect the balances due them and stop all credits, if it have any.

4. Let the American Government adhere to its present attitude in not recognizing the de facto Government of Costa Rica and also to its decision not to grant diplomatic protection to any concession or privilege conferred by Tinoco upon individuals or corporations, and give publicity to those decisions both in this country and in Costa Rica.

But the mere fact that Tinoco is removed and superseded by an honorable Government constitutionally elected will not avert the dangers nor remedy the coils that are now threatening and hurting the Republic. The World War had so deeply disturbed the economic conditions of the Republic that nothing but the profound knowledge possessed in the matter by President González and the energy and patriotism he displayed could prevent the bankruptcy we are now expecting from taking place during his administration; nay, the saving measures that he succeeded in introducing would have warded off the crisis and put the nation on a strong and safe footing of financial solvency, had it not been for the treachery that removed him from the power at the time when that presence there was the most imperatively necessary.

But difficult as was the situation of Costa Rica at that time, as above explained, now that it has lost the good name won for it by the reliable character of its institutions, it may be said to be in every way irremediable unless prompt and appropriate help is extended.

The help which President González most respectfully asks for the next Government of Costa Rica, consists in the following:

1. The redemption of the foreign debts of Costa Rica and the increase of that redeemed debt in the amount needed to extricate the Government of Costa Rica from its trying financial condition pending the organization of the collectorate under the new revenue laws and the reorganization of the banking system on lines more consistent with the needs of the country and the modern tendencies of science in that branch.

2. The building of new ways of communication at home, and the increase of those with foreign countries, which last might be achieved by letting American steamers running to Panama also call at Costa Rican ports provided they find sufficient freight there.

The foregoing measures would result:

- a. In maintaining the value of the monetary unit (Colon) and thereby a stable international exchange. This would induce foreign capital to invest in Costa Rica and further strengthen the stability of Costa Rican currency.

- b. In increasing the national agricultural crops, with an assured outlet at all times, for in times of peace, Costa Rica would sell her grain and vegetables to the ships that cross the Panama Canal and in times of war to the American Government for the victualling of its soldiers and sailors in the same Canal Zone. The capacity of the Costa Rican people for agricultural production will be enormous from the day when they are given the means to develop it under favorable conditions.

- c. In having the chance to gain all these advantages without adding to the burdens of the country, in interests or principal, inasmuch as the world condition of finance offers the opportunity to redeem, with the help of the capital of this country, the foreign debt of Costa Rica at nearly 50% of its face value, when one takes into account the comparatively low interest it yields, the long terms for which it was contracted, the surtax laid in France and England on income from foreign investments, and the high rates of interest at present paid by the last named countries on their own loans.

- d. In saving the democracy of Costa Rica from the claws of a military tyranny and once more set up the salutary precedent that no Government born of treachery or revolution can stand long.

And now I beg leave to say to your excellency that the only legal and constitutional solution which in our opinion fits the present political problem of Costa Rica is to let the Licentiate Don Francisco Aguilar Barquero take charge of the Presidency of the Republic, as third Designado.

Señor González, as I have so often and repeatedly declared to you, has not the slightest desire to resume the power, and both he and his father, Señor Don Domingo González, second Designado for the Presidency, are quite ready to resign their respective offices to let Licentiate Aguilar Barquero take it by operation of the law.

So provides Article 100 of the Constitution which lawfully governs in Costa Rica since 1871, for, that which has just been put in force, under Tinoco's pressure and by a Constituent Assembly consisting wholly of his out and out friends and relatives, is as illegal and void as the very presence of that same Tinoco in the executive power which he usurped through the treachery of the 27th of January last.

Señor Aguilar Barquero is an honorable man, talented and capable of giving the Costa Ricans all manner of guaranties and a wise and conservative administration. President González takes pleasure, as an act of justice in acknowledging those qualities to Señor Aguilar Barquero, all the more as that gentleman did not belong to the political party supported by Señor González.

For the foregoing reasons the undersigned believes that with Señor Aguilar Barquero in possession of the executive power, with the above-mentioned financial help, and the support of all his fellow citizens, the change in the economic, political and financial conditions of Costa Rica will be so astounding that the Costa Rican people cannot but regard as their salvation the attitude of the American Government toward the present Government of traitors, which attitude will free the Republic from an unprecedented military tyranny and save the country from the utmost physical, moral and political ruin.

With assurances [etc.]

AMERICAN LEGATION,

San José, June 19, 1917, 10 a. m.

At the conference of Tinoco with ex-Presidents Wednesday 13th referred to in my telegram of June 15, noon, it now appears full text of written communication handed to Tinoco on the 11th was read. Iglesias was only one of those present who did not fall in with the ideas of Tinoco. He suggested that matter was one Tinoco ought to decide for himself. On the 16th Congressmen were summoned by him to confer and yesterday prominent merchants, bankers and agriculturalists. At two latter meetings subjects discussed exclusively financial and economic, preparing the way for further issues paper money, direct taxes and gold export duties. Tinoco plainly intimated that he would not adopt unpopular measure of reducing Government expenditures. Publicity given last conference which was summarized in Government organ as indicating enthusiastic cooperation these interests in support of Government without foreign financial assistance. Conference to be held again 22d.

Meanwhile disappearance of silver currency has become real menace as it interferes with retail trade and marketing country people beginning to refuse paper currency. Hardships now severely felt by these and laborers naturally blamed wholly on powers that be. Indirect purchase recently by Tinoco of nearly 100,000 dollars foreign exchange and caused rumors of possible immediate retirement. There is no doubt that he fears invasion by Quesada from Nicaragua which has not officially recognized him.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
San José, June 27, 1917, noon.

The most serious menace to early withdrawal of Tinoco is voting by Congress authority to Executive to issue paper money under the pretext of relieving shortage in silver. The silver certificates amounting to 800,000 colones has been made nonredeemable for four years which will now cause them to circulate freely, but silver deposit required reduced to 40% enabling issue of 1,200,000 colones. Despatch follows. Threat of exercising power conferred being used by Tinoco in the hope of bringing about advance approval to radical revenue measures on the part of bankers, agriculturalists and merchants but it is believed that paper money will be issued. Attempt to enact export duties meeting with difficulties, disillusion as to Tinoco becoming complete. He is maintaining himself solely by power of troops and money.

Mr. R. Fernández Guardia to the Secretary of State

WASHINGTON, July 4, 1917.

MR. SECRETARY: I have the honor, and at the same time regret, to inform your excellency that I have been instructed to withdraw from Washington and to express to you my Government's profound chagrin over the failure of all its efforts to maintain the friendly relations which, down to the present, have existed between the Republic of Costa Rica and the United States of America.

Your excellency knows that Costa Rica has done all that is compatible with national dignity to preserve the friendship of the United States. No more than this can be exacted from a nation which, although small and weak, is as jealous as the greatest and strongest of its honor, independence and sovereignty, which she has known how to defend when endangered, thus proving her right to existence and liberty.

Imperative political circumstances with which your excellency is familiar, forced Costa Rica, by means of a bloodless coup d'état, to overthrow an intolerable Government. This act has since been approved and confirmed by the vote of an immense majority of the people cast with freedom, and the régime which arose out of that coup d'état stands today as a perfectly constitutional Government. As such it has been recognized by the four nations which, by virtue of a public treaty, are the only ones that possess the sanctioning authority in this regard.

Respecting the right possessed by a sovereign nation to take to itself such government as it pleases or as best suits its needs, there can be no possible question, for that right is of the very essence of sovereignty; it is acknowledged by every civilized nation. In the United States, Thomas Jefferson, one of the fathers of North American democracy writing on the 30th of December, 1792, as Secretary of State, declared:

We certainly cannot deny to other nations that principle whereon our own Government is founded, that every nation has a right to govern itself internally under what forms it pleases and to change these forms at its own will * * *

The great statesman, Henry Clay, said to the Congress, on the 24th of March, 1818:

Whatever form of government any society of people adopts, whomever they acknowledge as their sovereign, we consider that government, or that sovereignty as the one to be acknowledged by us.

In his address delivered to the Congress, May 15, 1856, President Franklin Pierce, stated in the following language, as clear as it is positive, the policy of the United States in the matter of recognition of foreign governments:

It is the established policy of the United States to recognize all governments without question of their source or their organization, or of the means by which the governing persons attain their power, provided there be a government de facto accepted by the people of the country, and with reserve only of the time as to the recognition of revolutionary governments arising out of the subdivision of parent States with which we are in relations of amity. We do not go behind the fact of a foreign government exercising actual power to investigate questions of legitimacy; we do not inquire into the causes which may have led to the change of government. To us it is indifferent whether a successful revolution has been aided by a foreign intervention or not; whether insurrection has overthrown existing government, and another has been established in its place according to preexisting forms or in a manner adopted for the occasion by those whom we may find in the actual possession of power. All these matters we leave to the people and the public authorities of the particular country to determine; and their determination, whether it be by positive action or by ascertained acquiescence, is to us sufficient warranty of the legitimacy of the new government.

During the sixty-seven years which have elapsed since the establishment of the existing Government of the United States, in all which time this Union has maintained undisturbed domestic tranquillity, we have had occasion to recognize governments de facto, founded either by domestic revolution or by military invasion from abroad, in many of the governments of Europe.

It is the more imperatively necessary to apply this rule to the Spanish American Republics, in consideration of the frequent, and not seldom anomalous, changes of organization or administration which they undergo and the revolutionary nature of most of these changes, of which the recent series of revolutions in the Mexican Republic is an example, where five successive revolutionary governments have made their appearance in the course of a few months and have been recognized successively, each as the political power of that country, by the United States.

The foregoing doctrine is the only one that is compatible with the right of sovereignty, as that right has been understood down to the present time and President Pierce, in formulating it, conformed strictly with a universal principle of international law. It is true that a few years later the United States departed somewhat from this doctrine, but then only under the compulsion of necessity created by the Civil War. At that time was born what might be called "conditional recognition" of republican governments. The new doctrine was clearly formulated by Assistant Secretary of State William Frederick Seward when, on the 7th of May, 1868, he wrote as follows:

We do not deny or question the right of any nation to change its republican constitution. We do not deny the right even to change it by force, although we think that the exercise of force can be justified in rare instances. What we do require, and all that we do require, is when a change of administration has been made, not by peaceful constitutional process, but by force, that then the new administration shall be sanctioned by the formal acquiescence and acceptance of the people.

The principle involved in the above stated doctrine has not, so far, been recognized by any nation outside the New World. This is easily explained by the fact that it is in contravention of the absolute right of sovereignty. In America itself this principle has been accepted only by the five Central American Republics (since 1907), in their mutual relations and as exclusively reciprocal in character, which fact would not warrant its application in any case, or in any manner whatever, by any nation not a party to the treaty that established it. Furthermore, in view of the special circumstances that surround the international life of the five Republics of Central America, the adoption of that principle by them, instead of derogating from their right of sovereignty, on the contrary confirms and strengthens it, since the principle evidently has for its object the mutual defense of the independence of the five States that once formed the Central American Federation.

But this principle, which, for the reasons given seems to be advantageous in the special case of the five Republics of Central America, is wholly inadmissible by international law. A sufficiently convincing reason for this lies in the insuperable difficulty, already experienced by the United States, in the similar cases of Peru and Costa Rica, of applying the principle with equality; and no one can deny that, in these conditions, as a general principle it becomes essentially arbitrary and unjust, particularly when applied by a strong to a weak nation with which no obligation to reciprocity has been contracted.

Article I of the Additional Treaty to the Treaty of Peace and Amity, concluded at Washington, on the 20th of December, 1907, by the five Republics of Central America, stipulates that:

The Governments of the High Contracting Parties shall not recognize any other Government which may come into power in any of the five Republics as a consequence of a coup d'état, or of a revolution against the recognized Government, so long as the fully elected representatives of the people thereof have not constitutionally reorganized the country.

From the text above quoted it will be clearly seen that the principle adopted has no further reach than to prevent recognition of governments that emanate from force so long as they have not been confirmed by the popular will freely expressed; certainly it was never intended to take away the sacred right of rebellion, for that would be equivalent to condemning the peoples to be the victims of tyranny; and such will surely be the fate of the Central American peoples if the United States persists in its purpose to apply the new principle without the limitation stipulated in the Additional Treaty above cited, for the right of rebellion is the only true guaranty possessed by the peoples against bad governors and that guaranty cannot be renounced without losing at the same time the right to liberty. The right of rebellion, moreover, is altogether healthful. This was the thought of so eminent a statesman as Thomas Jefferson, judging from what he wrote, in 1787, to James Madison:

I hold it that a little rebellion now and then is a good thing, and as necessary in the political world as storms in the physical. Unsuccessful rebellions indeed establish the encroachments on the rights of the people which have produced them. An observation of this truth should render honest republican governors so mild in their punishment of rebellions as not to discourage them too much. It is a medicine necessary for the sound health of government.

But for nothing clearer and more conclusive can be cited in this regard than what was said by President Wilson in his address to Congress of December 7, 1915:

Liberty is often a fierce and intractable thing. Every American who has drunk in the fountains of principle and tradition must subscribe without reservation to the high doctrine of the Virginia Bill of Rights, which in the great days in which our Government was set up was everywhere amongst us accepted as the creed of free men. That doctrine is, that government is, or ought to be, instituted for the common benefit, protection and security of the people, nation or community; that of all the various modes and forms of government, that is the best which is capable of producing the greatest degree of happiness and safety, and is most effectually secured against the danger of maladministration; and that, when any government shall be found inadequate or contrary to these purposes, a majority of the community hath an indubitable, inalienable and indefeasible right to reform, alter or abolish it, in such manner as shall be judged most conducive to the public weal.

In the same address the President had already said, referring to Mexico:

Her fortunes are in her own hands. But we have at last proved that we will not take advantage of her in her distress and undertake to impose upon her an order and government of our own choosing.

These words show that President Wilson also admits the principle that a strong country may not, because of the weakness of another, impose upon the latter a government of its own choosing. On this point I am constrained to remind your excellency, in the case of Costa Rica, that in view of the preponderating position occupied by the United States in America, and of the influence it exercises—particularly in the Republics of Central America—the fact that the Washington Government refuses to recognize the legally constituted Government of Costa Rica, and seeks to justify its refusal by invoking a principle that is no part of international law, will probably be interpreted as unjustified intervention, and it is to be feared that this procedure on the part of the United States will not tend to strengthen the confidence reposed in that great country by the Republics of Latin America; because the Governments of Guatemala, Honduras, Nicaragua and El Salvador, having recognized the legitimacy of the Costa Rican Government, the fact that your excellency's Government persists in its refusal of recognition, despite the doctrine it has itself maintained, lends itself to the supposition that what really hangs in doubt before the United States is the independence and sovereignty of the Costa Rican Republic as well as of Central America and also of all the Latin American Republics.

If this be the case, the policy now pursued by the United States towards Costa Rica would be in open contradiction to the following language of President Wilson in his address before the Congress on the 22d of January of the present year:

I am proposing, as it were, that the nations should with one accord adopt the doctrine of President Monroe as the doctrine of the world: that no nation should seek to extend its policy over any other nation or people, but that every people should be left free to determine its own policy, its own way of development, unhindered, unthreatened, unafraid, the little along with the great and powerful.

In these words, persuasive in their eloquence, is to be found an admirable résumé of the doctrine of nonintervention, and Costa Rica turns to them for support in her demand that, in the name of the right of small nations to exist, she be permitted to live her own life conformably with the freely expressed will of the majority of her people. Because intervention is not exclusively an act committed through armed force. When adopted towards a small and weak nation, the mere unfriendly attitude of a great and powerful government suffices to produce the effects of intervention to a greater or less degree. So true is this that your excellency cannot but be aware that in consequence of the attitude assumed by the Washington Government respecting Costa Rica, the country is living in a continuous state of concern which, doubtless in abuse of the name of the United States, is being kept alive by persons who are propagating the idea that the Government of this country is supporting, or at least looks with approval upon, their efforts to disturb the public order. The Government of Costa Rica has given no credit to that absurd propaganda; but it has been unable to find an explanation for the conduct of the United States towards a country which has given it repeated proofs of friendship, and which was perhaps the first among the American Republics to declare spontaneously its solidarity with that great nation when it entered upon its war with Germany.

In recalling the declaration which, in the name of my Government, I had the honor to make to your excellency on the 9th of last April, I am glad to be able to inform you that, in spite of the sore straits in which it finds itself, the Government of Costa Rica adheres to its attitude of solidarity with the people of the United States, for it feels that nothing should be allowed to prevail against the noble cause that is being defended by that people and by the other champions of liberty, democracy and the right of small nations to exist. That very cause is the one which, with respect to Costa Rica, I have so far, vainly sought to defend before the Government of the United States; and it is in truth most disheartening to realize that at the very moment in which the Republic founded by George Washington is hastening to sacrifice the lives of thousands of its citizens to maintain the right of certain small nations of Europe to control their own fate, that same right is denied to one of the American Republics which has abundantly proven that it also merits the privilege of enjoying it.

In conclusion permit me to express to your excellency, on this glorious day that marks one of the greatest steps in the progress of world liberty, my genuine regret over the fact that I have not been accorded the opportunity to present to you my respects and to defend the cause of my Government, which has been condemned without hearing by the Government of your excellency.

Tinoco sought late yesterday afternoon to push through Congress a grant of full dictatorial powers but some Duranistas, alleging necessity for considering, left, breaking quorum. Conference of Congressmen being held at Presidential Mansion this morning. Decision not yet known. Wenceslas de la Guardia just returned from Washington seems to have inspired Tinoco with renewed hope of recognition saying that United States Cabinet was unanimous in favor of recognition and urges break with Germany as all that is necessary to obtain it. Another reason for break is that Brazilian coffee reported as now admitted to England and expected that Costa Rica in case of break will receive similar concession as well as shipping and trade favors from us.

Some activity reported on the part of González and Tinoco receiving suggestions from many sides these days to withdraw. He commonly tells party representative who urges it that in case he should withdraw it would be in favor of leader, naming him, of one of the other parties.

SIR: I have the honor to send enclosed herein a copy and translation of a manifesto or proclamation issued by General Tinoco on the 11th instant in the form of a handbill distributed about the streets, purporting to warn the citizens against the machinations of his enemies whom he calls audacious and cowardly enemies of the country. The document is a remarkable confession of weakness and bankruptcy and has made this general impression. The description given, in the second paragraph, of the state of affairs he found on assuming power on the 27th of January last would be more truthful and accurate if it were meant to describe the present state of affairs. At every opportunity General Tinoco seeks to give the impression that by means of the loan transaction of last March and April he paid off pressing obligations of the González régime to the extent of three million colones whereas what he did was to pay off one million colones and increase the existing debt by two million colones which sum was spent upon the ordinary expenses of his administration and is now exhausted.

MANIFIESTO OR PROCLAMATION BY GENERAL TINOCO ON JULY 11, 1917

Convinced of the vitality of the patriotism of Costa Rica which in supreme moments has always given certain proofs that it is of the same temper as in the time of our elders, I appeal with all my energy to the national conscience in these times when evil enemies of the Constitutional Government are seeking by means of bastard machinations and perverse intrigues to surprise the good faith of the people, taking advantage for this purpose of the present bad financial situation which is not the work of the present administration but the heritage of the past and the fruit in part of the war which is moving the world with tragic fervor.

With a foreign debt of 31 million colones and an internal debt of 14 millions which made on the morning of the 27th of January last a total debt of 45 million colones, with the fiscal revenues terribly reduced by the violent decrease of importations; with the English markets because of the unholy submarine campaign suddenly closed to our exports of coffee and bananas, the most valuable products of our public wealth; with banking and commercial transactions almost paralyzed; with exchange in a state of constant feverishness; with internal fiscal credit broken into pieces; with economic lack of confidence reigning as master and mistress wherever one looked, in this condition, fellow citizens did I find the Republic when I took charge of its Government by virtue of the most popular political evolution registered in all our history.

The honorable ex-Designate, Don Alfredo González Flores, had left unpaid urgent obligations of the value of three million colones which the new administration had to pay without delay; and while surrounded by the best and most honorable persons in the country I was consecrating myself with unwavering faith in struggling for the cause of the general welfare; while the State was being reorganized upon a constitutional basis and the Costa Rican family, laying aside rancor and political differences, was being fraternally consolidated with the aspiration of completing the labor of harmony and peace, that ex-Chief of State, and the ex-Minister in Washington, Lic. Manuel Castro Quesada, and a group of cronies of his, blinded by hate because of their just defeat in the fields of law, conspired in foreign parts against the autonomy of the fatherland which saw their birth. These unpatriotic confabulations of spite and evil have not been and will not in any manner be an obstacle to obstruct the serene progress of the country along the lines of its improvement nor to close the road of action by my Government which is traveling unvaryingly along the broad road of the law, without other object than the happiness of Costa Rica nor other power than that lent by popular will and without other creed than that of our glorious tri-colored flag.

But as the severe financial crisis imposes sacrifices upon us all and demands of the Government that it adopt extraordinary and radical measures in the different branches of activity which affect private interests, the malcontents exploit to their taste the effects of a state of things which in general are due to factors wholly alien to the desires of the ruler, whose most lively wish is that of solving the existing difficulties and to this very object are tending the united efforts of the Executive and the Legislative branches and of a chosen group of personalities, skilled in finance and matters of State, who hour after hour are cooperating in the solving of the problem by practical and rapid means, upon the invariable principle of adjusting all proceedings to the sole judgment of what is true and effective protection of the public.

Normalized as international exchange will be to the benefit of the cheapening of articles of greatest or most indispensable consumption; once the immediate placing in the market of the agricultural products is guaranteed because of my refusal to import food supplies from abroad on account of the Treasury, it being a fact that the farmer of the nation should not be exposed to risks with respect to the fruit of his labors and that our fertile soil can and should suffice us for the satisfaction of our necessities; the customs tariff being already on the road to revision in the direction of reducing duties on all those articles most preferred by the public; the fields and shops being stimulated by the beneficial effects of order under which vast plans will be developed always to the profit of the unprotected classes of society, who are the ones who most rudely suffer the consequences of the crisis as they are the ones who would be the first to suffer the tremendous evils of anarchy and slavery to which they are invited by the wolves in sheep's skins; with speculation manacled without prejudice to the well understood liberty of commerce; and vanquished at last with a well-aimed blow the vulture of rapine which never satisfies its voracity nor its covetousness, better days will come for the Costa Rican people, which, devotedly patriotic as it is, will consolidate itself with my Government in this hour of bitter struggles in which men of truth will take pride in showing themselves strong, tranquil and full of redeeming hopes.

For this reason I do not doubt for an instant, fellow citizens, that I shall find you ever alert and ready at your posts which duty has pointed out for us and that in listening to my present words of warning against the activities of my ill-wishers, whom I brand before public opinion not in those terms but as audacious and cowardly enemies of the fatherland, you will feel vibrate in your hearts the same aspiration which animates me as Chief of the State and as a citizen and which is nothing else than that of maintaining in all its integrity the independence and sovereignty of the Republic by means of the virile and conscientious effort of its sons, by their love of peace and labor, seeking in this way by the diligent energy of the Costa Rican people to obtain the glory and happy future of the Nation.

POLK

File No. 818.00/202

President Gonzales to President Wilson

NEW YORK, July 28, 1917.

EXCELLENCY: Your Excellency will probably remember that, at the interview you deigned to grant me in February last, I had the honor to say to you that without the recognition of the American Government Señor Tinoco would be utterly unable to hold the power he had seized, because, such recognition failing, he could not procure in this country the money which any Government in Costa Rica must have to meet its obligations until its revenue system is duly adjusted.

My predictions, Mr. President, have been fully verified by the event; although he laid hands on all the money that could be borrowed in the country, Señor Tinoco, in the fifth month of his administration is without a cent with which to pay his expenses and, according to an explicit statement made by him at a meeting of leading citizens called by him about the middle of last month at the Executive Mansion, sees no way out but a resort to issuing fiat money.

The mere announcement of this threat was enough to bring down the rate of exchange nearly one hundred points at one stroke and Señor Tinoco realizing that the remedy he had thought of could not bear the results that were sought, as on every new outpour of paper money the rate of exchange would automatically fall proportionately to the notes issued, with the result that the number, not the purchasing power of those notes, would be increased, has resorted to an expedient that is nothing short of genuine spoliation.

The said expedient consists in taking possession of the whole stock for export and not allowing any merchandise of Costa Rica to leave unless the owner deliver in advance to the Government, at a fixed rate of exchange, gold drafts in the full net amount of the intended export. (Late reports that have reached me bring that amount down to seventy per cent.)

As Your Excellency will see this measure amounts to spoliation pure and simple since it compels the owner to receive worthless notes in exchange for the gold which his goods represent, which notes cannot be later again turned into gold, as, although the law says that the drafts so acquired by the Government are to be sold at an advance of ten points, it also says that they can only be bought by persons to whom an Exchange High Commission specially appointed to that effect by the Government sees fit to sell them.

Such an unheard of provision, for which I do not think there is any precedent in the history of forcible governments, could very well be met if Your Excellency's Government would deign to order a measure that would nullify it. The measure would consist in excluding from the United States all products from Costa Rica as long as Señor Tinoco clings to the power. If so ordered, the result would be that the property would remain in the possession of the Costa Ricans instead of being appropriated by their ruler, and further, that the said ruler, thus driven to his last resources, would be compelled to do what he should have done from the first: relinquish the power which he is so unduly exercising.

Before deciding to offer to Your Excellency the foregoing suggestion, I talked the matter over with the Costa Rican exporter of coffee now in New York, Don Ricardo Montealegre, a man of wealth, an independent, a gentleman who has absolutely nothing to do with politics; Don Eduardo Bonilla, a wealthy gentleman who has been residing three years in the city in the very business of selling the coffee grown in his lands in Costa Rica; and Don Amado Sanchez, son and attorney of Don Julio of the same name, one of the richest men of my country and all are as enthusiastic as I, also a coffee exporter, over the idea which, they believe, holds out the true salvation.

I may conscientiously say that it will be received in the same way by all my fellow citizens, with the exception of course, of Señor Tinoco and his followers.

I think I have thus shown the measure to be moral, expedient and acceptable; will Your Excellency now deign to give your kind attention to the manner in which it might be conveniently brought into practice. Señor Tinoco himself showed us how to do it when he suppressed, just now, the Consulate General of Costa Rica at New York. The Consul, Señor Montero, being a friend of mine, Señor Tinoco closed the Consulate, the consequence being that the vessels which sail from New York,—and they are, in the main, those which carry the most freight to Costa Rica—will have to enter Port Limón without the papers and documents which every nation demands of a vessel that enters its ports. Little does Señor Tinoco care whether they have those papers or not, but on the other hand, if he were given reciprocal treatment by a temporary closing of the American Consulate in Costa Rica, no vessel could again stop on those shores where she would no longer find the officers empowered by law to deliver to her the papers required for her admission into American ports.

To your wise and just policy of nonrecognition, Mr. President, Costa Rica is indebted for the great invaluable boon that Señor Tinoco could not turn over to speculators the inheritance of future generations. Will your excellency deign to perfect your beneficent action by also incapacitating him from disposing of the assets of the present generation?

Loan referred to in my telegram of August 1, 10 a. m.¹ will be abandoned for the present as long as money obtainable through advance of coffee export tax. Joaquin Tinoco now in Guatemala supposed to be attempting to obtain joint request from Central American States for recognition by the United States.

Legislative program designed to enable Tinoco to sustain himself independently of recognition about completed. Summarizing situation since receiving your telegram of June 9, 3 p. m., it is evident here that Tinoco will not voluntarily resign, his economic resources however desperate have considerably increased though he has hardly a friend left outside of employees and his enemies are bitter. He has perfected a system of spies and police that renders difficult any coup d'état or uprising within this country. Leaders lack initiative and means to compel resignation of Tinoco either peacefully or by force. Country seems to be powerless successfully to resist violations of its constitutional order however flagrant by members of its political ruling class. Result desired by Department appeal now dependent on either unduly long further lapse of time or mere chance of successful coup d'état unless some military movement is aided from without this country.

States or Europe. The Tinoco Government has been particularly alarmed at the prospect of losing its export tax on coffee already partially discounted and of the further reduction of its receipts from import duties.

The Tinoco organ, La Informacion, this morning prints an editorial calling attention to this possible requisition of ships and to the danger of not being able to export the coffee crop "upon which serious monetary obligations have already been contracted", but points out that Costa Rica will not suffer to such an extent as the other Central American countries because of a contract, which, it says, is already signed between the Minister of Finance and Mr. Minor C. Keith which amply assures and guarantees maritime communication between Costa Rica and the United States; the editorial goes on to say that the contract will be presented to Congress next week for ratification; that in return for certain moderate concessions Mr. Keith promises to maintain a weekly service of at least one ship between Puntarenas and the United States, probably New York, and that in these ships Costa Rica will be granted a certain amount of space for fetching and carrying freight; that the number of ships to be engaged in the service is four; that their tonnage is small and that, built as they are especially for the transport of manganese and lacking the qualifications for being used in the European service they will not be requisitioned and therefore Costa Rica's maritime communication with the United States is permanently assured; that another reason against their being requisitioned is their being engaged in transporting manganese, a requisite in the manufacture of munitions; that once more Providence comes to the aid of Costa Rica; that it is impossible to measure the consequences of not being able to export the coffee crop; that this would be more than a crisis, it would mean complete disaster; that the other manganese mining interests in Guanacaste will want similar concessions which the Government will grant on the same terms—of consenting to carry a certain amount of coffee; that the development of trade through Puntarenas will also greatly benefit the Government railway from San José to that port.

MOST EXCELLENT MR. MINISTER: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your courteous note of yesterday, in which, at the request of your Government, you are pleased to inform me that the United States desires to set forth that she has not recognized the Government of Señor Tinoco in Costa Rica, and that the recognition of this Government by that of Nicaragua would not be looked upon as an act of friendship toward the United States.

In this respect, I consider it opportune to transcribe to your excellency the following cablegram which I sent yesterday to the Chargé d'Affaires of this country at Washington:

"Referring to instructions communicated to Minister Doctor Jefferson by Department of State, you will be pleased to inform Secretary Lansing that Nicaragua has not recognized the Tinoco Government, neither has she entered, nor does she propose to enter into any act which may involve this recognition. Reply."

I am pleased to confirm to your excellency the cablegram transcribed whose absolute and definite character vindicate any other commentary, and I may add only this to your excellency that my Government, faithful to the spirit of the Conventions of Washington, has refrained, from the beginning, from recognizing the present Government of Costa Rica.

SIR: I have the honor to refer to Department's September 21, 5 p. m. in which I am instructed to inform the Government of Honduras that the United States desires it clearly understood that she has not recognized Tinoco's Government of Costa Rica and would not regard his recognition by the Government of Honduras as evidence of a friendly feeling toward the United States.

This instruction was complied with on September 24 and I attach hereto a copy of the note to the Foreign Office; enclosure No. 1.

I further have the honor to refer the Department to my October 2, 5 p. m.¹ stating that a reply had been received to my note of the 24th instant, said reply setting forth the explanation of the Government of Honduras for its recognition of Tinoco's Government. The Foreign Minister states Honduras recognized Tinoco's Government in Costa Rica under the first article to the Additional Treaty to the General Treaty signed in Washington December 20, 1917, by the Central American Governments. He further states his Government abstained from granting recognition to General Federico Tinoco, as President of Costa Rica, during the time he exercised a de facto power, but later when General Tinoco announced before the Constitutional Assembly of Costa Rica, he had taken possession of the Presidency; said announcement having been duly accepted by the representatives of the people of Costa Rica, Honduras was in duty bound to extend recognition. This recognition was extended not by an expressed act, but by the reply of Honduras on June 11, 1917, to the autographed letter of General Tinoco announcing the fact of his having taken the Presidency, before the Constitutional Assembly of Costa Rica, by virtue of election by his fellow citizens.

The Foreign Minister, the day previous to the receipt of Department's cable of September 21, when questioned as to whether or not Honduras had recognized Tinoco's Government, stated recognition had been extended some time in May; said recognition having been granted under the well established rules of international law.

From a conversation I had with the Foreign Minister on Saturday, October 6, he showed considerable anxiety over this situation and expressed the hope that an answer to his note of September 29 would soon be forthcoming from the Government of the United States. It is clearly evident, from the tenor of his note, that Honduras is most anxious to assure the United States of its desire to maintain the most cordial relations but to excuse the recognition of Tinoco's Government on the grounds of Honduras having acted only in accordance with the declaration of high political morality as set forth in the note of September 24 and according to precedent under the rules of international law.

With reference to the refusal of the Government of the United States to recognize the Government of Tinoco I feel confident this Government takes the same position as expressed to me by the representative of Salvador; i. e., that the United States has granted recognition to Russia, China and Peru why not recognize Costa Rica as there exists at the present time no opposition to Tinoco in Costa Rica. This view of the situation has been commented upon in one of the publications of recent date.

I have the honor to suggest that a reply of some nature be made to the Government of Honduras, for the Foreign Minister, on behalf of his Government, has, on several occasions, referred to his note as meriting a reply.

I have the honor to enclose herewith copy of my note to the Foreign Office under date of September 24, together with a copy of the reply of the Government of Honduras and a translation of same, all in triplicate.

JOHN EWING

[Inclosure 2—Translation]

The Minister of Foreign Affairs to Minister Ewing

MINISTRY OF FOREIGN RELATIONS,
Tegucigalpa, September 29, 1917.

MR. MINISTER: In reply to the courteous note of your excellency dated the 24th day of this month, by means of which you were pleased to communicate to me the attitude of your Government with reference to the Government in Costa Rica presided over by General Federico Tinoco, I have the honor to make known to you the following:

The Additional Treaty to the General Treaty signed in Washington December 20, 1917, by the Central American Governments, contains in its first article the stipulation which says:

"The Governments of the High Contracting Parties shall not recognize any other Government which shall come into power in any of the five Republics as a consequence of a coup d'état, or of a revolution against the recognized Government, so long as the freely elected representatives of the people thereof, have not constitutionally reorganized the country."

The Government of Honduras in compliance with this stipulation abstained from recognizing General Federico Tinoco as President of Costa Rica during the time he exercised a de facto power, abstaining from entering into relations officially with his Government, so long as it had no knowledge that the freely elected representation of that people had reorganized the country in constitutional form.

But with this condition fulfilled, whose compliance was confirmed by the autograph letter in which General Federico Tinoco announced that he had taken possession of the Presidency, before the Constituent Assembly of Costa Rica, by virtue of election by his fellow citizens, the Government of Honduras, in compliance with this same article of the Additional Treaty, was in duty bound to recognize that Government, which it did, not by an expressed act, but by the reply it gave on the 11th of June, last, to the mentioned autograph letter, official relations with the Government of Costa Rica remaining open since that date. Such act, conforming to the principles of international law, does not signify in any manner appreciation of the justice or injustice of the means which gave as their result the presence of Mr. Tinoco in power, but merely the recognition of the indisputable fact of the existence of a Government which, without opposition in Costa Rica, exercises supreme power and assumes international obligations, the sole requirement of international law in such cases.

The Government of Honduras in opening its relations with Costa Rica, after having had communicated to it the election of Mr. Tinoco and having been informed that the Constituent Power had given to him possession of the Presidency, has believed that it has proceeded in accord with the declaration of high political morality of the Government of the United States of America, contained in the note which your excellency was pleased to address to me under date of February 10, in the following terms:

"The Government of the United States desires to set forth in an emphatic and distinct manner its present position in regard to the actual situation in Costa Rica, which is that it will not give recognition or support to any Government which may be established unless it is clearly proven that it is elected by legal and constitutional means."

This declaration implies recognition in the event of the holding of elections by legal means, which are supposed to be employed when there is no complaint on the part of the populace living where they take place.

So understood the Government of Honduras, and doubtless so understood, also, the Governments of Guatemala and El Salvador, which recognized in the same form as Honduras the Government of Mr. Tinoco, after his election.

For the other part, the peculiar conditions of the Central American States, one of which is Costa Rica, the ties of family which unite them and the immediate and constant communication among them also have been determining motives for reestablishing relations with that country, as soon as it complied with the conditions demanded by the first article of the Additional Convention referred to.

I cherish the hope that the frank exposition preceding will carry to your excellency the conviction that my Government has believed itself to be proceeding in this delicate affair with regard for its international obligations and in harmony with the spirit of the declaration which your excellency was pleased to communicate to me. And I trust that the illustrious Government of the United States, with the good will with which it has contributed always to the progress and welfare of the Central American Republics, will continue extending the valued support of its friendship, so highly appreciated and recognized by the Government and people of Honduras.

I improve this opportunity to repeat to your excellency [etc.]

Castro Quesada arrived all well armed and without passports at Cote on Golfo Dulce and were taken under arrest to David where they were released by his orders. Alfredo Volio, accompanied by British Minister, called upon me to-day asking that I inform Department of his intentions. The following is a summary of these and of his responses to my questions.

As the leader he expects to invade Costa Rica from Nicaragua through Guanacaste to overthrow Tinoco, hold a free election. He has no personal ambitions but is willing to be a candidate for the presidency. He has organization and counts on uprising in every province when he starts and anticipates no effective opposition except in the City San José. He stated that he expected Nicaraguan President to favor him but would like Department to intimate to him to do so which would assure it, that Julian Irias is a friend of Tinoco and has procured commissions for some ten Nicaraguan leaders in the Costa Rican army, that he would assure pro-American, pro-Ally administration; that the Germans would favor him but only because of their considerable investments and of confidence of stable government under him; that he has ample funds including drafts on the Mercantile Bank of America and will remain here a week or more and in the meantime wishes to communicate by cable with Manuel Castro Quesada requesting that I procure for him transmission of his cables; that Rafael Cannes, the third Designado, is closely connected with the family of Tinoco but would be an acceptable President; that Augustine, brother of Manuel Castro Quesada, instead of the latter, was with his party and had gone to Sixaola; that Monge arrived yesterday with him. Others expected tomorrow.

Later he has filed following cablegram addressed to Alfredo González, Manuel Castro Quesada, Costa Rican Legation, Washington or New York.

Flag of rebellion raised, country back of us, let González influence Department to favor us. Have Castro come to Panama. I will tell about Nicaragua later. Answer to Panama.

Censor is withholding transmission until he hears from me. Please instruct immediately whether it should be forwarded. British Minister says Volio is a personal friend but that he believes him to be pro-German. He impresses me as not yet having effective organization but seeking one and especially the countenance of the Department.

You may inform Government of Panama that Government of United States cannot countenance any armed activities against Government of Nicaragua or the people of Costa Rica, and wishes to emphasize the responsibility which of course the Government of Panama recognizes rests upon that Government to prevent armed forces from leaving territory of Panama for the purpose of operating in either of the neighboring Republics. AMERICAN LEGATION, Habana, January 22, 1917, noon.

Urgent and confidential. Political situation critical and dangerous. Seven weeks ago when the liberals believing that Supreme Court with conservative tendencies would decide against them I did what I could to get the leaders to discountenance revolt and determine to accept judgment of the courts. Supreme Court has now decided against the conservative protests. At that time President Menocal declared to me repeatedly that the courts were the only proper arbitrators, and he was determined rigorously to suppress opposition to their findings and that "there shall not be another revolution in Cuba". The decision of the court as to Santa Clara Province assures a national liberal victory unless a liberal majority of the 1,164 already established in that province can be overcome in the partial elections to be held about February 12 in only six precincts whose maximum honest vote could not exceed 1,500 with party strength of neither side preponderant.

I find the President bitter against the Supreme Court and having mental attitude that as a natural consequence Supreme Court in throwing out conservative contests practically indorsed frauds by the liberals, his party cannot be restrained from exerting every effort and using the vote in these six precincts to overcome the established majority. This means employment of force, killing of liberal managers at the polls and declaration of palpably fictitious result. This would cause, in my opinion, revolution of much more bitterness and more difficult of solution than that of 1906. Destruction of cane plantations would be extensive. Personally sympathizing with President Menocal's reelection, his success by such methods, even without a revolution, would be an enduring calamity to Cuba. I do not believe majority of the cabinet or the party leaders advocate extreme measures to win election. Shall keep in close touch and hope for change in attitude of President but would like Department's judgment.

Your action in conferring informally with President at this time is approved. Should occasion arise and you consider it necessary, you may intimate to the President that this Government has been viewing with a great deal of friendly interest the present political situation in Cuba and has felt gratified that the differences of opinion were being settled according to the manner prescribed by law; that any action which would cause disturbance in Cuba and upsetting of the extremely good economic conditions would be decidedly regrettable inasmuch as the eyes of all American nations are turned upon Cuba at this time in consequence of the great strides which the Republic has made in political and commercial advancement.

After a long talk with President yesterday in which I fully presented Department's views and hopes, as expressed in the Department's January 26, 4 p. m., spoke of the general apprehension of public disorder at elections and regretted that nothing had been said publicly by one in authority to reassure the people, he assured me the Government's measures were being taken only to enforce order and insure safety to votes of both parties. Elections he declared would be held according to law and the liberals were agitating the country with contrary reports. As a probable result of this interview General Nunez, Vice Presidential candidate, has published long, full statement assuring public there need be no apprehension of lawlessness or misuse Government's powers. This has had a good effect. Liberal party council is tonight considering asking the United States to supervise elections on the fourteenth.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington February 10, 1917, 7 p.m.

Department's January 26, 4 p. m. Your February 1, midnight. You are instructed to hand the following statement to President Menocal and say that you have been directed to request that he make it public:

The Government of the United States, in view of its relations with the Republic of Cuba, and on account of the duties which are imposed upon it by the agreement between the two countries, is regarding with no small concern the question of the new elections in Santa Clara Province, which it is understood is an effort to carry out the laws providing the machinery for settling election disputes, and upon which laws the constitutional government must depend. In this case it is understood that the law provides that election disputes be settled by a central committee with an appeal to the Supreme Court of Cuba and ultimately should the dispute remain unsettled, by a reelection to be held in the districts in dispute.

The Government of the United States is confident that both parties are endeavoring to do their utmost to settle their difficulties through the agencies provided by law and without having recourse to methods which would cause a disturbance throughout the Republic and it would view with gratification the invoking of the constituted judicial methods by the people of Cuba, particularly at the present time when the great portion of the world is embroiled in armed conflict. Such a settlement of their disputes would undoubtedly stand as a fine example before the world as a case where misunderstandings were being adjusted by law instead of by arms.

The Government of the United States as a friend of the Republic of Cuba, desires to point out that election controversies have not been unknown within its territory, in which party feeling ran at the highest pitch and wishes to recall to mind that these disputes have always been settled by legal and peaceful means. The most notable case which has occurred in the United States was the Hayes-Tilden controversy in which the legally established elective machinery finally decided in favor of the candidate who had the minority of the popular vote. This controversy clearly proved that patriotism was elevated by a resort to law rather than by faith in arms.

The Government of the United States better than any other nation knows the patriotism of the Cuban people and mindful of the patriotic deeds done by the Cuban heroes in their struggles for liberty, is confident that the same patriotic spirit will prevail in the settlement of the present electoral difficulty and that it will be shown by implicit faith in the legal means which have been established for the settlement of such questions.

In view of the interest which this Government feels for the future of Cuba as a nation highly advanced in patriotism and social development, it is anxious that all the parties should know that their course is being followed by the United States with the closest observance and in the confident expectation that the means provided for by the Cuban Constitution and the laws enacted for this very purpose will bring as a logical result a satisfactory and peaceable settlement of the present difficulties.

You are instructed to inform President Menocal that this Government is confident that he will use every means in his power to prevent any disturbance of the present peaceful conditions in Cuba. That this Government is observing with the closest scrutiny every act of each of the parties which might indicate intimidating action by armed forces or illegal pressure exerted by the military or the police at the time of elections.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Habana, February 10, 1917, 10 p. m.

Urgent. As result of alleged plot against the life of the President three lieutenants of artillery attached to palace guards were arrested this morning and imprisoned and four lieutenants of infantry suspected of complicity were sent aboard a Cuban gunboat. Both Zayas and former President Gomez are absent in Santa Clara Province where partial elections will be held next Wednesday.

So far as it is possible to judge from opinions of business people with interests throughout the country and from general public apprehension, conditions could not be more critical. The President holds there will be no revolution. He asserts that the disposition of armed forces in Santa Clara and other elaborate precautions taken are solely for the purpose of maintaining order; the opposition and many of the President's own party contend they are intended to terrorize people and prevent their appearance at the polls. In the circumstances this view is reasonable but it is impossible to establish its accuracy. My opinion is that if force is actually used by conservative party it will be through more or less organized civilians. Some newspapers on both sides are inflammatory and unscrupulous in allegations.

If the conservatives carry the elections and the generally apprehended revolution takes place it would have early manifestation in wholesale burning of cane which is now extraordinarily inflammable. The Government would immediately attempt to arrest liberal leaders and I would regard the lives of Gomez and Ferrara in peril, even if they were not publicly participating in revolt.

The situation is unquestionably grave. Does Department consider it advisable that I ask the President if he objects to my sending military attaché to Santa Clara to observe elections? One drawback is that his presence might be construed to give endorsement to result, but it might avert bloodshed at one or two points.

GONZALES

File No. 837.00/1064

Habana, February 11, 1917, 11 p. m.

Your February 10, 7 p. m. At three o'clock this afternoon I delivered to the President a memorandum covering your instructions. At eight o'clock to-night he sent me a personal note accompanied by official reply from Secretary of State Desvernine. The Secretary says the Foreign Office neither exercised nor thought of exercising any power except to make disposition required by vigilance and nothing contrary to law and justice. It will permit no one to disturb order or, with fraudulent proceedings or violence, to change the legal process by which elections are regulated. Illegality will be handled by the courts, as the criminal courts are now investigating the plot against the President's life.

In respect to the publication of the Department's message, the Secretary of State says the President does not think he should take the initiative in its publication but is quite willing that I should do so.

In his personal note to me President Menocal expresses fear that biased reports have reached the Department. He says his past history and life, he thinks, entitle him to the American Government's confidence, and that he would never consent to a subversion of the reign of justice by violation of the fundamental laws of the Republic.

This afternoon the President spoke feelingly of his patience in bearing past abuse and assaults of agitators which had lately culminated in attempt on his life. He asserted that the only leaders in the present agitation against him were those who inaugurated the revolution in 1906; that the future peace and happiness of Cuba depended upon the suppression of revolutions engineered by selfish bad men. He had the situation well in hand, he declared, and was determined only to enforce the law and crush lawlessness.

There was a miniature uprising at one point in Habana Province and one point in Santa Clara today. One man was killed. A few men took to the woods and are being pursued by rural guards. About forty soldiers, expecting, it is alleged, to take part in a general uprising against the Government to-day escaped from Camp Columbia last night. Two were wounded and two of the guard were wounded. They are being hunted in the country. Numbers of civilian suspects have been arrested by the secret police. The action of soldiers is evidence of attempts to corrupt army, as alleged by the President, and developments outside past two days indicate some organization by liberals to revolt. It is an interesting coincidence that every important liberal leader is absent from Habana today. There is a feeling that these violent manifestations before election are harmful to liberal cause.

I understand warrants have been issued for a number of liberals said to be implicated in plans for revolution and attempt on the life of the President.

The President seems absolutely calm and confident of quickly suppressing any possible outbreaks. He asks for an understanding of his obligations and motives and patience.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Habana, February 12, 1917, 11 p. m.

There exists organized revolution against the Government in two, probably three, provinces. There has been no communication today with Camaguey, all lines cut and wireless not working. The assumption is that two battalions of troops there have joined insurrectionists and the capital of province occupied by them. Tonight Consul Griffith telegraphs that a major, supposed to be favoring liberal party's cause, took over command of troops in Santiago and placed colonel of regiment and governor of province in prison.

In numbers of towns in Santa Clara Province where the partial elections were set for Wednesday the mayors and part of police with some rural guards and numbers of civilians variously estimated at five hundred to one thousand have gone to the woods. In the most important encounter in Santa Clara the insurgent mayor and chief of police of one town were killed by troops. Tonight perfect quiet is reported in Habana, Pinar del Rio and Matanzas Provinces.

It is believed in Government circles that former President Gomez who left Habana a week ago in his yacht landed today in Camaguey Province. If he leads the revolution it will become most serious.

Menocal is evidently deeply disappointed at disloyalty of portion of troops. He attributes it to the fact that he retained officers in the army as it was organized by his predecessor Gomez.

This afternoon the newspaper Heraldo de Cuba edited and owned by Ferrara, Speaker of the House, was suppressed on charge of persistence in seditious publications.

The plan for army disaffections and that against life of the President are considered by officials as perfectly connected. No statement has been made by Government but President is preparing proclamation tonight.

None here understand policy of liberals in beginning revolution before the elections. The contention is they were not to be permitted to vote. Had this been sustained by events they still had the courts that had already decided in their favor and then revolution as a last resort. As the case stands the revolution is based on the allegation of proposed frauds or force.

Latest accounts are that Government is sending gunboat to retake Santiago. Most of the soldiers were absent in country districts when coup was effected.

Cuban Government is naturally desirous of having expression of moral support from the Government of the United States. British and American interests are already expressing belief that visit of a few war vessels to Cuban ports would have calming effect. Military attaché requests that facts given above be furnished the Chief of Staff.

Washington, February 13, 1917, 5 p. m.

Your February 12, 11 p. m. You will issue the following statement as coming from the Government of the United States:

The Government of the United States has received with the greatest apprehension the reports which have come to it to the effect that there exists organized revolt against the Government of Cuba in several provinces and that several towns have been seized by insurrectionists.

Reports such as these of insurrection against the constituted Government cannot be considered except as of the most serious nature since the Government of the United States has given its confidence and support only to Governments established through legal and constitutional methods.

During the past four years the Government of the United States has clearly and definitely set forth its position in regard to the recognition of governments which have come into power through revolution and other illegal methods and at this time desires to emphasize its position in regard to the present situation in Cuba. Its friendship for the Cuban people, which has been shown on repeated occasions, and the duties which are incumbent upon it on account of the agreement between the two countries force the Government of the United States to make clear its future policy at this time.

Repeat same to American consuls and agents at Cienfuegos, Sagua la Grande, Cardenas and Matanzas. Report to Santiago de Cuba requesting the consul to make the foregoing public in Camaguey.

No material change since earlier report. Cruiser Cuba left here tonight with three or four hundred men for Santiago.

Government appears to have situation at Santa Clara well in hand. Tonight President Menocal showed me telegram from General Nunez in city of Santa Clara saying there is order about the places where voting will take place tomorrow and that liberals will participate in elections.

President asserted people in the country were not [apparent omission] the petty insurgent chiefs and that he was receiving thousands of telegrams from volunteers.

Whereabouts of Gomez not definitely determined but he is believed to be in Camaguey by the President, who says that he will begin vigorous move against him the day after elections.

There was more optimism shown at the palace tonight.

"This means life or death for Cuba; I hope it is [apparent omission]," said the President.

As I need him and he could attend only one polling place in Santa Clara am keeping military attaché here.

Nine hours earlier I had sounded President on the possibility of postponing elections, and saw him again as early as possible this morning, getting more positive statement. He declared that the Junta Central constitutes sole legal authority outside of Congress for such postponement, and that body yesterday voted against action. The Junta Central is supreme electoral power independent of Executive, composed of president of the Supreme Court, a member of college of law, University of Habana, ranking member of Provincial Court of Habana and one representative of each party. Only the representative of liberal party voted in favor of suspension.

Early report from election mentions no disorder.

They made a stand against small detachment soldiers but fled when reinforcements arrived. Three insurgents, including sergeant of deserters, eight horses killed, [apparent omission] two Government soldiers. Government completely controls Santa Clara Province west of Jatibonico River. José Miguel Gomez with main body insurgents whose strength described by the Government as only several hundred is near Ciego del Avila in Camaguey. Sugar mills of Cuba Central, British company, at Jatibonico stopped grinding yesterday on order of Gomez. Since then eight hundred Government troops have arrived in the neighborhood. According to Government advices elections were held in Santa Clara to-day without further friction. In over two thousand votes Menocal received ten to one. The President's explanation is that liberals would not vote for Zayas. I understand several American newspaper correspondents were present.

No change in the situation since noon report except that Manuel Gonzales, mayor of Santo Domingo, Santa Clara Province, a large cane grower, has surrendered on promise of safe conduct to Habana.

Department should understand contingencies. General and widespread doubt exists of army's loyalty and the demonstrated disaffection in Santiago and Camaguey is not reassuring. Gomez organized this army when he was President and number of its officers took part in liberal revolt of 1906. Zayas told me 75 per cent of the army would come to him when called.

The test and crisis will come when the President's forces are brought against Gomez in Camaguey Province. In Gomez forces are several hundred deserters from the army. If Gomez should gain advantage through failure of Government's forces to fight loyally, I believe there would undoubtedly be uprising of liberals in Habana of sufficient strength to place President and Governor in peril. The rural guard force appears loyal but it is scattered throughout country.

At this time the published result of yesterday's election has not affected the situation.

Grinding in number of sugar mills stopped by order of Gomez but no cane destroyed. His object is to recruit men thrown out of employment.

The President's nearest friends, even some Cabinet members are not confident and I know many of them would be glad of almost any compromise. All of them doubt the army and are apprehensive of result of uprising here. There is no sign of uneasiness among Americans. On the other hand if army stands test of fight against Gomez forces there would be strong tide turning to President.

The statements issued by the Minister of the United States here to the press, with which you are surely acquainted, have produced the most favorable impression in all law-abiding citizens, because of the emphatic declarations made in the name of the United States Government with regard to its policy of upholding only legally constituted governments and never those that may be formed through revolutions. This declaration will have the most beneficent effect and the President instructs me expressly to direct you to assure the Government of the United States that, with the moral support of that Government, he is firmly convinced of his ability to reestablish order and to give a decisive example for the future with regard to seditious citizens and especially as to the military who may violate their sacred duties of discipline and fidelity. With reference to the military uprising in Santiago, to which your cablegram referred, I inform you that it has not extended and that the President is sure of dominating that or any other civil or military uprisings with the resources in his power and the reinforcements which have already been sent to those places.

Your telegram forwarding statement of Chamber of Commerce of Santiago, addressed to President Wilson received. The President has instructed me to direct you to make the following statement in reply.

The Government of the United States has clearly defined its position in the present armed rebellion against the Constitutional Government of Cuba and it will attribute any disturbance of economic conditions or ruin of crops to the action of those in rebellion against the Government. Moreover, it cannot hold communication with leaders of this rebellion while they are under arms against the Constitutional Government. No other question except the reestablishment of order throughout the Republic through the return of those in rebellion to faithful allegiance to the Government can be considered under the existing conditions.

The Government of the United States, as has been made known to the people of Cuba, will support only constitutional methods for the settlement of disputes and will exert every means in its power as the friend of the Cuban Republic, to effect such settlement, but, until those persons who have revolted against the Government lay down their arms, declare allegiance to their Government and return to peaceful pursuits, the Government of the United States can take no further step.

British Minister today informed me his Consul at Santiago had asked protection British war vessel saying that insurgent commander had made demand on branch of Royal Bank of Canada to issue currency. Representative in Habana of National City Bank has asked for American marine guard for his bank in Santiago. British Minister said he left matter of protection in our hands. I do not know what orders naval commander in Santiago has but infer as Cuban forces were warned against attempting to enter that port he will undertake to prevent the destruction of foreign property or looting of city. I am cabling Consul at Santiago:

Take immediate precautions to safeguard these and other American and foreign interests, to this end consulting, if you think it necessary, commander American naval forces in harbor.

Government column that landed at Manzanillo yesterday reached Bayamo today on the way to Santiago and its approach is likely to cause more desperate acts on the part of insurgents. The time necessary to capture city by land with forces at Government's disposal most uncertain. Meantime only hope of protection of life and property there rests on United States force.

GONZALES

File No. 837.00/1186

Habana, February 25, 1917, 7 p. m.

In two weeks of revolution Government forces have met with no reverse. Rebels hold no towns except where federal garrisons deserted at the outset and physical condition has made it impossible to reach. Loyalty of troops now with Government seems established. Total deserters not exceed seven hundred. Expected general uprising has not taken place. The army of Gomez estimated by his friends from four to fifteen thousand has not offered fight to even one battalion of federals except at Sancti Spiritus where insurgents were punished severely.

Nevertheless in Camaguey and Oriente Provinces general transportation remains paralyzed and second largest port is in the hands of rebels. Losses to all interests are great. The President is very optimistic. All business interests gloomy. In spite of the repeatedly declared position of Government of the United States revolutionary leaders are working now as on the first days of the revolt for American intervention. Then they expected United States to take charge of partial elections. Now they depend upon such intervention relieving them from punishment for illegal acts against the Government. How far will they go to force intervention? The prediction is general they will soon turn to wholesale destruction sugar cane and mills. If that is their purpose the Cuban Government cannot with forces at its command hold the towns, keep railroads open, and at the same time run down innumerable destructive bands hiding in woods and cane fields.

Whatever said to contrary I believe three or four revolutionary leaders control policy and men, Gomez having principal voice. Next week or ten days will probably reveal what policy will be. If it is destruction of property only quick action by the United States can prevent huge material losses. If that action takes form of giving physical aid to Cuban Government it can be exerted most readily by occupying ten or twelve ports and keeping open Cuba Railway, an American corporation. This alone would offer security to hundreds of American estates. If such support is given, the earlier it comes after need is determined, the greater its moral influence, and the greater its utility in releasing Cuban troops to suppress bandits.

My own view is that Gomez, failing in force, is as likely to fly from the country as resort to destruction. But in that view I stand practically alone.

Today Royal Bank of Canada cables British Minister here he had delivered Government funds in his possession to insurgents. Amount supposed to be three hundred and fifty thousand dollars. British Minister alleges money delivered under compulsion. He says that forced bond issue or war tax levy threatened.

Report to British Minister also said efforts being made obtain permission for renewing grinding in sugar mills but insurgents will permit renewal only on request from Government of the United States made through Consul.

As Cuban armed forces were warned by us against entering harbor I believe United States should land forces enough to give security against either violence or coercion by insurgents. Also believe peremptory order given to rebel leader by American commander supported by five hundred men that he do not permit destruction of foreign property in territory within jurisdiction would have immediate good effect.

The undersigned managers and owners of 25 sugar plantations and cane colonies in this province, do solemnly declare that since the 12th day of this month, all their estates are under the absolute control of the military forces which pronounced themselves opposed against General Menocal's Government and which operate under the orders of Commandant Rigoberto Fernandez under whose custody and care and not under General Menocal's forces the said estates have been working and executing in a normal manner all their grinding operations. That on the 24th of this month all this sort of work was stopped by the orders of the above said Commandant Fernandez and having gone out to him as the sole authority in control of this zone with the request that he cancel his order above referred to. The said Commandant stated that he issued that order in order to prove that the statement made by General Menocal before the United States Government to the effect that the sugar crop is being made in the usual way under control and custody of his forces is not true and the Commandant further stated that as soon as the American Government so suggests it, he will allow and take care of the sugar crop of our estates. In view therefore, that the Government of the United States can by a simple utterance avoid the enormous injury which the stoppage of the crop causes, we pray you to forward this declaration of our wants to the Honorable President of the United States and earnestly beg that he apply whatever remedy he may deem convenient.

[Undated.]

HONORABLE SIR: The circular telegram of the Department of Communications at Habana, dated the 14th instant, containing the text of your latest note relative to the political problems of Cuba, has come to my knowledge through a local Sancti Spiritus newspaper of the 16th. I also have knowledge through the same medium of the text of the first note upon the same subject sent by you and the answer thereto made by the constituted Government of Cuba.

In my quality of President of the Liberal Directory and Supreme Head of the present armed movement, I hasten to communicate to you the true and only end which is sought.

It is in no wise intended to overthrow the constituted government and set up a revolutionary government: there is nothing further removed from our thoughts. We demand only of the Government which functions in Cuba that it respect constitutional rights and, consequently, permit the holding of the partial elections³ in such a manner that they shall inspire confidence and be guaranteed against any attempt at official fraud or abuse of power. To accomplish this the party through its directory has exhausted every effort, proposing an infinite number of solutions of a harmonious character. None of them was even taken into consideration, but on the contrary, as a matter of public knowledge, preparations for fraud and the use of force were in the last few days augmented to an inconceivable limit.

I, in my official character, am in accord with the contents of your Government's first note, which bears out the noble friendship which you and the great American nation have for us, but I cannot accept as true the answer given by the Government of Cuba. On the contrary, it is false and the most superficial investigation would prove this beyond any question.

³ By-elections to have been held in several precincts in Santa Clara and Oriente provinces.

I wish to conclude with the assurance to you that any formula which shall guarantee free exercise of suffrage in the partial elections, without force or threats or frauds officially organized, will be accepted by us and will put an end to this political condition, in which we do not seek to overthrow governments and aspire only to preserve the rights and the freedom obtained with the blood of our heroes and consecrated in our Constitution, preferring otherwise to forfeit our well-being, our lives and our race.

I enclose a copy of the proclamation issued by me to the people and the army.¹ As you will observe, its contents embody the foregoing sentiments.

It affords me pleasure to proffer you the assurance of my most distinguished consideration.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, March 1, 1917, 5 p. m.

The Department instructs him to present Department's telegram of March 1, 1917, to President Menocal and to emphasize the statement that the Government of the United States will support only constitutional methods for the settlement of disputes and will exert every means in its power as a friend of the Cuban Republic to effect such settlement but until those in rebellion have laid down their arms, etc., the Government of the United States can take no further steps.

To say to President Menocal that no doubt remains as to the victory gained by the Constitutional Government over the rebels and as it is evident that the rebellion is crushed the United States wishes to extend its sincere congratulations to the constituted Government for this triumph. Also to state that as any further fighting would result only in needless loss of life and destruction of an immense amount of property of both Cuban and foreign owners, the United States counsels him in the most earnest manner to make clear to the people of Cuba and to the rest of the world his position as the patriotic advocate of constitutional methods for the settlement of electoral disputes and as the supporter of the mandates of the Supreme Court by immediately issuing a proclamation setting forth that coincident with the laying down of arms by the insurgents and return to their allegiance, elections will be called in Santa Clara and Oriente Provinces and an amnesty granted to those concerned in the revolt.

The Government of the United States as the sincere friend of the Cuban people desires to see a further triumph for the Constitutional Government in demonstrating to all that the only proper solution for difficulties such as the present occasion presents is through means provided by the laws of Cuba and in this case by the mandates of the Supreme Court, the highest judicial body in the Republic. It therefore offers its good offices to the Cuban Government to bring about this solution.

As this is matter of great urgency press for immediate compliance of the President with this Government's suggestion, pointing out that the destruction which has already occurred and that which is bound to result from guerrilla warfare ensuing after the dispersing of the larger bands of insurgent forces would probably force this Government to take such action as might destroy the moral effect of the Constitutional Government's successes.

To cable immediately result of conference with President Menocal.

Reply was, that exactly what they wished. Rebel commander said his orders from Camaguey headquarters were to burn railway, cane fields. On Sunday rebel commander invited commander of Cassin to take charge of town as he would evacuate next morning. Cassin left Sunday afternoon. U. S. AMERICAN LEGATION,
Habana, March 2, 1917, 6 p. m.

Department's March 1, 5 p. m. Instructions complied with 11 o'clock this morning. President has lost voice from severe cold. Promised written reply to-morrow morning but he said that amnesty to the rebelling officers would mean ruin of army as all self-respecting officers would resign. Seemed indifferent as to the elections. Would be willing to have General Crowder investigate and pass on whole election question.

I beg make the following statement; yesterday Ferrara cabled leader of Conservative Party in the House of Representatives practically same proposal for himself as made by revolutionists in Santiago.

Yesterday Gómez sent a message to commander of U. S. S. Paducah that unless arrangements made for reholding partial elections with fairness he would proceed with destruction of property. The revolution began five days before the partial elections.

Two weeks before the elections on inquiry from Zayas I offered to cable the Department any request he would make for supervision of elections. He made none.

Several days before the revolution General Emilio Nuñez, Secretary of Agriculture and Conservative Vice-Presidential candidate, having charge of party affairs in Santa Clara published a statement declaring liberals were raising false cry of contemplated coercion and frauds by the Government. He made a solemn promise of free ballot and safety of all who wished to vote, declaring Government's purpose solely to preserve order. On the same day President Menocal made to me similar declarations. But the liberal press continued publishing assertions that Government intended shooting liberals who attempted to vote. For weeks before the general elections in November press and rumor carried similar stories but after elections there was not one allegation of coercion by the army. The charge made after November elections by the liberals was that the courts would not decide justly on pending questions but the liberals were beneficiaries of the court's rulings. The courts I understand are open to appeal from results in partial elections.

The same leaders of the revolution of 1916 are the leaders of this revolution. They then succeeded in their object and suffered no punishment.

I assume recommendations by naval officers at Santiago are made without knowledge of intricate past political history or consideration of the future political effect nor of the almost certainty that officers of the army who turned against the Government deserted because promised high promotions for becoming traitors.

The revolution has failed. Outside of Santiago city rebels are reduced to condition of bandits. But they are destructive bandits. If Cuba is to live as self-governing, if revolutions destructive of life and property are to cease, there is one policy—the letter and spirit of the Department's reply of February 23 to Chamber of Commerce of Santiago. That means unconditional submission. Anything like compromise would be acclaimed victory by revolutionists and another step away from stable government.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Habana, March 3, 1917, 6 p. m.

President Menocal handed me today a memorandum in Spanish and reply to my representations of yesterday carrying Department's instruction of March 1, 5 p. m. Following is a translation:

There are very serious objections to bases proposed by the leaders of the rebel troops in Santiago and they are not predicated upon any consideration of justice. The very healthy moral effect of the declaration of the Government of the United States in favor of the constituted Government of Cuba duly appreciated by me demands that the energetic and decided action now being developed with assurance of early and satisfactory outcome shall not be weakened by a pact which is not even justified by necessity.

The full amnesty which is sought for all those in arms granted, as it would have to be granted, by pact or parley and not by wholesale clemency while they are still in frank sedition and perpetrating all kinds of misdeeds would have a disastrous effect upon the morale of the army and upon public opinion. It must be borne in mind that this is not a revolution of the people but is almost wholly a military sedition of officers who have been disloyal to the Government and unfaithful to their oaths and have scandalously broken discipline by rising in arms against the lawful powers, imprisoning constituted authorities and in some cases burning judicial archives and appropriating public moneys.

Without setting aside considerations of clemency for the victims of suggestion or force, as already announced in proclamations published to that effect, it is obvious that only by the just and exemplary punishment of the principal perpetrators and instigators of such crimes could the future Government of Cuba be set upon a firm foundation and the integrity of her institutions preserved. Indiscriminate pardon granted in consequence of a pact in which they would appear in the position of imposing terms would not only crush the authority and moral force of the Government but would provoke deep discontent in the loyal forces. A large part of the officers of the army, wounded in their most cherished sentiments, would prefer to abandon the ranks than to have themselves confounded with or by rank subordinated to those who have conducted themselves in such a guilty and shameless manner. Call attention to fact that the rebels with whom naval officers conferred in Santiago can speak only for a small group and not for Gómez who is Commander in chief of constitutional army and head of revolution respectively.

The suggestions contained in the bases relative to decisions of the Supreme Court and to the special elections in Santa Clara and Oriente Provinces are inconsistent with the facts. All of the decisions of the Supreme Court in election matters have been strictly fulfilled and in accordance with those decisions the election proclamations of successful candidates in Pinar del Rio, Matanzas and Camaguey have been issued. The special election pending after those decisions were to have been held on the 14th and 20th of February. The former were held on the appointed date and the governor-elect has already taken office, Senators have been chosen by senatorial electors and the representatives in Congress have been proclaimed. The election in Oriente has been postponed on account of the revolutionary uprising in the capital of the province and, without the necessity for any pact therefor with the rebels, will be held in accordance with law as soon as the troops take the city which will not be more than a few days hence. All facts go to prove that the people have been indifferent to the incitement of the rebels. The rebels have failed in their hope to bring about a popular uprising and were it not for the seditious troops who are still out, the movement, lacking the support of public opinion, would be already wholly put down. The Government encounters, on the contrary, decided support in all the provinces as shown by number of volunteers hastening to enlist in defense of law and order.

I am quite sure that had the arms which we await from the United States been already received we would by this time have had the rebellion completely in hand. Everywhere the law prevails in the western provinces and has been reestablished in Santa Clara and Camaguey and in a great part of Oriente. The advance of the troops upon Santiago after the victorious action of Bayamo is progressing with all possible haste and success. I think I am entitled to reasonable time for completing this task of peace and justice.

That in the interval of the few days longer which the insurrection will at any rate last, some destruction of private property may occur at the hands of the rebels themselves and with the deliberate purpose already announced of forcing change in the policy of the United States should be no reason for such change, for property damages would not remain without compensation nor could they justify the resulting sacrifice of the supreme interests of maintenance of constitutional legality of discipline in the armed forces of justice.

I believe firmly that the only constitutional measure which can be adopted in this situation of violence and force encompassed by the sedition of a part of the army is to let the army itself carry out its duty and accomplish the end for which it was created by enforcing respect of authority and law, which it will be able to do soon if the authority and the prestige of the Government is not crushed by unjustified concessions.

Your March 2, 6 p. m. Your cable represents President Menocal as being opposed to amnesty to rebelling officers and states that effect of such amnesty would be ruin of army as all self-respecting officers would resign.

Your cable is silent as to attitude of Menocal towards amnesty to others than officers. The immediate question is not amnesty but right of those in complicity with present insurrection to cast their votes in partial elections to be held under decree of Supreme Court. Obviously there can be no satisfactory partial elections held if electoral rights of voters in the precincts where such partial elections are denied to voters duly and properly registered therein. Ascertain views of President Menocal in this regard and as to other safeguards which should surround these partial elections which can be properly embodied in a proclamation re elections.

This Government believes that the most effective means which can be employed in bringing about a triumph of Constitutional Government in Cuba are those which have been suggested above.

AMERICAN LEGATION,

Habana, March 4, 1917, 5 p. m.

Department's March 3, 9 p. m. In my telegram of March 2, 6 p. m., was stated the President's reply would be submitted next day; it was cabled yesterday.

By proclamation of February 27 President granted amnesty to enlisted men who deserted under force of circumstances. Under this 110 enlisted men have returned to duty, one or two returning lieutenants have been pardoned, hundreds of civilians, including mayors of towns not charged with violence, have surrendered and been liberated. I believe amnesty intended for all civilians except pernicious leaders and flagrant criminals.

I definitely understood from the Department's addresses to the Cuban people sent through me and President Wilson's reply to Santiago Chamber of Commerce that the sole present question for the United States was fact of illegal rebellion against constituted Government of Cuba and that no other question could be entertained until the rebels submitted to Constitutional Government of Cuba. In Department's telegram, however, it is said that an immediate question is the rights of those in complicity with present insurrection to cast their votes in the partial elections to be held under the decree of the Supreme Court.

Perhaps President Menocal's reply together with my despatch of March 3, 7 p. m. have already furnished further information concerning this issue, but I assure the Department the question is not as it understands. Nothing has been done against the decree of the Supreme Court. Nothing decreed by law to be done has been left undone except holding partial elections in Oriente. The capital of province where elections officials reside was cut off from access to district where the elections were to be held. The President has announced that he will have these held under proper safeguards as soon as conditions make it possible.

Partial elections have been held according to legal decree in Santa Clara Province. Whether they were properly conducted is a question open on appeal to Supreme Court as were scores of appeals taken from results of November election. Whether the United States Government will insist upon new elections being held is for the Department. My concern is only that whatever my Government does shall be right.

There has not come to me a single statement that voter was denied right to vote in Santa Clara or that force was employed. The liberals took up arms days before the election and few went to polls. It is practically a certainty that many ballots were cast in names of persons not present; that is here a common election fraud belonging to the wrong system referred to in my telegram of March 3, 7 p. m. It is deplorable and the whole system needs a change. But the question from my sense of justice is whether the United States should insist upon purifying six precincts where the conservatives benefited from ballot box stuffing without considering the hundreds of precincts where similar or more gross frauds were practiced in the general elections and from which other party was probably greater beneficiary.

I am without definite information from the Department as to what naval authorities are authorized to do in making terms with rebels. Radio reports from San Francisco indicate clearly that general amnesty is taken for granted and promises about elections authorized by native citizens.

My recommendation of week ago was that intolerable condition in Santiago be remedied by the United States forces occupying town and controlling situation. Port could then be opened without danger of rebels getting ammunition or the customs duties and as United States prevented Cuban armed forces entering harbor to retake city it seems most logical act.

If given opportunity believe rebel officers in Santiago would surrender to United States naval commander and enlisted men would take advantage of amnesty already offered. The officers could rely on good offices of the United States to save them severe punishment. Rebel officers Santiago have already taken half million dollars or more Government funds.

General José Miguel Gómez, supported by Colonel Quinones, deserter from regular army, 400 deserting soldiers from the army and numerous other revolutionists, were disastrously defeated at Placetás, Santa Clara Province, noon today, by Government force of 2,000 infantry and cavalry under Colonels Collazo and Consuegra. Gómez, his entire staff, including his son and Colonel Quinones, with 200 others, made prisoners; 200 rebels killed. Government losses less than 20.

Several troops federal cavalry drawn from Pinar del Rio yesterday participated in battle after traveling 200 miles by rail.

Gómez forces were struck by simultaneous cavalry charges from the front and rear, machine guns effective; pursuit of the fragments being continued. Special train being organized midnight to bring more important prisoners to Havana. Gómez will be confined in special quarters state prison and will be under the disposition of civil authorities. Charges against him will include rebellion, destruction property and appropriation of Government funds.

Colonel Quinones and other deserting officers who are prisoners will be tried by military court. The military achievement by the federal troops which had been disposed and directed by telegraph and telephone by President Menocal for three weeks is striking but the fact that the chief conspirator was taken prisoner is testimonial to the humanity of the army and executive. With the chief instigator of destruction imprisoned and several thousand troops heretofore employed in hunting him released for other duty, security of property becomes much stronger. Except for activity of a revolutionary leader in New York, I see nothing to sustain even a destructive policy. AMERICAN LEGATION,

Department's March 7, 10 p. m. In a proclamation issued today addressed to the Cuban people, President describes revolution as broken by the capture of its chief promoter and leader, he exhorts all those who are still out in a lost cause to lay down arms which can at most serve only to prolong the suffering of the country and cause further irreparable damage, and conveys the assurance that while he will treat with inflexible vigor those who are obstinate in further wounding the mother country he will have all possible indulgence for those who, sincere in their repentance, give themselves up to the just and proper course of the laws and the constitution.

This afternoon I spent more than two hours with the President and Secretary of State with reference to Santiago and Oriente Province. Immediate result was issuance of following proclamation for immediate publication under this date:

It having reached my knowledge that there exist or that an attempt is being made to spread erroneous ideas in regard to the special elections which were to have been held on the 20th of last February in the Province of Oriente and which were suspended by my decree number 237 of the 16th of February because City of Santiago, where, by provision of the law the provincial electoral board vested with the canvass of the returns of that province resides, was in the power of the rebels risen in arms against the Constitutional Government of the Republic, I hereby make known that within ten days after reestablishment of the said Constitutional Government in the aforesaid City of Santiago de Cuba the holding of said elections will be decreed in accordance with decisions of the Supreme Court or resolutions of the central electoral board or the provincial electoral board relating thereto with full guaranties for the free casting of ballots which the electoral law prescribes and in strict accord with the provisions thereof.

Under the law all persons not in prison who are registered at polling places may vote without regard to whether they have been insurgents and regardless of amnesty.

The President recognizes Garcia Muñoz as governor. Muñoz cabled request that the President appoint Rigoberto Fernandez military commander Oriente Province. Menocal considered suggestion that deserter from army who had overpowered and imprisoned superior officer, rebelled against legal government and seized state funds be made military commander while yet in revolt too preposterous to merit reply.

The President and Secretary of State concur that civil governor has authority under the law to receive surrender of rebelling officers whom he must hold in prison subject to courts and to accept surrender under terms amnesty proclamation of February 27 of all enlisted men who would of course return to army. The Governor is absolutely devoid of legal power to appoint military commander. Under Cuban laws provisional governor little more than salaried figurehead.

Naval commander's proclamation issued March 4 and indorsed by Consul, while ambiguous in form received by me, appears to support Fernandez as commander of Oriente before having surrendered as rebel; to warn other forces from entering province after Government troops already in province; and to clothe Fernandez with sole authority to suppress disorders of which his revolutionary companions solely guilty.

Yesterday rebels warned federal commander Betancourt, advancing toward Santiago, they would burn the President's personal estate, the Palma Soriano mills, if advance continued. Menocal ordered advance today. Rebels burned all cane—thirty-five million arrobas. Federal troops arrived in time to save mill.

I believe influence in Oriente against Government opposition of Commander Fernandez of Santa Clara and Commander Demola of Camaguey tremendously exaggerated through Ferrara in New York and his agents in Santiago. These rebel officers lack influence in Oriente where there are no important civil rebel leaders. With Santiago in Government control there is not half the influence to sustain disturbance in that province that has been demonstrated in Santa Clara.

You are instructed to inform the United States Government that there are no elections pending other than those of Oriente Province, inasmuch as the ones at Santa Clara were held on the 14th ultimo with the strict observance of all legal requirements and without any protests or appeals having been entered against them. Legally, therefore, the elections referred to are an accomplished fact, so much so that the governor-elect has already taken possession of his office. Any interference with that election would be contrary to the law and could not be accomplished legally, much less so if it is taken into consideration that the suppression of the definitive character of those elections in pursuance of the rebels' demands, would represent the upholding of their illegal pretentions.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, March 14, 1917, 6 p. m.

The Navy Department has received the following message from the commander of the United States vessel stationed at Guantanamo which Colonel Jane desires to have forwarded to President Menocal:

After 24 hours have elapsed since requesting conference leaders now ask five days armistice to permit sufficient time for conference and answer from you. Await orders. Signed Colonel Jane.

The Navy Department states that the commander of the U. S. S. Montana believes that as it is essential before conference, armistice requested is important, and considers that by conference basis of settlement can be reached. He states that the situation at present is quiet but if no action is taken or if a battle takes place in that vicinity he considers it certain great damage will follow to foreign and American property, no matter with what result. He strongly recommends that this view be presented to President Menocal by you.

Santiago [undated; received March 15, 1917, 7 p. m.]

Transport just landed about 600 Government troops, insufficient to protect city if the marines are withdrawn. Have told Commander Belknap it is advisable to defer landing until the arrival more troops, otherwise city will witness fighting and probably much destruction. Bitter feeling increases against Americans. Cuba President to save lives should grant some sort of armistice immediately.

President Menocal received from two representatives of Government in Santiago following cablegram tonight:

Interpreting your wishes and policy we today visited Mayor Comacho, liberal, who had taken refuge in Italian Consulate, assured him in your name he will be absolutely unmolested and respected in position as mayor. We asked him make our attitude plain to all liberals here, stating your Government opposed to all reprisals, and only desire prompt complete restoration public peace and tranquillity.

The President cabled reply as follows:

I applaud your conduct with respect to Mayor Comacho. Continue to employ these methods.

Government troops disembarked Santiago today. According to advices to the Cuban Government they were welcomed joyfully by townspeople but panic exists among rebels still in city, who seem to fear action of civil courts whose sittings had been suspended. It is proposed to organize 1,000 militia. Government forces and American marines appear to be still in city.

The President expresses confidence that rebels will not attack city, and that no difficulty be experienced in maintaining order.

Colonel Sanguily cables the President from Santiago that the complete regimental band with lieutenant, sergeant major, paymaster sergeant, and 40 other soldiers who were with rebels surrendered to him to-day. Other surrenders expected.

Reports having sent cavalry force reconnoiter four miles from city where governor and American Consul reported rebel force ready to attack city but found none. His patrol guarding one of the aqueducts supplying city had skirmish last [night]. Suffered two wounded.

President Menocal's explanation of the agitation in Santiago against occupation of city by Cuban forces is that such activity is influenced by numbers of prominent business men affiliated with rebels whose names were recently published in Santiago liberal paper as roll of honor. These men fear they will be thrown in jail. Said he had no intention of troubling liberals who were not criminals.

Five hundred federal infantry are moving to-day from Bayamo to San Luis. This gives additional security to Santiago from attack of rebels.

Mayor of Bayamo reports mills grinding at Manzanillo. Road to Bayamo open and numerous rebels presenting themselves. Railroad conditions in Camaguey improving but still bad. No complaint of cane fires for several days.

For the purpose of your holding a conference on board Montana with rebel leaders proposed by you in which you hope to reach terms consistent with Cuban President's proclamation, the President of Cuba agrees not to advance east of Alto Songo for a period of five days from 6 p. m. today. It being understood that the rebels do not attempt to advance west of that point. Immediately west of Alto Songo is already occupied by Government troops whose only purpose now is to protect property, establish and maintain order in Santiago and immediate vicinity. Received wireless this morning from naval commander at Guantanamo saying rebels declined to attend conference on war vessel because armistice granted for that purpose did not include whole province. I saw the President in regard to proposal. He said, and I have transmitted reply, that new request is along lines policy of Ferrara to involve his country and the United States into entering pact with the rebels against which both declared opposition; that Government held every important point in province except Guantanamo; that threats of destruction were similar to those made when attempting to prevent federal troops landing at Santiago; that instead of attacking Santiago as threatened half of deserters from the army in reach of city had surrendered. He considered armistice over province would place Government at a disadvantage and did not consider extreme apprehension warranted. At the same time he expressed a wish that marines be landed at Daiquiri and other threatened points on the coast between Santiago and Guantanamo.

The President said that if naval commander is satisfied armistice agreed to would not be taken advantage of for conference he was ready to advance on Guantanamo.

I added personal belief that a vigorous declaration along lines made by Department weeks ago to the effect that rebels would be held strictly accountable for American life and property if now made to those declaring themselves prepared to become murderous and destructive bandits would have marked effect. To treat as belligerents men who will not fight but threaten to murder unarmed Americans would be a grave mistake.

Your March 23, 1 a. m. You are directed to hand the Cuban Government a copy of the following statement and say that you are authorized to make it public.

A copy of this cable has been sent to the commanding officer of the United States naval forces via Navy radio with direction to hand it to Consul at Santiago and to make it public in all parts of Cuba.

It has come to the attention of the Government of the United States that a report is current and persistent in Cuba that the United States in response to requests from leaders of those in revolt against the Constitutional Government is considering taking steps in their behalf. The Government of the United States is at a loss to understand how its attitude in the present situation in Cuba could be misunderstood.

In order to avoid any further misunderstanding with reference to the several statements made by the Government of the United States and published throughout the Republic of Cuba, which statements have defined the attitude of the Government of the United States in unequivocal terms, it is desired to reiterate essential points set forth in the above mentioned statements which are as follows:

1. The Constitutional Government of Cuba has been and is being supported by the Government of the United States in the endeavor to restore order throughout the Republic.

2. The Government of the United States, in emphasizing its condemnation of the reprehensible conduct of those in revolt against the Constitutional Government in attempting to settle by force of arms disputes for which adequate legal remedies are provided, desires to point out that until those in revolt recognize their obligations as citizens of Cuba, have laid aside their arms and returned to their allegiance to the Constitutional Government, the United States cannot hold communication with any of them and will be forced to regard them as outside the law and beyond its consideration.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit in duplicate a communication dated March 20 from the commanding officer of the U. S. S. Eagle to the Secretary of the Navy, via American Minister, Habana. Attached to the first copy are a memorandum signed by several rebel officers who conferred with an officer of the Eagle at Manati, and two petitions for protection from American residents of Bartle¹ and Galbis.¹

The commander of the Eagle states that he "feels certain that if the United States sees fit to act favorably" on the request of the rebels, as conveyed in this memorandum, for action by the United States which would in effect be a recognition of the justice of the rebellion and admission of the Government's defeat, "quiet and order will be quickly restored." But while apparently urging a course calculated to quell the immediate disorder, he does not seem to consider the effect which justification of the rebellion might have on the future peace of Cuba.

I have communicated to the Foreign Office the requests of the American citizens resident at Bartle and Galbis for protection.

U. S. S. "EAGLE,"
Manati, Cuba, March 20, 1917.

1. I forward herewith the declaration signed by the rebel leaders in this vicinity before Lieut. (j. g.) J. A. Lee, U. S. Navy, yesterday morning March 19.

2. I myself conferred with the above-mentioned leaders yesterday afternoon, and assured them that I would forward their declaration and do all in my power to assist in reaching an agreement. I published to them the recent proclamation of General Menocal.

3. They are convinced that coercion was being used in this province before the election due Feb. 20. It is reported to me reliably by foreign residents that rurales started such a reign of terror here, beginning about Feb. 1, that many men were afraid to go to the polls. The leaders assured me most solemnly that they would stand by the result of any election the fairness of which was guaranteed by the U. S., and that supervision by the United States was the only means of obtaining such an election.

4. I asked them if they wished a general reelection, or merely one in the contested districts. They replied that they wished only an election in the districts of Las Tunas and Las Villas.

5. They beg the U. S. to intervene in the interests of justice and are determined to force an intervention by any means in their power. They are now respecting life and property but, if the U. S. does not intervene, they state they intend to start a wholesale campaign of destruction, and, if that does not avail, they may even go so far as to threaten the lives of Americans. I explained to them the gravity of such a course, and told them most decidedly that the leaders committing, or allowing such acts, would be held personally responsible. Also that a campaign of destruction would impoverish their own country. They replied that they understood that perfectly, but that they were willing to go to any lengths to obtain a justly elected Government.

6. They disclaimed responsibility for lawless acts committed in this vicinity and assured me that, while awaiting a reply from my Government, they would do their utmost to protect American interests. I feel certain that if the U. S. sees fit to act favorably on their request, quiet and order will quickly be restored. Otherwise I fear much more property will be destroyed and the safety of unprotected Americans greatly endangered. The situation of the women is particularly bad, since the men have practically no firearms, and they are absolutely unprotected from the insults and assaults of roving bands of lawless, and frequently drunken, negroes. They cannot get out, since travel is dangerous, and frequently impossible for them.

7. There are no Government troops in the vicinity except at the Chaparra mills, where report says that there are as many as 3,000. These are inactive and do nothing but guard the Chaparra property.

8. I forward herewith the appeal of the Americans in Bartle. I can do nothing but obtain assurances for their safety, which Gen. Mendieta has given. An officer has gone there today to investigate conditions. We may furnish an escort for any one desiring to come under our protection at Batey.

9. The manager of the Manati Sugar Company also appeals for more forces in order to protect his cane fields and railroad bridges. We can only assure the safety of the mill, and the people at Batey, as my force is too small for any extensive operations.

10. An early reply to the proposition of the rebel leaders is most desirable. The sending power of our radio is low, but any message sent broadcast from Key West, on the schedule for a ship with single operator, will probably be picked up.

11. A gentleman has just come in from Galbis with the enclosed letter which is self-explanatory.

General José Irene Muñoz, General Blás Mendieta, Colonel José Grau y Agüero, Lieutenant Colonel Jorge Martínez Valdivia, Major Felipe Leyva, Major Manuel Olivet, Captain Ayudante Juan Carrio Garcia, aide to General Mendieta, and other officers, all belonging to the invading column of Camagüey, met and made it of record:

That they wish to make it known to the Government of the United States of America not under the head of military weakness but for the good of peace, wealth and prosperity in this beloved country of theirs, that they endorse the declarations that were recorded in the instruments drawn up in the city of Santiago de Cuba in the presence of the Admiral of the American Squadron, Mr. Mayo, and also that of Camagüey and that of Santa Cruz del Sur, Province of Camagüey, on March 6 of the current year, adding that all their aspirations are condensed in the following declarations:

Obtain from the Government of the United States of America that elections will be held in Cuba under the supervision of that country, in which elections the people of Cuba will be allowed freely to cast their votes within the most narrow legality and this being accepted by the Government of the United States obtain under the guaranty of that nation a total amnesty for every leader, private and countryman that may have risen under arms, guaranteeing at the same time the free use of the property of all without their being confiscated or burdened under any head. The foregoing once achieved the forces that have risen against the Government of Menocal will lay down their arms and be the first to guarantee the restoration of order and will abide by the returns whatever they may be even that of legally continuing in power President Menocal, for all their cravings may be summed up in a vehement desire to have justice and legality prevail in this country whose Constitution has been invaded by the Government of Menocal, to which all the present events may be traced.

And in order to make it of record they sign the present instrument in the presence of J. A. Lee, Lieutenant of the American Navy, whose ship is anchored in the port of Manatí.

SIR: I have the honor to enclose herewith in translation a copy of President Menocal's manifesto to the people of Cuba, dated March 26, 1917.

I have [etc.]

WILLIAM E. GONZALES

President Menocal's Manifesto of March 26, 1917

To the People of Cuba: I consider it one of my first duties in the political crisis which fortunately is approaching its end by the complete triumph of law and justice, to state directly to the country the true character of the revolution as it becomes more and more pronounced by the dastardly acts of the leaders and their instruments, and the purposes which guide me in my firm determination to combat rebellion until it is crushed.

I shall not be dissuaded from doing this because such a statement may now seem unnecessary or superfluous; nor because of the daily diminishing number of rebels in arms against the lawful Government of the nation; nor because of the fact, which for the honor of Cuba is daily becoming more patent, that the great majority of those who have responded to the artful incitement of the self-seeking instigators of the uprising with abominable acts of rapine and barbarous destruction of private property are of the most ignorant, lawless and depraved classes of our people; nor because of the series of victories achieved by our brave army, which have brought into relief the weakness of the much-vaunted rebel forces; nor even because of the failure of the campaign of false news, organized perseveringly and unscrupulously, out of Habana, Santiago de Cuba and New York, for the purpose of leading public opinion astray in our own country, in the United States, and elsewhere.

No one can have forgotten among those who have followed the course of events during the four months preceding the elections of November 1, that there hung over the country a veiled though persistent menace of revolution by the enemies of the Government. Through this menace it was attempted to coerce all those who recalled with horror the outrages, disorders and destruction of property which had characterized former disturbances, instigated and directed by the same politicians. Then began likewise the iniquitous task of undermining the discipline and loyalty of the army, which should be always sacred to all parties, to corrupt men bound by all ties of honor and duty to uphold law and order and defend the Constitutional Government of the Republic.

In September and October last year these same politicians spread the rumor that the Government was going to use the public forces at the polls for the purpose of assuring its victory. The elections were held, and the injustice and malevolence of these calumnies was bared to the sight of all, for no charge or complaint was made of the use of force by the authorities as against the rights of any elector. On the contrary, forty-two Conservatives addicted to the Government had been killed in bloody encounters, while none of their adversaries met that fate. The very persons who had attributed to the Government such designs against freedom of the suffrage explicitly admitted the perfect legality and admirable order with which the elections had been held throughout the Republic. Not having obtained the victory which, at all costs and by whatever lawful or unlawful means, they sought to impose upon the country, the conspirators persistently and loudly made the most impassioned charges concerning the elections as held in certain precincts, insinuating that their protests would not be heard by the courts, whose integrity they challenged, endeavoring to poison the public mind with malevolent conjectures of the pressure which, as they alleged, the Government proposed to bring to bear upon the courts, and threatening revolution if the courts decided against their claims. But the decisions of the courts were favorable to them. They could allege nothing further against the force and efficiency of the remedies provided by law. They straightaway plunged, without consideration of any kind, into a campaign of spreading broadcast over the country, in the most violent and menacing terms, the bold imputation that the Government would prevent its adversaries from casting their ballots in the bye-elections which in accordance with provisions of the law were to be held in a few districts. And failing to intimidate the Government or to impose upon it by their threats pacts incompatible with its dignity and with the Constitution and laws, they plunged into revolution five days before the date set by the proper boards and courts for holding the first of said bye-elections; uprising in arms upon such a futile pretext notwithstanding that the courts which had previously decided contest after contest in their favor and with their applause, were the same courts which would have cognizance of proper appeals should the Government have been capable of adopting any measure contrary to the law or violating the rights of electors.

The Government of the United States has defined very exactly and very properly the conduct of the rebels in saying that they have attempted "to settle by force of arms disputes for which adequate legal remedies are provided." In proceeding thus these men have seriously impaired the prestige of Cuba and have attempted to bring into disrepute the capacity of our people for self-government.

Against such rash proceeding as this and against the acts which very soon revealed the extent and anarchical character of the conspiracy hatched against public repose and law and order, the most vigorous and severe measures would have been justified. The Government, nevertheless, while acting with all necessary energy, has acted within the law; and I have observed my purpose not to carry punitive measures to an extreme to the point of abstaining from the exercise of the exceptional powers vested in me, but the use of which I reserve for a necessary case.

No one deplores more bitterly than I this sanguinary struggle between brothers, nor more anxiously and fervently longs for the reestablishment of order and normal political life which shall afford equal safeguards to everyone in his rights and aspirations. I have never made any determined personal effort in a contest for political power. But I harbor the ambition, with an ardor which in no one is excelled, of securing peace based upon justice and the liberty which consecrates it. I am ambitious to see Cuba occupy firmly and permanently a place of honor, above those unfortunate countries, victims of disorders and revolution which are the derision and scorn of prosperous and cultured nations where the authority of the laws and the stability of governments are scrupulously respected. In opposing as I do, with resolution and firmness, to the rebellion and its excesses and outrages all the means which the Constitution has placed in my hands, I defend the very existence of the Republic and assure the necessary foundation for its future prosperity and grandeur.

For those high ends, in which the present and future of our country are bound together, acting in its name and for its good, I am entitled to the support of all loyal Cubans who love their country, without exception as to persons or parties. Citizenship demands that they work decisively, each in his own sphere, against the attempt to sacrifice the Republic for petty partisan considerations and personal ambition. No good citizen can deny his aid in putting down anarchy, in punishing a rebellion stained already with atrocious crimes and which employs by preference the arms of depredation and incendiarism. To let such outrage go unpunished would be permanently to renounce for the future solid and stable governments capable of affording adequate protection of life and property.

To all citizens without distinction I appeal for their cooperation in the reestablishment of peace—now, fortunately, near—and in the task of strengthening the roots of the Republic, for today and for all time.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, April 25, 1917, 5 p. m.

American Consul Caimanera reports conditions at Santiago, Manzanilla and surrounding country to be deplorable; that conservative estimates indicate at least 6,000 well-armed revolutionists operating in Oriente Province with little hope the present strength of Government forces will be able to overcome them; that feeling against Americans is bitter and American property interests suffering. He adds there is immediate need for effective action.

No. 444

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Habana, April 29, 1917.

SIR: I have the honor to enclose herewith copies of letters exchanged a month ago between Doctor Alfredo Zayas, liberal candidate for the presidency in the last elections, and myself. The first letter is from Dr. Zayas bearing date March 29; the reply is of the following day. Dr. Zayas made rejoinder on March 31, and my final letter was written April 2.

While Dr. Zayas immediately took advantage of the information as to his security from arrest contained in my letter of March 30, by coming out of hiding, he has not responded to my letter of April 2, or taken advantage of the opportunity therein given to explicitly state exactly what he wished to ask the Department. I considered it a proper precaution to require that he formulate his own questions and write them in his native language.

A month before the date of this correspondence a mutual friend came to me from Dr. Zayas and stating that he wished to visit me at the Legation, asked for a salvo conducto from the President.

Replying to my inquiry, President Menocal said Dr. Zayas was hiding from his own fears, but he would issue a formal safe conduct.

This he gave to me, the document being unlimited in time and embracing all Cuba.

When notified that I had the salvo conducto Dr. Zayas declined to receive it unless endorsed by me. I told him I would endorse it for the day of his visit to the Legation but as these guaranties from molestation were issued on the assumption that the holders would abstain from all acts against the Government or other illegalities, I could not for a moment consider extending my responsibility beyond the point indicated.

He did not take the salvo conducto and remained hidden for another month.

I have [etc.]

HABANA, March 29, 1917.

SIR: From the beginning of the present revolution I have been out of all public act, in order to avoid any unjust accusation, or be put in prison without cause, as result of political antagonism, or excessive zeal, or erroneous information.

But I believe it will be convenient for the peace and order in the Republic, and for the exercise of legal actions, that I could act as president of the liberal party and candidate for the presidency, with my friends, that are, I am sure, disposed to take a line of conduct in accordance with me.

For that purpose, I need to be at home, and in different places of the city, and perhaps I will find convenient to go to Washington, in relation with the same matter; and I desire to obtain, by your personal intervention, the assurance that the Cuban Government, or its agents, shall not accuse me, and that I will be in liberty to go to Washington, considering it convenient.

I don't pay attention to the judiciary proceeding, because I am not responsible in any way.

So, I beg you to take in consideration this letter (in other case confidential) and be kind giving to me an answer, directed to my wife, 3a Morro st.

Believe me [etc.]

ALFREDO ZAYAS

[Inclosure 2]

*Minister Gonzales to Mr. Alfredo Zayas*AMERICAN LEGATION, Habana, March 30, 1917.

MY DEAR SIR: Your letter of yesterday's date asking that I obtain for you guaranty from arrest so that in the interest of securing peace in Cuba you might visit and consult with leaders of the liberal party in Habana and then, if deemed convenient, proceed to Washington, was handed to me yesterday afternoon by your son.

I spoke with General Menocal upon this subject last night, and was assured by him, as he has assured me from the outbreak of the revolution, that you had no cause to fear arrest by the Government in Cuba. He does not consent, however, that you should leave Cuba at this time because he cannot observe where any activities by you in the United States could operate for peace.

At the last interview you had with me at the Legation in the early days of February, in response to your inquiry as to whether the United States would intervene I offered to transmit by cable to the Washington Government any statement you or the liberal party wished to make concerning the pending partial elections, including a request by you or that party for supervision of those elections by the United States. You said you would that evening consult with those in control of the party and would communicate the decision the following day. I heard nothing further on the subject. A few days later you left Habana for Santa Clara Province, where you remained until after the revolt began.

The Government of the United States has not known persons or parties in the distressing conflict in Cuba. But it has known the Constituted Government of Cuba, and it has known its established policy of condemnation of and opposition to revolutions against constitutional governments. The President of the United States publicly declared this policy years ago. It should have been known to every intelligent person not wilfully blind to my Government's attitude.

In my letter to Mr. Márquez Sterling, published in all the newspapers of this country early last December, was an appeal to the patriotism of Cubans; it also contained the trite declaration that civilization could rest only upon law; that the appeal to illegal force led to anarchy, and that "no existe problema que los cubanos no puedan solucionar por sí, y solucionar para su honor perdurable, si cada cual acuerda en su corazón: primero que nada, mi patria!"⁶

But in face of the declared and known position of the United States Government towards revolutions and of my efforts to avert a foredoomed revolution, the revolt against the Government took place before the partial elections were held.

⁶ Translation: "There is no problem the Cubans are unable to solve by themselves and solve it to their everlasting honor, if every one will decide in his own heart: My country first of all."

The United States Government has four times declared its position since this uprising occurred, three times through this Legation and once to the Chamber of Commerce of Santiago de Cuba. I hoped when the first declaration was made that patriotic Cubans would recognize the finality of that decision and actively exert themselves to prevent sacrifice of life, destruction of property and the breeding of the spirit of lawlessness and brigandage. At each subsequent declaration the same hope was entertained, but, as yet, in vain.

You now speak of going to Washington. Is there any question bearing on this matter that my Government has not answered? Is there any uncertainty as to the attitude of my Government on any point which could possibly hinder patriots in Cuba from working in Cuba for their country's interests? If there is, and you can not leave this country to appear in Washington, I again offer to present your question or to state your case by cable and obtain a reply.

If there is to be patriotic work for tranquillity manifestly it should begin while such efforts can have value—before all the men to die have been killed and all the property to be destroyed has been burned.

WILLIAM E. GONZALES

Mr Alfredo Zayas to Minister Gonzales

HABANA, March 31, 1917.

MY DEAR SIR: I am obliged for your attention answering my letter, dated 29 of the present month; and I remain knowing that the President, General Menocal, assure you, as he has assured before, that I don't have cause to fear arrest by the Government in Cuba.

I wish to submit to your consideration how delicate is my personal condition at the presents circumstances. I am the candidate opposite to Gen. Menocal, and convinced of having won the elections, so that I discusse, not his actual presidency, perfectly legal, but the future Government, that I don't judge under the same criterium, and in consequence my acts persecuting this second point of view, can not be interpreted as opposition to his permanence in functions in these moments.

I didn't give to you an answer about your offer to transmit by cable to Washington Government any statement or petition from me or from the Liberal party, including a request for supervision of the special elections, because I wanted to know personally the conditions existing in Santa Clara, after the assurances that General Menocal has given to you (and you told me) that those elections should be impartial and with guarantee for all.

I left Habana the 7th of February, in the evening, with the purpose of visiting the six electoral colleges, and assist to a meeting of the Provincial Convention the 10th, returning to Habana and calling on you the 11th, presenting a request to your Government for a counsel or advise to General Menocal, about the elections of the 14th, if I found it necessary.

The conditions in Santa Clara show me immediately that it would be impossible for the liberals the exercise of their right as voters. Myself, I was threatened by the soldiers not to pass in front of the house destined for the Electoral College in Guadalupe (municipality of Zulueta);—I saw numerous electors of Ranchuelo in Santa Clara and Camajuani, who have been compelled to leave their homes, afraid by the Rural Guards;—I was induced by my friends not to go to Yaguaramas, because they assure me that I would be killed;—the same was said by my friends in Purial;—and I talked with several electors of Pedro Barba that the public force has forced them to leave their homes and rural properties. However, I proposed in the meeting, and was approved by all, to appoint commissioners for each College, and to assist to the elections. I have then the purpose of returning to Habana and make without delay the said petition to you; but from the 9th and during the 10th, I received by telephone news of prisons effected and others expected in Habana, and the 10th I read in the journals, with great surprise, that the Liberal Directing Board was accused of rebellion. Then I resolve reaching the city not to appear in public, fearing to be accused and arrested, losing my activity completely.

Impossible was for me to give my answer about the matter treated in our interview, and I hope you will excuse me.

You ask me if there is any question bearing on the Cuban case that your Government has not answered, or any uncertainty as to his attitude in any point, and I will say that I find two questions of fundamental importance to be consulted.

I. The Government of Washington don't make any difference between the entety "Liberal Party" and the entety "Revolt," being this last composed by militars, and private citizens liberals and also conservatives, as the Generale Milanés, Padró y Garcia? When the Government of Washington declare that he never will treat with anybody while the rebels don't deposed their arms, he included in his refusal one or more representatives of the Liberal Party, desiring to treat with him about the matter?

II. The present Government of Cuba is legal and constitutional, and never we, liberals, have denied that, or pretended to interrupt its functions; but the next Government can be the result of illegal proceedings, and appear as one legal and constitutional, because the Liberal Party, considered (erroneously by your Government, and intentionally by interested here) as the same Revolt, or as a similar or complementary body, cannot do nothing in guard of its rights by causes easily conceived. If the Government of Washington has given his powerful support to the actual Government of Cuba, in consideration that it is legal and constitutional, must be a logical consequence of this policy that the support will cover a new Government that possibly will appear elected during the Revolt, voting in Santa Clara more names than electors were registered, and effecting a fantastic votation the 9th of April in Oriente, where nobody can go, or interfere in any way?

I call your attention upon these two points, and beg you, if you don't find inconvenient, to transmit them by cable to the Government of Washington, because I understand that my liberty is assure in Cuba, but not for sailing to Washington.

I am now according with my political friends a line of conduct with the purpose of restoring normality in the Legislative Power, as far as it will be in compatibility with the interests of our Party.

ALFREDO ZAYAS

[Inclosure 4]

Minister Gonzales to Mr. Alfredo Zayas

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Habana, April 2, 1917.

MY DEAR SIR: While believing that I understand the points you wish me to present to the Washington Government, made in your letter dated March 31 and received yesterday afternoon, I prefer that you present those questions exactly as you desire them transmitted, writing them in Spanish.

You are mistaken, however, when you assume that my Government has considered the liberal party as in revolt. It has considered simply the fact of a revolt against the legal Government of Cuba. The fact that the legal party has up to the present taken no steps to terminate the revolution; that it has neither through the party organization nor through the mouth of any leader publicly condemned a revolt evidenced chiefly in the ruthless destruction of property of American citizens; that the party's candidate for Vice President together with the ex-President of the Republic and president of the directorio liberal which conducted your campaign took up arms against the Government; that every proposal to cease destruction of property and lay down arms has been based on conditions concerning the elections—these facts render it mentally impossible to segregate the interests of your party from the interests of the revolutionists.

Nevertheless, my Government has taken no position against the liberal party, nor refused to discuss questions with representatives of that party not involved in the revolution. That is not the difficulty in which you find yourself. Your situation, as I see it, is that your political interests and those of the active revolutionists are so inextricably interwoven that even should you demonstrate having had no participation in or lent no encouragement to the revolution, there appears to be no proposal for the consideration of my Government that you could make in favor of yourself as a candidate that would not also be in favor of the revolutionists.

Please bear in mind that the United States Government is in no way responsible for the position in which you are placed. If, as I said before, there are leaders in your party outside the revolutionists who are opposed to the revolution, they have kept silent and permitted those in active revolt against what you concede to be the legal Government of Cuba to appear as the party's spokesmen. The questions which should have been settled by the courts or by arbitration were not permitted by the revolutionists to reach the courts; and those who asked the United States to assume the rôle of arbitrator did so only after attempting to overthrow the legal Government, and then made their request with a rifle in one hand and a torch in the other. They have used the torch.

We both know that the revolution was long discussed. There was work done in the army against the loyalty of the troops for weeks or months before the revolution. Your information, as you told me more than two months ago, was that 75 per cent of the army would come to you in the event of revolution.

In view of these facts, your legal and logical mind will at once observe that the weakness of position occupied by those leaders of the liberal party not personally involved in the revolution, who would now have the United States interfere in their party's behalf, is due to no act of the United States Government. These leaders gave at least the consent of silence while the revolutionists acted as if in behalf of the party. They acquiesced at least to the extent of silence in those illegal acts of rebels condemned by the United States Government. They appeared, so far as the United States Government could observe, to stake their political success or defeat upon the success or failure of the revolution. And they did so with the knowledge of the deep opposition of the United States Government to such revolutions.

I sincerely trust that tranquillity will soon come to Cuba, but believe that if peace is to be hastened by the action of civilian counsellors, the problem will have to be approached from the patriotic rather than from the technical side.

AMERICAN LEGATION,

Report from Consul at Caimanera (in your April 25, 5 p. m.) as well as later report received from naval station. As to large well-armed body rebels threatening Guantanamo City in direct conflict with telegraphic reports from military commanders to Cuban Government. With every sugar mill grinding and railroad operating in Manzanillo district and perfect order in Santiago, Government is at a loss to understand designation of conditions as deplorable. Strength of Government forces in Oriente is not known at Caimanera. Naval officers report changed attitude of rebels toward Americans. This is true but to attribute this to German influence is in my opinion erroneous. My information, including statement from President of Cuban Railroad and letters to British Minister, is that rebels Oriente confident during first six or eight weeks revolution of friendly attitude American Navy. Latterly they alleged bad faith and word breaking. This logically accounts for change attitude toward Americans.

On statement to me by naval officer just from Santiago that only two mills in province grinding, I requested Government get detailed report by telegraph. They report by name 29 mills grinding, another to begin tomorrow. Three not grinding for lack of personnel; two not grinding account rain and bad roads; one all cane burned six weeks ago.

In the past week 800 reenforcements gone to Oriente. With improved conditions in Camaguey, four to eight hundred more will be sent from there this week but there are rumors of intention of rebels increase activity 20th May, Inauguration Day. Whether credence should be given this rumor is impossible to judge but if 1,000 marines can be spared from Haiti, as I am informed, it would be wise precaution to bring them to Guantanamo Naval Station where they would be quickly available for protection iron mines and railroads from mines to ports.

Cuban Congress met this afternoon, counted the electoral vote, and proclaimed Menocal and Nuñez President and Vice President elected. Two-thirds of both houses were necessary for quorum. Efforts to break quorum abortive, five-sixths of membership attending. A protest signed by Zayas and nine members of House against elections in Oriente and Santa Clara was offered as a matter of form, but House refused to receive it. All members then joined in standing vote declaring election. No speeches or semblance of bad feeling.

Habana and Camaguey votes cast for Zayas, other four provinces for Menocal.

It had been freely predicted Congress would refuse to declare Menocal elected.

Referring to my cable of April 29, midnight, last paragraph. Believe the prompt reenforcement Guantanamo naval station with from 500 to 1,000 marines very desirable. I do not anticipate increased activity of rebels but their activities concentrated in Guantanamo valley and with marines to guard railroad and properties between Guantanamo and Santiago federal forces can move quickly bring rebels and bandits to terms.

President Lewis of Guantanamo and Western Railroad extending from naval station to point near Santiago today asked for protection. It can be readily given if marines are at station. Property on the lines of road incidentally can be furnished increased protection.

Additional forces may be employed without publicity and in such a manner as to be perfectly acceptable to Cuban Government.

SIR: I have the honor to inform you that this Department has been advised, through the American Consuls at Guantanamo and Santiago de Cuba, through American residents in Oriente Province, and by persons who have returned from that province within the past two weeks, that conditions are very unsatisfactory and that American properties, including mines and large sugar estates, have been threatened by revolutionists or by groups of marauding bandits.

It is felt that a continuance of these conditions might prove a serious menace to the safety of this country, and that should more sugar cane be destroyed and the shipment of the product of the mines be interfered with, a serious economic situation might develop in this country.

The National Council of Defense has stated to this Department that it considers that the production of sugar in Cuba is of the utmost importance to the United States and to the Allied Powers. It is believed that every possible step should be taken to safeguard the production of this commodity.

I therefore have the honor to request that you will be so good as to inform me whether it will be possible to despatch to Cuba in the near future, an adequate force from the United States Army to aid the Government of Cuba in the protection of the sugar properties and in restoring the Province of Oriente to peaceful conditions.

From distance of 600 miles I am not warranted setting my judgment against these appeals. But President Menocal stated last night did not consider additional United States forces needed as precaution. In view increased Government forces and activity that section with important surrenders past few days I consider such precaution much less important than appeared ten days ago.

Regarding second paragraph the President would, nevertheless, have suggested statement made. DEPARTMENT OF STATE,

Your May 13, noon. War Department is prepared to send a military expedition to Cuba of a size adequate to take care of the situation. The Department regards the situation in connection with the production of sugar so necessary to the United States and the Allied Powers, as extremely serious. You are therefore instructed to present this matter again to General Menocal and to use your influence with him to induce him to agree to the sending to Guantanamo of a force of American troops in order to protect sugar production, which must not be interrupted.

These troops should be ostensibly sent to Guantanamo for purposes of training and could be in readiness to give protection to property and to enforce the proclamation of this Government.

In bringing this matter to President Menocal's attention you may say to him that this Government has every confidence in his ability to cope with the situation in Oriente Province, but that in view of the fact that so much depends upon a supply of sugar for the United States and for the Allies it desires to aid him in bringing peaceful conditions at the earliest moment to Cuba, and therefore it wants to cooperate with him.

You may also suggest to him that this action on the part of the United States would merely show the position which this Government has taken towards him and his Administration.

You are directed to hand the Cuban Government a copy of the following statement and say that you are authorized to make it public. A copy of this statement has been sent to the commanders of the American naval forces in Cuban waters, by navy radio, and you will communicate it to the American Consul at Santiago and to the other American Consuls and Consular Agents in Cuba and instruct them to make it public.

The declaration of war against the Imperial German Government, by the Government of Cuba, marking the entrance of Cuba, side by side with the United States of America into the conflict which is now being waged for the highest rights of humanity and in defense of principles of international law, has been received by the Government of the United States with feelings of deep appreciation and friendly pride.

Now that the Cuban and American peoples are even more closely bound together by lasting ties of common interest, the Government of the United States feels that it is incumbent upon it again to reiterate its many published statements concerning its attitude toward those Cubans who are under arms against the Constitutional Government and to add in emphatic terms that it considers that the time has now arrived when all internal political questions must be set aside in the face of the grave international danger.

In calling this to the attention of the people of Cuba, it is felt necessary to state that in the present war, in order to insure victory, Cuba, as well as the United States, has two great obligations, one military and the other economic. Therefore, as the Allied Powers and the United States must depend to a large extent upon the sugar production of Cuba, all disturbances which interfere with this production must be considered as hostile acts, and the United States Government is forced to issue this warning that unless all those under arms against the Government of Cuba return immediately to their allegiance it may become necessary for the United States to regard them as its enemies and to deal with them accordingly.

Minister Gonzales to the Secretary of State

[Telegram]

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Habana, May 16, 1917, 11 p. m.

Your May 15, 3 p. m. On presenting matter to the President he stated that he would like Department to understand situation as to sugar. Because of rains all mills, except Chaparra, cease grinding normally between middle and end of May.

To-day's telegraphic reports show twenty-one mills, having output 4,145,000 bags, grinding. Ten mills having an output 960,000 bags temporarily stopped account of rain. No report from four mills having capacity of 305,000 sacks. One mill stopped permanently due to destruction cane. Not one mill is prevented from grinding by revolutionists.

Cuba Railroad manager reports that with completion one bridge tomorrow communication be reestablished between Camaguey and Antilla via Alto Cedro. Bridge between Alto Cedro and San Luis will be completed in two weeks opening communication with Santiago via Alto Cedro. On Southern branch communication be reestablished with Santiago end first week of June.

Guantanamo and Western Railroad runs daily trains between Guantanamo, Boqueron and Guantanamo and Los Ramos. Communication latter point and San Luis will not be established for ninety days due to lack of appropriate repair material.

It is only within last two weeks President says that he has been able to get sufficient forces into this section. Now he could send 2,000 additional men there but does not need them. On account of pacification elsewhere is disbanding part of the militia. He has now approximately 6,000 men in Eastern Oriente district and the capture of leaders with daily surrenders make him absolutely confident of quick disappearance of rebellion.

He would like Department to know the situation today before further consideration sending troops. Understands and appreciates fully spirit of offer and would not hesitate accept if any industry now appeared in need of protection which he could not furnish.

All telegraphic communication throughout Oriente reported reestablished and the President asks that any foreigners considering themselves or property in danger telegraph directly to him or to me with assurance of getting prompt consideration.

As stated in my May 13, noon, conditions in Oriente had improved. They are better today.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, May 18, 1917, 4 p. m.

Your May 16, 11 p. m. In view of unsettled conditions in Haiti commanding officer of the American forces in occupation has requested Navy Department to despatch to Haiti a further force of marines to reinforce his command. Navy Department informs this Department that only marine forces now available are those on duty in Cuba. Therefore Navy Department will withdraw these marines from Cuba to send them to Haiti, and Secretary of War has been requested to send to Guantanamo sufficient force to replace these marines and to remain in Guantanamo as reserve force for use wherever necessary. You will so inform President Menocal, explaining the reason for this action.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: With reference to your letter of May 14, in which you state that the War Department is prepared to send a military expedition to the Island of Cuba, of adequate size to deal with the situation there, I have the honor to inform you that the Navy Department is in receipt of a telegram from General Cole, commanding the American forces of occupation in the Republic of Haiti, stating that in view of the unsettled conditions in that country, he is desirous of being reinforced, at the earliest possible moment, with a further body of marines.

The Navy Department has informed this Department that the only force of marines now available is that which is at the present time on duty in Cuba, guarding American property, and that it is desired to despatch this force of marines to Haiti at the earliest opportunity.

In view of the foregoing, and also of the necessity of replacing these marines with other American forces, it is requested that the War Department send immediately to the Island of Cuba a military expedition composed of two regiments, in order that the marine forces may be relieved; that adequate protection may be given to American and other foreign property, and that should the Cuban Government so desire cooperation by the American forces may be extended to the Cuban Government troops, in order to bring about at the earliest possible moment the complete restoration of order in the provinces of Cuba affected by the revolt against the Constitutional Government.

SIR: With reference to the Department's circular instruction of May 28, 1917,¹ I have the honor to report as follows upon general conditions in Cuba:

1. The Cuban revolution, which has for seven months occupied the efforts of the Government, can now be considered entirely suppressed. Dr. Alfredo Zayas, the liberal candidate for the presidency has resigned as leader of the party and announces that he will return to the practice of the law. José Miguel Gómez, the active leader of the revolt, is still in prison awaiting trial. General Ernesto Asbert, former governor of Habana Province, who had been in jail for some time charged with rebellion against the Government, is now out on bail. He informs me that he opposed the revolution, that he will support President Menocal and aid in restoring good feeling among the Cubans. The troops under Colonels Varona and Pujol which have been operating in the eastern end of the island are said to have been recalled and are returning to Habana. Railroad communication has been reestablished with the exception of a short distance on the line of the Guantanamo and Western R. You will immediately request an interview with President Menocal and say to him that inasmuch as certain of its marine forces have been withdrawn by the Government of the United States from the Island of Cuba, for service in other places, it now contemplates sending of forces of the United States Army to replace these marines, but in view of relations now existing between the two countries, on account of their cooperation in the war against the Imperial German Government, it desires to take this action with his full understanding.

You will add that it is also considered to be of great importance to have these troops in Cuba at this time in case the United States forces in Haiti or Santo Domingo, or in any of the Caribbean possessions of the United States might need reinforcement, as well as for the purpose, of taking over the guarding of interests important for the prosecution of the war, upon which duty the marine forces are now engaged.

SIR: We have received from The Cleveland Worsted Mills Company, Cleveland, Ohio, a letter stating that the company has at present outstanding accounts in Cuba amounting to many thousands of dollars and asking our advice as to the proper steps to take to protect its interests in the island. I understand that in an informal conference between officials of this Department and officials of the Department of State the point was made that an American firm whose property interests in Cuba were jeopardized by the disturbances there might appeal to the Cuban Government for protection of these interests, either through the American Minister or direct to the Government through its native agencies. It is also understood that while no one, of course, can predict the outcome of the present disturbances, it is believed that they have been localized and that the influence of the United States will probably operate to prevent their long continuance. We would be glad to have these points confirmed, or to be advised as to the information that may be given to the Cleveland concern to properly protect its interests in Cuba.

Your March 13, 6 p. m. The President answered that the Secretary of State and a delegation representing great investments in Cuba would this week furnish the Department with information and give it another view of the American investor. He declared that losses did not reach five per cent of cane and were greatly exaggerated. With over two hundred mills these had lost heavily: in Oriente—Palma and Union. In Camaguey—Senado, Francisco and Jobabo. In Santa Clara—Steward, Jatibonico and Narcisa. In Habana—Matanzas, Pinar del Rio—no loss. At most of these mills President said that cane belongs to Colonias, principally Cubans; there had been other fires in Colonias tributary to number of other mills; there were now no cane fires in five of the six provinces and the Cuban Government was just taking hold in Oriente. A hundred thousand men could not prevent cane burning, but he expected to end revolutions which would stop such burnings for all time.

The suggestion referred to in last paragraph of the Department's March 13, 6 p. m. came from me. No one in or out of Government circles has intimated to me that such action by the United States would tend to increase disorder. It is illogical to suppose that it would have such an effect. I understand that the Government would not object but wishes fair opportunity to show ability to accomplish task unaided. I regard the President as probably unduly optimistic. Whether he can succeed in Oriente as quickly as in other provinces is a question upon which there is yet no sound basis for judgment. Unquestionably strong expectations of compromise were raised by the conferences at Santiago. This may have important bearing on action by the rebels.

The Cuban Government forces are not giving protection to Nipe but appear to be guarding special interests. American marines are acting as town guard at Pre-ton. Everything else at mercy of rebels. We are saving cane by paying what rebels exact. If marines are withdrawn mill and everything will be destroyed. Rebels camping around Mayari are making exorbitant demands on the Nipe Bay Company with threats to burn if demands are not satisfied. Manager Harty of Banex wires same conditions continue and he is without proper protection.

The attorney for these companies has requested that you inform Cuban Government of the situation and require of it adequate protection for these properties. You will bring this immediately to attention of the Cuban Government.

Personal representations and urgings for protection were made immediately in compliance with Department's April 17, 5 p. m., April 18, 4 p. m., April 19, 1 p. m. today. In view of the report to Department from Consul at Santiago and report to Department by United Fruit Company forwarded to me 20th, I presented memorandum to the President recapitulating allegations of danger and destruction expressing concern of the Department in reported inability of Government to control situation.

The President expressed belief in purpose of interests in Oriente Province to embarrass unwarrantably this Government by gross misrepresentations. All that any government could do was being done. Revolutionists in Oriente had become bandits and were being pursued and punished. In fleeing from one place to another they looted. This was an unavoidable state that no force could prevent during the process of hunting down the bands. Meantime he said that protection was being given to interests.

The Holguin Exploration was protected. Bridge at Bayate not destroyed, only a wooden approach burned. Baso Estancia, a place of three houses, had suffered from robbers. Some of Bethlehem Steel Company's mines guarded by marines, one by Cuban troops. He had given orders for their full protection and considered safe.

Report by Consul at Santiago that everything on plantations Cuba Company destroyed most misleading to the Department. Jobabo only plantation of company in province. No damage since March 18 and strong Government force now there. Palmarito is guarded and military authorities consider protection sufficient. Same as to Miranda. The President said his personal properties in this immediate neighborhood and he is not alarmed.

He could give reasonable protection but could calm apprehension only by running down the bandits and this he was doing with energy and according to his best military judgment.

The President denied that either 2,000 or 200 rebels were camped about the United Fruit Company's places and showed reports from Colonel Loris in charge there to sustain denial.

Reenforcements are going to Oriente Monday. Within a week 1,000 troops from Camaguey will probably be sent there. Meantime the army is making progress in a most difficult character of campaign.

CONTROVERSY BETWEEN THE COMPAÑIA DE LOS PUERTOS DE CUBA (CUBAN PORTS COMPANY) AND THE GOVERNMENT OF CUBA, GROWING OUT OF THE CANCELLATION OF THE COMPANY'S CONCESSION WITH THE CUBAN GOVERNMENT BY THE PRESIDENT OF CUBA. GOOD OFFICES OF THE UNITED STATES

EDITORIAL NOTE.—A Concession was granted to the Compañia de los Puertos de Cuba (Cuban Ports Company) by the law of February 20, 1911, to perform dredging work and carry out improvements in the ports of the Republic. Under this law the existing tonnage and port dues were greatly increased, and the amounts so collected were to be paid over to the company for a period of 30 years.

The Government of the United States, under provisions of Article II of Appendix to the Constitution of Cuba, which article also constitutes Article II of the Treaty of May 22, 1903, between the United States and Cuba,⁸ objected to the requirement of the concession that a specified portion of the ordinary revenues, derived from the import tonnage tax, be paid over to the Cuban Ports Company regardless of whether or not such revenues were necessary to defray the current expenses of the Government, and suggested that the concession be amended.

The concession was amended by a new contract made between President Gomez of Cuba and the Cuban Ports Company on May 13, 1913 in pursuance of Executive decree No. 510, dated May 12, 1913. This decree being considered illegal by President Menocal, was annulled by Executive decree No. 246, of June 18, 1913, and the matter reverted to its original status.

On August 4, 1913, President Menocal signed Executive decree No. 522 stating that the law of February 20, 1911, required the Cuban Ports Company to organize in accordance with Cuban law, that the company had failed to so organize and that it could no longer be regarded as a concessionaire, and directing the Secretary of the Treasury to withhold from the company the port dues thereafter collected, directing the Secretary of Public Works to take charge of all the works performed by the company and directing the Secretary of Justice to take steps to have the charter of the company by judicial procedure declared null and void.

The Cuban Ports Company appealed to the courts against the constitutionality of Executive decree No. 522 and on October 6, 1913, the Supreme Court of Cuba denied the appeal.

The case was before the Courts of Cuba until near the close of the year 1915, when the following correspondence ensued.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,

Department is informed that suit of the Cuban Ports Company is scheduled for twenty-first instant.

Apparent desire of President Menocal to reach a settlement along lines of reason and equity, while safeguarding the financial and moral reputation of Cuba, prompts Department to render him all proper assistance in his worthy effort. If a decision against the company should be reached the present Administration could not appear to make concessions to the company, whereas if the decision reversed the Government's former attitude, the Administration would suffer loss of prestige. It does not therefore appear that pressure of pending suit would aid that settlement in the spirit in which the President is understood to desire it, but might easily occasion embarrassment. While the Department has no intention or desire to intervene in Cuban court proceedings, it would be gratified if it might see the present legal status maintained, at least until the President's efforts for amicable settlement on behalf of Cuban interests and of the investors involved, have proved futile.

You will, therefore, informally advise the Foreign Office in this sense, with a view to obtaining, if possible, an adjournment of the case and, at the same time, discreetly according the President the support of this Government, which he is understood to consider essential to the accomplishment of his plan of settlement. Minister Gonzales suggests that, in addition, a copy of your memorandum be sent to the President in a personal communication.

For your confidential information, the potential attitude of the British bondholders, as expressed through the British Embassy, might prove embarrassing to Cuba and onerous to this Government, in the event of decision being rendered in the pending suit.

To these considerations may be added the belief and hope of the Minister himself, as stated to the Department, that some such solution can thus be attained, as well as the Department's consistent desire to assist the Government of Cuba, if not incompatible with its wishes, in reaching such solution and thus avoiding the complications and embarrassments of litigation and inevitable diplomatic pressure by Governments whose subjects are affected.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: In a memorandum dated October 14¹ you were so good as to inform me that telegraphic instructions had been sent to the American Chargé d'Affaires at Habana asking him to inform the Cuban Government that while entertaining no intention or desire to intervene in the proceedings of the Cuban courts the Department of State would be gratified if the trial of the pending suit of the Cuban Ports Company might be postponed and the present legal status maintained, at least until the efforts of the President of Cuba to effect a settlement mutually satisfactory to Cuban interests and to the investors, had proved futile.

On October 20 the President of Cuba received His Majesty's Minister and assured him, as he had done on previous occasions, of his determination to come to an equitable settlement with the investors in the company whatever the decision of the Supreme Court might be, but stated that he felt he could not interfere with the action of the Court. Señor Menocal explained to Mr. Leech that his position would be much stronger after the case had been heard by the Supreme Court and that he could then obtain the support of certain elements whose present opposition was due to self-interest.

Whilst the reiterated assurances of President Menocal to come to an amicable understanding show his good intention; His Majesty's Government would be grateful if, in the probable event of the decision of the Supreme Court being adverse to the company, the United States Government would see fit to continue to use their good offices in bringing about a settlement of this question favourable to the bondholders and stockholders.

You will understand that it is naturally the sincere desire of my Government as evidenced by the attitude of Mr. Leech, who has consistently cooperated with his American colleague in affording the President of Cuba every opportunity of arriving at an amicable settlement, to avoid being placed in the position of having to address to the Cuban Government any formal protest or demand which might cause embarrassment in the premises both to the Cuban Government and to the United States Government.

The Department is unofficially advised that a continuation of the present status of Cuban Ports matter has unfortunately proven so detrimental to Cuban credit that the bankers are disinclined, until an equitable settlement of this case is reached, to consider a further loan, which it is understood that Cuba may now desire to obtain, even though considered as part of that approved by the Department on September 5, 1913.

While the Department has every confidence in the sincerity of the President of Cuba in his desire to reach an equitable settlement of this matter as particularly stated by him in your telegrams of October 19, 11 p. m., it is of the opinion that an intimation by you to the effect that this Government shares this apprehension as regards the credit of Cuba, may expedite the proposed settlement. You may, therefore, in your discretion, communicate the substance of the above to President Menocal, leaving with him, if deemed desirable, a memorandum thereof.

If he fails he wishes, as final lever to use on congress, a formal advisory note to this Government. As time presses I advise that Department immediately send note strongly urging action in support of the President's program, emphasizing the large British interests and British pressure upon the Department, also referring to Department's information that number of congressmen are refusing action in expectation of private gain and giving Department's opinion of disaster to Cuban credit and reputation abroad should such attitude of congressmen be made public. Your March 9, 2 p. m. and previous correspondence. You will address to the Minister for Foreign Affairs a note the body of which should be textually as follows:

The effect that a continuation of the present status of the Cuban Ports Company matter may have upon the international credit and reputation of Cuba, for which this Government feels a peculiar solicitude, has, for some time afforded this Government grave concern. The manifest desire of the President of Cuba, as repeatedly indicated to this Legation, that an equitable settlement of this matter be reached has until now encouraged the belief in the possibility of such solution. As I had occasion to indicate, however, to His Excellency the President on the 8th instant, the preponderating British interest in the securities of the company and the reiterated expression to my Government through official channels of the desire of the British Government that a settlement be reached, tends to increase the apprehension that unless some such solution be soon found, diplomatic pressure which my Government may find itself unable further to prevent, may be exerted upon your excellency's Government.

In addition the information communicated by the company's representative, and which, should the good offices of this Government prove futile, the company states that it intends to make public, to the effect that certain members of the Cuban Legislature are reported to have refused action in expectation of private gain, renders the present situation fraught with menace.

In view of these considerations, I am directed by my Government, which is actuated solely by a desire to continue to extend your excellency's Government all assistance, advice and encouragement as may properly lie within its power now to reiterate its earnest hope that His Excellency the President may immediately obtain the Congressional support necessary to the fulfillment of his plan of settlement.

Department's March 15, 2 p. m. Secretary of State replies that he informed the President in person of importance of note and that for the purpose of terminating matter the President proposes to appoint immediately a commission of three lawyers to make fresh study of the subject and determine what the Executive may do within his powers.

This Government appreciates at its true high value the offer of assistance and the friendly cooperation of the United States and regrets that it has not been able to proceed with celerity. Parliaments however are dilatory everywhere. The convincing purpose of the Government to secure settlement is shown by the President's message to Congress and the passage of the bill by the Senate. It is incomprehensible what grounds there can be for diplomatic pressure by the British Government in a matter where the action of this Government has been confirmed by the highest court of the country and in respect to a company that court has decided did not conform to the laws.

Respecting what is said of certain members of Congress the Government can only proceed in so important and serious a matter with proof in its possession. These should be given by the company.

The President continues to occupy himself hoping that sooner or later he can reach a solution in compliance with law, justice and equity.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Habana, May 27, 1916, noon.

In the matter of Ports Company. Last Wednesday I called upon President with British Minister regarding Ports Company matter. He said that committee would report findings that afternoon. Saw him again yesterday; he said that committee had not yet reported but would do so in a day or two; that two members were in accord and that Ferrara's report would be incorporated as minority report and that both would be published in Official Gazette. He said that he had not seen majority report but understood it held action of Congress necessary to settlement. I am convinced President has no intention of accepting responsibility in the matter before November elections and is evading the issue. I feel also that publication of Committee report would make it more difficult to come to a settlement and might precipitate publication of Ports Company's charge of venality of Congress.

Have come to believe that Congress has been kept in ignorance of Department's active desire for settlement and that if the President summoned the members of the lower House before him and told them if they did not open the way for settlement as did the Senate the United States would indorse or validate a plan for settlement over their heads, they would cease to demand money for votes.

If the Department cares for my presence at Washington I shall be in Columbia, South Carolina, on Tuesday and Wednesday.

The Attorney for the Cuban Ports Company to the Secretary of State

NEW YORK, June 7, 1916.

SIR: I have the honor to confirm, as briefly as possible, my conversation of yesterday with Mr. J. Butler Wright, [Chief of the Division of Latin American Affairs] relating to the existing relations between the Government of Cuba and the Cuban Ports Company.

It now appears from the majority report of the commission appointed by Presidential Decree No. 369 of March 1916, and from the reports of our clients in Cuba, which have been confirmed by the American Minister at Havana, that the President of Cuba no longer intends to carry out his promises for an equitable settlement of the claims of the stockholders and bondholders of the Cuban Ports Co. and that there is no possibility of securing any settlement through the Cuban Congress, and we beg to respectfully request the good offices of the State Department as hereinbelow outlined. In order that our specific requests, and the grounds upon which they are made, may be better understood, we will briefly rehearse some of the facts leading up to the present situation:

Subsequent to the organization of the Cuban Ports Co., and the passage of the Law of February 20, 1911, imposing a ports tax, the proceeds of which were to be devoted to certain ports improvements to be carried on by the Cuban Ports Co., the company applied to a group of London bankers for a loan of six million dollars. Under date of May 12, 1911, Messrs. Kleinwort Sons & Co. of London in a letter addressed to the Department of State of the United States inquired as to the validity of the contract made between the Government of Cuba and the Cuban Ports Co. The Department answered under date of June 9, 1911, criticizing the terms of the agreement, which were characterized in that communication as: "wasteful and against the best interests of Cuba." The operation of the contract between the London bankers and the Cuban Ports Co. was thereupon suspended, and representatives of the company called upon the then Secretary of State with a view to eliminating, if possible, the objectionable features in the existing contract. As a result of many conferences, and special investigations conducted by the State Department, the Secretary of State addressed a letter to the Cuban Ports Co. under date of June 11, 1912, which read in part as follows:

With reference to the question of the validity of the contract under the Platt Amendment, however, you are informed that this Government has called to the attention of the Government of Cuba, the fact, which is apparent from the nature of the concession itself, that as it seriously affects the ability of the Cuban Government to defray the expenses of administration if deprived of these revenues, which are given over under the concession for a period of thirty years to your company, it is necessary, in order to remove this objection, that the concession should be modified so that if such revenues are needed at any time during the period of the concession, the Government of Cuba should have the right to terminate it upon terms which are just and fair, and again be placed in a position to avail itself of the revenues to be derived from the port duties.

This Government, in view of your fair attitude and expressed willingness to have your bondholders and stockholders agree to the modifications suggested, has reason to feel that the objectionable features of the concession can be eliminated by the agreement between your company and the Government of Cuba.

Negotiations then followed between officers of the Cuban Ports Co. and officials of the Government of Cuba with a view to agreeing upon the language of an amendment as suggested in the letter of the Secretary of State above quoted from.

Under date of March 1, 1913, the Secretary of State wrote to the Cuban Ports Co. enclosing a copy of a letter of instructions forwarded to the American Minister at Havana on the subject of the modifications in the terms of the Cuban Ports Co. agreement.

We quote from this letter of instructions as follows.

The Ports Improvement Company having been informed of the views of the Government of the United States * * * has indicated its willingness to adopt as a substitute for its former proposal an amendment to the concession in the following terms:

The Government of Cuba shall have the right at any time to take over the operation of the Cuban Ports Company by purchasing all the outstanding stock of the Cuban Ports Company at a just and equitable valuation to be fixed by three appraisers and approved by the Government of the United States, such appraisers to be appointed by the Government of the United States upon the request of the Government of Cuba, one being nominated by the Government of Cuba and one being nominated by the Cuban Ports Company, such valuation to be fixed by a majority of the appraisers in case of disagreement among them.

A new contract was immediately entered into between the Government of Cuba and the Ports Company confirmed by Presidential Decree 510 of May 12, 1913, from which we quote as follows:

Whereas: The Cuban Ports Company has also agreed with the Government of Cuba that: The Government of Cuba shall have the right at any time to take over the operation of the Cuban Ports Company by purchasing all the outstanding stock of the Cuban Ports Company at a just and equitable valuation to be fixed by three appraisers and approved by the Government of the United States, such appraisers to be appointed by the Government of the United States upon the request of the Government of Cuba, one being nominated by the Government of Cuba and one being nominated by the Cuban Ports Company, such valuation to be fixed by a majority of the appraisers in case of disagreement among them.

It should be noted that the language quoted is practically identical with that suggested by the Secretary of State of the United States.

By a letter from the Cuban Ports Co. addressed to the American Minister at Havana, dated May 15, 1913, the Department of State was informed of the compliance of the Cuban Government and the Ports Company with the Secretary of State's instructions above quoted from. Receipt of this letter was acknowledged by the American Minister under date of May 26, 1913, and the request was made at the same time for a copy of the original Spanish text in order that it and the translation might be forwarded to the Department of State for its information.

It clearly appears from the foregoing that the Government of the United States intervened in the matter of a contract between the Cuban Government and the Ports Company; that this intervention was specifically based upon the terms of the permanent treaty between the United States and the Republic of Cuba—usually referred to as the Platt Amendment; that, as a result of such intervention, the original contract, or concession, was modified to comply to the letter with the demands of the American Government.

Shortly after the facts above related, it transpired that President Menocal (the present incumbent) was elected as President of Cuba. By Decree 246 under date of June 8, 1913, he purported to cancel and annul the terms of the amendment to the contract between the Cuban Government and the Ports Company; which amendment had been adopted (as above stated) at the special instance and request of the United States Government.

Subsequently, and on August 4, 1913, the President issued his Decree 522 declaring that the Cuban Ports Co. was never legally organized, and purporting to cancel and annul the agreement then existing between the Cuban Government and the Ports Company. The terms of this latter decree have been the subject of much correspondence between ourselves and the State Department, and its terms are so familiar that it is unnecessary here to specifically refer to them.

Since that time, the Government of Cuba has continued to collect a port tax as provided by the law of February 20, 1911; but the proceeds of the tax have not been applied for the purposes provided in that act. It is the contention of the stockholders and bondholders of the Ports Company that this action on the part of the Government of Cuba, as represented by its President, amounted to a "taking over of the operations of the Cuban Ports Company" by the Government of Cuba, and that this was done in total disregard of the terms of the contract of May 1913 and the decree of May 12, 1913.

On behalf of our clients (the bondholders and stockholders of the Cuban Ports Co.), we respectfully request the Secretary of State to inform the Government of Cuba as follows:

That the terms of the amendment to the original contract with the Cuban Ports Co., as set forth in Presidential Decree of May 12, 1913, were adopted at the special request of the United States, based upon the language of the permanent treaty known as the Platt Amendment.

That it is the right and duty of the Government of the United States to insist, upon the same grounds, that the terms of that amendment be complied with.

Accordingly the Government of the United States must insist on the carrying out of the said agreement. In order to do this, and that the Government of Cuba may legally complete the taking over of the assets and operations, including the concession granted to the Ports Company, which is evidently the purpose of the Cuban Government, the Government of Cuba will, within thirty (30) days from the receipt of this notice, nominate one of the three appraisers, as provided for in the said agreement, who shall fix a just and equitable valuation of the outstanding stock of the Ports Company to be purchased and paid for by the Government of Cuba. The bonds and other obligations of the company to be assumed by the Cuban Government as in said agreement provided.

We believe that the above correctly confirms the conversation of yesterday between Mr. Paul Fuller, Jr. and Mr. J. Butler Wright, and beg [etc.]

The Cuban Minister to the Secretary of State

The law of February 20 [1911], known as the Port's Improvement Law, having granted a concession to a corporation supposed to be organized according to the precepts of the laws of Cuba and known as the Cuban Ports Company for dredging and improving certain ports of Cuba establishing that the company should conform to specifications of said law regarding its organization, and other conditions which, after certain modifications met with the approval of the State Department then concerned in the sense that said concessions should not affect Article II of the Treaty of May 22, 1903, between Cuba and the United States, apart from any question as to the validity of the concession to be conclusively determined by the Cuban courts;

The Cuban Government having found later that it had contracted with a corporation which had not conformed to the laws of Cuba for its organization as demanded by the Law of the Concession, and, therefore, that said company could not be considered as legally entitled to the concession as embodied in the act passed by the Cuban Congress on February 20, 1911;

The Cuban Government revoked Decree No. 510 of President Gomez by Decree No. 246 of President Menocal which revokes the concession to the so-called Cuban Ports Company, the position of the Government of the United States being, in this case, that the question of the legality of President Menocal's decree was one to be decided solely by the appropriate Cuban authorities.

The Cuban courts acting in this matter of their lawful jurisdiction, in a suit brought by the so-called Cuban Ports Company against the administration, declared said company to be an illegally organized corporation and sustained Decree No. 246 of President Menocal.

It is, therefore, very fundamental to establish whether or not an illegally organized corporation can create obligations and responsibilities to the Cuban Government through its contracts and negotiations with third parties, as it appears equally fundamental to know how far and to what extent any diplomatic action arising as a consequence of claims against the so-called Cuban Ports Company can be justly pressed by any power against the Cuban Government, and endorsed by the Government of the United States, after the taking of a sentence by the Supreme Tribunal of Cuba, by which all the reasons of Decree No. 246 of President Menocal to revoke the concession and to cease payments to the so-called company were amply confirmed, said company having been found to be not a corporation organized to conform with the laws of Cuba.

It is assumed from the urgent recommendations of the United States Minister in Habana, that if the United States Government endorses the pretensions of Great Britain in the emphatic manner in which they have been recommended by the American Legation, it is because this Government is possessed of special knowledge of the question, and, in this case, it would be useful to know the opinion of this Government in face of the sentence of the Supreme Tribunal of Cuba.

In the meantime, no arguments on the merits of the question having been adduced either by the American Government or by the Government of Great Britain, to justify the responsibility of the Cuban Government, and the jurisdiction of the Cuban courts having been reiteratedly recognized as the competent one to decide on the propriety of the contracts and the legality of the concession no reason appears to contradict why it should not be considered that the legal status of the corporation also is a question submitted exclusively to the courts of Cuba that have already passed upon the matter, even to and by a sentence of the highest court which is the Supreme Tribunal, instituted by the United States in Cuba during the first intervention and subsequently sitting under the provisions of the Cuban Constitution.

No. 235

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, July 31, 1916.

SIR: The Department has received your despatch No. 348 of June 19, 1916,¹ in which you review developments in connection with the existing difficulties between the so-called Cuban Ports Company and the Government of Cuba growing out of the cancellation of the Company's contract with the Cuban Government by the President of Cuba.

Since the issuance by the President of Cuba of his decree of August 4, 1913, cancelling the company's contract, the Department has, as you are aware, viewed with increasing concern the failure of President Menocal and of other competent Cuban authorities to take any satisfactory steps looking to a final satisfactory settlement of these difficulties. In view of this Government's friendly interest in the welfare of Cuba and in view particularly of this Government's apprehension that the attitude of the Cuban Government in this matter would seriously impair the credit of Cuba, the Department instructed you to use your good offices with a view to bringing about a satisfactory and amicable adjustment of the case. The efforts made by you in accordance with these instructions have apparently proved unavailing.

The Department regrets that the friendly advice of this Government, the representations which the Department understands have been made to the Government of Cuba by the British Government in behalf of the owners of the beneficial interest in the Cuban Ports Company, and the fact that the cancellation of the company's concession has apparently created a situation fraught with possibly serious consequences to Cuba have all failed to prompt the Cuban Government to abandon its attitude of inaction respecting the matter of effecting a settlement of the case, and earnestly to take suitable steps looking to such a settlement, and the Department desires that you address a communication, to which you will request an early reply, to the Cuban Foreign Office in the sense of the following:

Under instructions from my Government I have the honor to present to you certain considerations respecting the difficulties that have arisen between the Government of Cuba and the so-called Cuban Ports Company, growing out of the cancellation of the company's contract with the Cuban Government by the President of Cuba.

Following the issuance of President Menocal's decree of August 4, 1913, representations were made to this Government by owners of the beneficial interest in the company who being aware of the interest which this Government had taken in the contract just mentioned sought its assistance in protecting their interests. My Government's good offices were also solicited by the Government of Great Britain with a view to the protection of British investors in the company. And requests for assistance were also received from American citizens whose interests were incidentally affected by the cancellation of the contract.

To these requests and representations this Government replied in effect that they would receive due consideration if a situation should arise in the future in which the case should become the subject of diplomatic discussion between this Government and the Government of Cuba, and that it was understood that the latter had in contemplation the matter of effecting through judicial proceedings or otherwise an adjustment of the questions which arose out of the cancellation of the company's concession. When it appeared that no satisfactory steps were being taken to bring about such an adjustment, my Government, in view of its friendly interest in the welfare of Cuba and in view particularly of its apprehension that the attitude of the Cuban Government in this matter would seriously impair the credit of Cuba, instructed me to tender its good offices to the Cuban Government looking to an amicable arrangement satisfactory to all parties whose interests were affected by the cancellation of the concession.

You are doubtless aware that on more than one occasion the President of Cuba has assured me of his earnest desire that the rights of all the parties affected by his decree of August 4, 1913, should be protected, and that proper steps should be taken looking to that end. These assurances having been brought to the attention of my Government and of the holders of the securities of the Cuban Ports Company were relied upon by them in good faith. From time to time measures have been initiated in the Cuban Congress for the declared purpose of vesting in the President of Cuba power to effect a settlement of the case. Nevertheless, after the lapse of approximately three years no effective steps have been taken to bring about an arrangement to deal in a suitable manner with the situation created by the President's decree cancelling the company's concession. And my Governments is now in possession of an aide mémoire, recently delivered to it by the Minister of Cuba at Washington during the course of an interview which he had with the Department with reference to the Cuban Ports Company, in which it is pointed out that the Cuban courts have declared, in a suit instituted by the Cuban Ports Company, that the company is an illegally organized corporation and in which it is stated that it "is, therefore, very fundamental to establish whether or not an illegally organized corporation can create obligations and responsibilities to the Cuban Government through its contracts and negotiations with third parties, as it appears equally fundamental to know how far and to what extent any diplomatic action arising as a consequence of claims against the so-called Cuban Ports Company can be justly pressed by any Power against the Cuban Government, and endorsed by the Government of the United States," and, further, that it

"is assumed from the urgent recommendations of the United States Minister in Habana, that if the United States Government endorses the pretensions of Great Britain in the emphatic manner in which they have been recommended by the American Legation, it is because this Government is possessed of special knowledge of the question, and, in this case, it would be useful to know the opinion of this Government in the face of the sentence of the Supreme Tribunal of Cuba."

My Government directs me to inform you that it cannot undertake at this time to discuss the matters referred to in the Minister's aide mémoire, but that it feels warranted, in view of all the facts and circumstances of the case under consideration, to request that it be furnished with a definite statement on the part of the Cuban Government as to its present attitude with reference to the controversy existing between it and Cuban Ports Company.

However, my Government desires me to point out at this time that, following the enactment by the Cuban Congress of the act known as the Ports Improvement Law, which authorized the creation of the Cuban Ports Company, this Legation was directed to inform the Cuban Government that the Government of the United States regarded as objectionable, under the provisions of the treaty concluded between the two Governments on May 2, 1903, the stipulations of the company's concession providing for the payment to the company of a specific portion of Cuban revenues derived from the import tax provided for by the Cuban law just mentioned, whether or not such revenues might be necessary to defray the expenses of the Cuban Government; that it appeared possible to obviate this objection by amending the terms of the company's concession so as to permit the use of this import tax for current expenses if at any time it should be needed for that purpose; and that the desired result might perhaps be accomplished by an amendment to the concession giving the Cuban Government the right to take over the operation of the Cuban Ports Company by purchasing all the outstanding stock of the company at a just and equitable valuation to be fixed by three appraisers. It appears that this Government's suggestion was adopted by the Cuban Government and by the company, the company's contract being amended in accordance therewith.

The holders of the securities of the company have represented to my Government that the act of the President of Cuba in cancelling the company's concession is a taking over of the operation of the Cuban Ports Company by the Government of Cuba within the meaning of the amendment of the company's concession just mentioned, and that, therefore, it is incumbent on the Cuban Government, under existing circumstances, to take steps to have appraisers appointed in order that the company's outstanding securities may be purchased at a just and equitable valuation to be determined by appraisers named in accordance with the terms of the contract.

My Government, without desiring at this time to enter into any discussion as to the legal rights of the parties to the contract in question under the terms thereof just mentioned, desires me to point out that the Cuban Government, inasmuch as it has, acting through its President, terminated the company's concession, would appear to be in a position at once to take steps to effect a satisfactory solution of the existing regrettable difficulties between itself and the company by promptly instituting the proceedings suggested by the holders of the company's securities.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, July 31, 1916.

SIR: The Department is in receipt of your letter of June 7, 1916, in which you review the situation respecting the difficulties that have arisen between the Cuban Government and the so-called Cuban Ports Company growing out of the cancellation of the company's concession by the President of Cuba, and in which you request that this Government further employ its good offices with a view to bringing about an adjustment of these difficulties.

You call attention to an amendment to the company's contract, the substance of which was suggested by this Government, which provided that the Cuban Government should have the right at any time to take over the operation of the company by purchasing all its outstanding stock at a just and equitable valuation to be fixed by three appraisers and you state that it is the right and the duty of the Government of the United States to insist that the terms of that amendment be now complied with by the Cuban Government.

While observing that the Department cannot admit your expressed views to the effect that any such rights and duties devolve upon it because it suggested the incorporation into the contract of the amendment just referred to, which as you are aware was proposed by this Government with a view to obviating an objection that certain stipulations in the company's contract might conflict with the treaty concluded between this Government and Cuba, May 22, 1903, the Department may inform you that it has recently sent to the American Minister at Habana a comprehensive instruction looking to a satisfactory settlement of the case along the line indicated in your letter. In this instruction the Minister was directed to say, among other things, that this Government, without desiring at this time to enter into any discussion as to the legal rights of the parties to the contract under the terms of the amendment in question, desires to point out to the Cuban Government that inasmuch as it has, acting through its President, terminated the contract, it would appear to be in a position at once to take steps to effect a satisfactory solution of the regrettable difficulties existing between it and the company, by promptly instituting the proceedings suggested by you in behalf of the holders of the company's securities.

No. 124

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Habana, August 22, 1916.

MR. MINISTER: On the 7th instant this Department received your excellency's note^a relative to the matter of the so-called Cuban Ports Company, transmitting the instructions which in regard thereto were sent you by the Government of the United States.

Due to the absence from Habana of the President of the Republic when that note was received, reply thereto has been retarded, since, naturally, this Department did not care to undertake to answer it without first submitting the matter to the consideration of the President, not only because he is the head of the Executive Power and the First Magistrate of the nation, in whom the Constitution vests the direction of diplomatic negotiations, but because of the references to the President which are made in your excellency's note. Accordingly, not until Monday, the 14th instant was the matter submitted to the President at a meeting of the Cabinet, and after a study of the note and examination of all the facts relating to the matter of the Cuban Ports Company, it was decided to draft a reply in the terms in which I now have the honor to do.

In the first place I must express to the Government of the United States the pleasure with which the Government of Cuba views its zealous interest not only in the credit of the Republic but to avoid diplomatic controversies with another nation which might, as stated in your excellency's note, be fraught with serious consequences for Cuba; but, as a matter of fact, if the antecedents and facts which enter into this matter of the Ports Company are closely studied, it will be observed that the acts of the Government of Cuba in this matter have in no wise affected the credit of the Republic, which is as flourishing or more so than in the best of times, nor can any diplomatic complications be feared in the confident assurance that calm discussion of this matter will certainly result in convincing all that the acts of the Government of Cuba with reference to the aforesaid company are firmly grounded not only in the law of Cuba but in the laws of all countries, and therefore the Government of Cuba sees no reason why it should be subjected to censures which it certainly has not deserved.

It is true that the President of the Republic has on more than one occasion expressed his keen desire for finding a basis of amicable arrangement with those who lent their money for the work performed by the Cuban Ports Company, and I can assure you, and prove to you, that the President has not procrastinated in this matter.

Decree No. 522, in which the President ordered suspension of payments which were being made to the aforesaid company, and reference to the courts for ventilation of all questions relating to the validity of a corporation which, contrary to the laws of the land and more especially to the provisions of the very act of February 20, 1911, was not organized in accordance with the laws in force in Cuba, was issued on the 4th of August 1913, and from that moment began the activities of the company against that decree, entering first a suit in which the constitutionality of the decree was attacked and which was lost in the Supreme Court, and subsequently a contentious-administrative suit and another suit in the courts of ordinary jurisdiction brought by the bondholders.

Of these suits there is still pending decision of that brought by the bondholders; the suit brought by the company in the contentious-administrative court having been decided against the company and in full confirmation of the aforesaid decree of August 4, 1913; and it can be assured that in these suits it has been the company principally which has retarded their course, doubtless because the company deem d it advantageous to its interest to do so. Indeed in this Department a memorandum was received from your Legation, dated October 13, 1915, conveying the suggestion that the question be allowed to remain in status quo, that is to say, without decision by the courts, while the matter of a friendly arrangement between the interested parties was considered; and the company itself not only requested the suspension of trial in the courts, but on some occasion preferred a similar request to the President himself.

Notwithstanding that the various suits brought in this matter were pending determination by the courts, the President of the Republic viewed with pleasure and encouraged as far as possible the presentation in one of the Houses of Congress of bills purporting to authorize him to settle definitely all questions relating to the Ports Company, and to provide even for the indemnity in proper measure, on grounds of grace and equity, those who had in good faith lent their money to the company for its work.

After the Supreme Court had rendered its decision of November 8 last, confirming in all its parts the decree of August 4, 1913, issued by the President of the Republic, the President assumed the initiative in this matter, addressing, only two months after the date of the decision of the Supreme Court, a message to Congress recommending, among other things relating to the Ports Company, a determination whether, for reasons of grace and equity, Congress deemed it proper to compensate in some measure those who had lent their money to the company. The pertinent part of that message reads as follows:

"The need for making some provision for the circumstances arising from the aforesaid decree and from the Supreme Court decision to which I have referred, has not escaped the recognized wisdom of the legislative power; and consequently a bill in this connection was introduced in and passed by the Senate and is now pending action by the House of Representatives.

"It is not my purpose now to discuss and advance an opinion upon this bill, which, doubtless, is predicated upon motives and reasons of justice on one hand, and on the other hand of grace and equity, which are fundamental and should not be lost sight of; my view being that, in this sense, that is to say, upon the broad basis of its most general lines, legislation may be enacted which, in the judgment of the honorable Congress, should conduce to accomplish the object which, as concerns the dredging and improvement of harbors, was sought in the act of February 20, 1911, and moreover, if indemnity, on grounds of grace and equity, of those who in good faith lent their money for the performance of the aforesaid works of dredging and harbor improvements, provision may be made for the adoption of proper measures for such compensation in the manner and to the extent which may be deemed just and reasonable.

Presidential Palace, Habana, 21 January 1916."

The interviews and conferences which, after sending this message, the President had, at his own instance, with Representatives and Senators for the purpose of reaching some agreement in regard to the indemnities which, if proper, might be granted on grounds of grace and equity to those who lent their money for the company's work, are of public knowledge. And, latterly, in view of the fact that at such conferences no definite arrangement was reached, the President appointed a commission to determine what the Executive could himself do in this matter, the majority of the commission holding, in their opinion dated May 30 this year, that only with the cooperation of Congress could anything substantial be accomplished in this matter, for on his own accord or on his own authority the President could do nothing by way of settlement.

From the foregoing it will be seen that the President has been active in his efforts to accomplish some result, even before the decision of the Supreme Court was rendered, but much more so after that decision was rendered, and I have to say, with the President's authority, that he is still dealing with the matter, though the summer season and the proximity of the general elections make it difficult for Congress to meet in order to consider and take action upon the matter.

I cannot but cite a fact which is of decisive importance in this matter, namely, that only the suit on constitutionality brought in the Supreme Court and the contentious-administrative suit brought by the company have been definitely decided, both of course against the company, and that there is pending decision not only the suit brought by the bondholders, now in the Supreme Court, but also the suit to determine the nullity or forfeiture of the charter or instrument of organization of the Cuban Ports Company brought by the public prosecutor, which, as previously stated, has not yet been determined.

These two suits are of capital importance in this matter, but of much greater importance is that brought by the public prosecutor, in which the question is to be decided specifically whether the company's corporate instrument shall be declared null or forfeit; for this Department particularly wishes to invite your excellency's attention to the quite important point that the President, in his above-mentioned decree of August 4, 1913, did not declare that instrument null and void, nor much less decree what in your excellency's note is termed the cancellation of the concession. What the President did in that decree was to declare that, since the act of February 20, 1911, provided that the Cuban Ports Company should be organized in accordance with the laws of Cuba in order that it might receive the concession, and said company was not organized in accordance with the laws of Cuba, the Government could no longer continue making the payments which under that act were to be made to the company, and that consequently the Secretary of Justice should take appropriate action in the courts to obtain a judicial decree of nullity or forfeiture and, in a proper case, to procure the punishment of anyone guilty of crime in connection with the organization and other acts of the company.

The Supreme Court decision of November 1915 was confined to a confirmation of the grounds of the President's decree; declared the payments properly suspended and upheld the other provisions of the decree. It is in the other suit above-mentioned where the Government of Cuba, through the public prosecutor as its legal representative, seeks a decree of nullity or forfeiture of the corporate instrument of the company—the suit in which it is to be definitely settled whether such nullity or forfeiture is proper. The present legal status is this: the decree of August 4, 1913, has, as stated, been confirmed by the Supreme Court, because the court holds that the company was not in fact organized in accordance with the laws in force in the Republic as required by the concession act of February 20, 1911.

It will be seen, therefore, that the question involved is not as to the concession, nor as to whether those who lent their money to the company did so in view of a concession granted by an act of Congress, but as to whether the concession was in fact granted to those to whom the act directed that it should be granted, namely, the Cuban Ports Company, which in order to obtain the grant should be organized in accordance with the laws of Cuba, and it seems clear that if that company did not conform to the laws of Cuba and organize in accord therewith, it could not and ought not to have been held to be the concessionaire.

The statement in your excellency's note relative to the bondholders having represented to the Government of the United States that the occasion seems to have arisen to assume that the Government of Cuba has taken over the operation of the company, and that steps should be taken to appoint appraisers to determine the value of the securities of the company with a view to the purchase thereof by the Government of Cuba, seems to be an error on the part of the bondholders, since the Cuban Government has in no wise contracted the obligation to make such purchase of the securities of the company in any case, and much less in the present case, in which it has not taken over the operation of the company but has merely declared that it should not continue recognizing the personality of that company and making the payments to it provided by the law because not organized in accordance with the laws of Cuba.

What has really occurred in this connection is this: The President of Cuba, General José Miguel Gómez, issued on May 12, 1913, that is to say a few days before the expiration of his term of office, which expired eight days later, or on the 20th of the same month, decree No. 510, in which the right was accorded the Government to take over the works and perform the dredging and harbor improvements in ports of the Republic upon indemnity of legitimate holders of the company's securities; but the fact is that, on various grounds, among others, that the decree gave to the United States certain intervention, whereas the United States as a foreign nation could appear in no pact save in the form of a treaty, or otherwise, but always subject to the ratification of the Senate, President Menocal annulled said decree No. 510 in all its parts, leaving it without legal force or value; and the present legal status is that said decree No. 510 is not in force because annulled on June 21, 1913, by decree No. 246 of President Menocal, while against such annulment the company has obtained no favorable resolution nor has attempted even to combat it in the courts.

With respect precisely to this decree No. 246, your excellency's predecessor Mr. Beaupré indicated to this Department in the same year, 1913, the desire of his Government that publication of the decree be suspended until the receipt of instructions, and soon thereafter, in a note of the very 21st of June 1913, addressed to Sr. Torriente, then Secretary of State of the Republic of Cuba, Mr. A. M. Beaupré, Minister then of the United States to Cuba, stated that he had just received a telegram from the Washington Government stating that it inclined to the opinion that the question of the legality of the aforesaid decree should be decided only by the competent Cuban authorities. Therefore, on this occasion, the American Government recognized that in so far as the legality of that decree was concerned, the Cuban Government was within its competent jurisdiction and could act freely in the matter.

It will thus be clearly seen that the attitude of the Government of Cuba in the matter in question is to continue to withhold payments to the so-called Cuban Ports Company as provided in the decree of August 4, 1913, confirmed in all its parts by decision of the Supreme Court of November 8, 1915, on the ground that the aforesaid company is not legally organized, and to await the final decision not only of the suit brought against the Government by the bondholders, but also the suit brought in 1913 against the company by the public prosecutor in representation of the Government of Cuba; without prejudice to continuing in the meantime its efforts to reach a settlement that shall put an end to the whole matter of the Cuban Ports Company, efforts which, as stated before, the President made unofficially prior to the rendering of the Supreme Court decision of November 8, 1915, and by the official means of the message to Congress after that decision had been rendered.

In respect to the concluding part of your excellency's note, where you say:

"My Government, without desiring at this time to enter into any discussion as to the legal rights of the parties to the contract in question under the terms thereof just mentioned, desires me to point out that the Cuban Government, inasmuch as it has, acting through its President, terminated the company's concession, would appear to be in a position at once to take steps to effect a satisfactory solution of the existing regrettable difficulties between itself and the company by promptly instituting the proceedings suggested by the holders of the company's securities."

I must refer to what I have already stated in this note, namely, that the bondholders, who, as stated in your excellency's note, have suggested this idea, cannot properly make such a recommendation nor sustain this claim, and that for various reasons.

The first reason is that, as I have already pointed out, the procedure in question was provided for in decree No. 510, of May 13, 1913, of President José Miguel Gómez, which was revoked in full by President Menocal in his decree No. 246 of June 21, 1913, and accordingly, the only legal ground which the bondholders would have had for this procedure of the purchase of the securities by the Government of Cuba must be considered to have completely disappeared and to have been extinguished by the act of complete revocation of the decree authorizing such procedure.

Another reason is that it is not clear how the bondholders can request through diplomatic channels that this procedure of the purchase of the securities by the Government of Cuba be carried out when the fact is that, in addition to its being known to them that the decree authorizing such procedure of the purchase of securities by the Government has been revoked in full and is therefore without legal force, said bondholders, through the Trust Company of Cuba, their legal representative, have still pending in the courts a suit against the Government, claiming not only what they call the mortgage represented by their bonds but the resumption of payments by the Government in accordance with the act of February 20, 1911, and compensation of damages; it being incompatible for said bondholders to sustain at the same time two such contradictory extremes as that their character of mortgagees be recognized and the Government continue making the payments provided for in the act before mentioned, with the compensation of damages which they also seek, and that the Government be assumed to have taken over the operation of the company and should therefore proceed to purchase, after due appraisal, all the securities of the company. Or in other words, the bondholders seek through the diplomatic channel exactly the opposite to what they are seeking in the suit which is still pending decision in the Supreme Court of the Republic of Cuba.

Lastly, it is evident that, in view of all the facts, it cannot be held that the Government of Cuba has decided to take over the operation of the company and to proceed to acquire the company's securities by purchase, even were decree No. 510 authorizing this procedure still in force, which, having been revoked by decree No. 246 of June 21, 1913, it is not; for what the Government of Cuba actually did in this case was to decide and declare, as it perforce had to do, that it should not continue making payments to the Cuban Ports Company, nor should the latter continue the works of dredging and harbor improvements provided for in the fundamental act, namely, that of February 20, 1911, for the reason that said act directed that the concession should be given to the company upon the condition that it be organized in accordance with the laws of Cuba, and that, it being discovered that said company had not complied with the laws, it should not have been concessionaire indicated in the act nor could continue as such, and, consequently, payments which were theretofore being made should be discontinued and the matter taken to courts for final decision of everything concerning the legality of the company.

Moreover, the bondholders, or their trustee, the Trust Company of Cuba, are aware also that a suit is before the courts brought by the Government seeking a decree of nullity or forfeiture of the charter or instrument of organization of the corporation known as the Cuban Ports Company because of failure to comply in said instrument with the provisions of laws in force, and that said suit will be decided by the judge before whom it is pending as soon as defendants file their final answers.

In view of all these facts it is quite evident that the Government, and especially the President of the Republic, has not been procrastinating or tardy, but that his efforts for a definite settlement have perhaps been premature and untimely, inasmuch as suits are still pending in the courts, one of which was brought by the bondholders themselves; and therefore it does not seem that the Government of Cuba can be properly criticised, having proceeded and proceeding in this matter in thorough good faith and adhered to the mandates of the law, as any other nation would have done whose laws were unfulfilled and disregarded by a corporation upon which, without prejudice to the general obligation of organizing in accordance with the laws of Cuba, the act itself of February 20, 1911, authorizing the dredging and harbor improvements in ports of Cuba, specifically imposed the obligation to organize in accordance with the laws of Cuba.

Both the company and the bondholders are bound to abide by what has already been determined, and what is yet to be determined in the suits still pending, by the courts, upon whom the ascertainment of all rights and obligations in the premises devolves. The Government of Cuba is of course willing to fulfill all its obligations, and will beyond any doubt fulfill those which may arise from the determinations of the courts. In this case there is no question of the fulfillment of any obligation with respect to Cuba which the Treaty of Paris imposed upon the United States and which should be assumed and fulfilled by the Government of Cuba as stipulated in Art. 3 of the appendix to the Constitution known as the Platt Amendment. The question involved arises from a contract between the Government of Cuba and a Cuban corporation, a corporation which under the general laws and the special law had to organize in accordance with the laws of Cuba and which the Government of Cuba, and subsequently the Supreme Court, have declared not to have observed those laws, and accordingly the Government of Cuba acted within its rights in suspending payments and submitting the question to the courts for final determination. The Government of the United States itself has recognized that in such matters, concerning questions of internal administration of Cuban affairs, and the merits of contracts between the Government of Cuba and third persons, the Government of Cuba alone has competent jurisdiction save in so far as such matters may be affected by the provisions of the Platt Amendment, as the Secretary of State of the United States expressly communicated to the Cuban Ports Company in a letter dated June 11, 1912, quoted, in this pertinent part, in the note which Mr. Beaupré, Minister of the United States, addressed to the Cuban Government on February 25, 1913.

It is not necessary to state that the so-called Platt Amendment is not involved in this matter, since, as before stated, it does not refer to obligations with respect to Cuba which were imposed upon the United States by the Treaty of Paris and which should be assumed and fulfilled by the Government of Cuba, the question involved being merely whether the holders of securities of the Cuban Ports Company have or have not any rights in the premises, and if so, what those rights are, a question still to be settled by the courts of Cuba in the suit brought by the bondholders. The President, it is true, has sought a full settlement of the question by means of an equitable arrangement, but it cannot be held on this account that the well-intentioned efforts of the President of the Republic are to be construed as creating obligations which the President has not intended to and could not impose upon the Republic.

Finally, all claims in connection with the matter of the Ports Company which may be brought against the Government of Cuba, not only by the company itself but by foreign nations, such as Great Britain, must be discussed on legal grounds only, and settled strictly on their legal merits, without any fear that the credit of Cuba will suffer or that a dangerous situation will confront the Republic, a situation which could never arise with one who, as the Cuban Government, only wants to discuss these matters calmly and to have them settled, finally, as they should be settled, in the understanding that, once settled, the Government of Cuba will not refuse to fulfill what it shall justly have to fulfill.

No. 273

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, December 14, 1916.

SIR: The Department has received your No. 368 of August 25, 1916, enclosing a translation of a note from the Cuban Secretary of State replying to your note of August 7 last regarding the case of the Cuban Ports Company.

The Department observes that it is stated in the note addressed to you by the Cuban Secretary of State, under date of August 22 last, that the President of Cuba did not, as stated in the note addressed by you to the Cuban Foreign Office in accordance with the Department's instruction of July 31, 1916, terminate or cancel the contract concluded between the Cuban Ports Company and the Cuban Government. It may be observed with reference to this point, that inasmuch as it appears from Mr. Desvernine's note, just mentioned, and from the decree of President Menocal, dated August 4, 1913, that he directed the suspension of the payment of funds which, under the terms of the contract, were due the company, and further directed that the Secretary of Public Works should proceed to take charge of all the works performed by the company, and since it further appears that the action directed by the President of Cuba was taken, and that the company's operations have entirely ceased, it seems to the Department that there was no substantial inaccuracy on its part in its reference to the contract in question as having been canceled.

The Department notes the observations of the Cuban Secretary of State respecting the proposal of the holders of the securities of the company that the Cuban Government should take steps to have appraisers appointed, in order that the company's outstanding securities may be purchased at a just and equitable valuation, to be determined by appraisers named in accordance with certain terms of the contract. This Government, without entering into any discussion of the legal rights of the parties to the contract in question under the terms thereof relating to the purchase of the company's securities, suggested that the Cuban Government, inasmuch as it had terminated the company's concession, would appear to be in a position to effect a satisfactory solution of existing difficulties between itself and the company, by instituting proceedings for the purchase of these securities, as suggested by the holders thereof. It would appear from Mr. Desvernine's note that the Cuban Government concludes that it is not in a position to take such action, because, in the first place, the decree of President Gómez, issued on May 12, 1913, by which provisions were incorporated into the contract for the purpose of enabling the Cuban Government to take over, under certain circumstances, the company's outstanding stock, was subsequently canceled by a decree made by President Menocal, which decree, it appears, has never been judicially confirmed; and, in the second place, even though this last mentioned decree had not been issued by President Menocal, no situation has arisen such as that contemplated by the contract which would require the Cuban Government to take over this company's securities.

The Department regrets that the Cuban Government considers that it is stopped by these reasons from taking some steps along the lines suggested by the holders of the company's securities, looking to an adjustment of the rights of all parties affected by the decree of August 4, 1913, in accordance with the avowed purposes of the President of Cuba.

The Department is not clear as to the observations made in Mr. Desvernine's note respecting the propriety of diplomatic representations in this case and respecting the pertinency to this matter of the so-called Platt Amendment. It would appear, from other portions of Mr. Desvernine's note, that this Government has made clear its position to the Government of Cuba in presenting to it certain considerations in relation to the questions involved in this case.

You will address to the Cuban Secretary of State a note in the sense of the foregoing with reference to the communication transmitted by him to you under date of August 22, 1916.

With reference to previous correspondence in connection with the Cuban Ports Company matter, you are directed to seek a favorable opportunity to say to President Menocal that, in view of his recent reelection and his ability to secure from the Cuban Congress legislation which he had deemed to be in interest of the Republic, that this might be an opportune moment for the carrying out of the desire which he is understood to have expressed for the settlement of the claims of the stockholders and bondholders of Cuban Ports Company.

You will also say that a settlement must eventually be made of this long-standing matter and its settlement at this juncture would go far toward eliminating any cause for friction not only between Cuba and the United States but between Cuba and Great Britain, which, in view of the present international situation, is highly desirable. You will add that this settlement would no doubt materially facilitate the carrying out of Cuba's financial program as set forth in recent legislative acts.

SIR: Referring to your cable instruction of June 12, 6 p. m., I have the honor to enclose, as the first result, the translation into English of a message from President Menocal to Congress, accompanied by the Spanish original as it appeared in El Mundo of June 30.

When I presented the matter to the President he again expressed himself as anxious to get a settlement, and several days afterwards the British Minister also spoke to him on the same subject. Last Saturday, June 30, the President said that he had sent for a number of Congressmen and urged the importance of his being given authority to get a settlement with the Ports Company; that he also sent to Mr. Truffin to come to Habana and aid in getting action by Congress; that Mr. Truffin was, he thought, personally interested in the passage; that it seemed to him more probable that Congress would act favorably on this matter than on any other important proposal on the administration's program, but it was impossible to predict whether action would be taken before the adjournment on July 13.

I urged the necessity of an early settlement, and the President said that if Congress refused to act he would have to consider some plan for proceeding independently.

MESSAGE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE REPUBLIC

TO THE CONGRESS: An unavoidable duty obliges me to recommend anew with all urgency to the honorable Congress the settlement of the serious matter referring to ports duties and improvements and claims of the bona fide holders of bonds of the Cuban Ports Company.

In the message referring to the same matter, which I sent on January 21, 1916, to both houses of Congress, I explained the status of this question and the convenience of deciding same, in view of the public necessity and of the repeated representations made by the Governments of the United States and Great Britain, regarding said claims.

The company referred to having been illegally constituted, it was nevertheless, recognized as legal by the Government of this Republic which granted it the concession for the works of dredging and improving the ports of the island, for the time and with the conditions and extraordinary advantages of the law of February 20, 1911, and showed it every measure of favor and confidence. Foreigners who, in good faith, and protected by those acts of the Government of the Republic, and in view of its reiterated assurances and of the reports of reputable entities, invested their savings or their capital in those Cuban bonds, are claiming indemnity for the loss they have suffered, and this, in my judgment, must be examined with a view to equity, even if not with strictest justice, as my Government has with solid and positive grounds constantly maintained.

By my decree No. 522 issued on August 4, 1913, it was stated that said company was not constituted in accordance with the laws of the country, as required by the law of February 20, 1911, already cited, and that it was not, nor could it continue to be the concessionaire of the said works; and that statement is supported and confirmed by repeated decisions of the Supreme Court against the company and in favor of the State, in all the suits brought against the said decree. There can be no doubt therefore, that the Government of the Republic acted legally, with right and justice, in issuing the Decree 522.

But the case of the bona fide holders of the bonds that the said company managed to sell abroad, taking advantage of the above-mentioned favorable circumstances and relying on the integrity of the Cuban Government, is not morally decided by those important judicial decisions, inasmuch as they rest on grounds of equity, grace and high international comity which can not escape the enlightened mind of the honorable Congress.

Founded on analagous considerations, a bill was approved by the Senate some time ago, which is still pending before the House, as to which I said in my message of January 21, 1916, and now repeat, without intending, as I did not then, to anticipate opinions which must constitutionally be reserved for the moment when the proposed law is presented to me for approval, that it was without any doubt, inspired by motives and reasons of justice on one hand, and of equity and grace on the other hand, which are fundamental and must not be lost sight of, it being my opinion that upon the ample basis of the general lines of that bill, an efficient settlement could be reached, which would foresee and satisfy the twofold necessity which must be considered, that is, that of continuing the port improvements which the law of 1911 desired should be assured, giving definite application for the tax which it imposed for that purpose, as well as that of indemnifying, in the proper time and manner, the bona fide bondholders.

If it were always just and prudent to consider these necessities for the reasons indicated, it is even more so now that it behooves us to lay aside completely all differences and arguments or disputes with the Governments of the United States and Great Britain in circumstances such as those created by war with the Imperial German Government, which strongly unite our three nations together in the defense of the same ideals of liberty, of international justice and of progress.

On the other hand, the definite settlement of this vexatious matter, which is used without reason against the credit of Cuba, would contribute in no little part to the better and more expeditious accomplishment of the important bond issue of thirty million dollars which the Republic needs for effecting the high and unavoidable objects which I had the honor to set out in the messages of April 18 and May 26 of this year.

I confidently expect that for the reasons expressed, the honorable Congress will, before the present session closes, vest in me the necessary authority in accordance with the proposed law referred to, or in the terms that its prudence and wisdom may dictate, in order that the important and urgent measures may be carried out.

The Ports Company matter has been settled definitely, all interests accepting proposal of Government. Government pays the Ports Company bonds at par. These include one million, Series A, which were distributed in Cuba and not sold at time of getting the concession, and six million dollars of Series B, sold in England. They will be paid for with Cuban interior five per cent bond, founded on fifty per cent of port tax. President Klapp of Ports Company considers it to be best Cuban bond extant.

There are ten million dollars in stock which was all originally issued as water, part as bonus with bonds and part to friends and supporters of company. The company is allowed to retain its assets. These include half million dollars remaining in treasury from sale of bonds [apparent omission] tax from Cuban Government and valuable real estate which may be worth from four to twelve millions according to time and manner of development. A development company is proposed to take over these assets and President Menocal has personally assured individuals that he will facilitate this work.

[Telegram--Extract]

London, December 22, 1899.

I had an interview with the Danish Minister for Foreign Affairs day before yesterday, from whom I have ascertained that Denmark is willing to cede Danish West Indies to us. He would not state on what terms, but merely that if we make an offer it will be seriously considered. Government, and particularly the King, very sensitive about our former treatment of the question and especially anxious to avoid any appearance of offering islands to us. After some persuasion Minister intimated that a payment of between four and five million dollars would probably indemnify Treasury for advances to islands and cover capitalization of certain pensions necessary in case islands are ceded to another Power. I subsequently had long interview with two officials of Ministry of Finance who furnished me with figures showing debt to consist solely of loans from Danish Treasury to islands to cover deficits. It increases annually by about 550,000 crowns, the accumulated interest augmenting similarly by about 22,976 crowns. The debt with accumulated interest amounted March 31st last to 9,304,762 crowns. Capitalization of pensions estimated 4,662,000, making a total of 13,966,762 crowns—about 3,780,802 dollars. Treasury also owns plantations, valued about 191,000 crowns, and has loaned to private societies and individuals in islands about 3,000,000 crowns. * * *

AMERICAN EMBASSY,
London, December 23, 1899.

SIR: I have the honor to inform you that I duly received your letter of 28th ultimo;² that Captain von Christmas Dirckinck Holmfeld, therein referred to, arrived in London on Saturday, the 9th instant, and that I had an interview with him that same evening, during which it was agreed that, upon his return to Copenhagen, after spending a few days in Paris, he should arrange a meeting between the Danish Prime Minister, Mr. Hoering, who is also Minister of Finance, and myself.

¹For previous negotiations and a review of the islands and their history see House Doc. No. 15, Part 7, 57th Cong. 1st Sess., p. 2767 et seq.

On the 14th instant, I received the telegram in French from Captain von Christmas, of which I enclose a copy herewith, stating that the Prime Minister would be happy to receive me, and on Tuesday evening, the 19th instant, I arrived at Copenhagen. Captain von Christmas met me at the station, and informed me that the Prime Minister, being unable to speak English or French or even much German, had requested the Minister of Foreign Affairs, Admiral Ravn, who is also Minister of Marine, to see me.

On Wednesday, the 20th, I accordingly called at the Foreign Office, accompanied by Captain von Christmas, and was promptly received alone by the Minister.

I informed his excellency that the object of my visit was to inquire confidentially what the intentions of his Government might be in respect to the Danish West India Islands of St. Thomas, St. John and St. Croix—an intimation having reached my Government that Denmark is willing to cede them to another Power.

The Minister replied that his Government would be willing to cede the islands to the United States for a consideration, and I then asked him to let me know the exact terms upon which they would be ceded. He said, however, that it would be impossible for him to do this; but that if the United States should be disposed to make an offer for the islands, it would be seriously considered by the Danish Government.

Admiral Ravn intimated that, after the treatment Denmark had received from the United States in connection with the agreement made by Mr. Seward, to take over two of the islands, which the Senate declined to ratify,³ it would be impossible for his Government to appear even indirectly to be offering them again to us, and for this reason he could not fix any terms for their cession until a formal proposal should be received from us.

After some conversation and several attempts on my part to induce the Minister to give me some idea confidentially of the terms on which Denmark would part with the islands, he said that he thought between four and five millions of dollars would probably cover the advances made by the Treasury and also the amount required for the capitalization of certain pensions which would be necessary in the event of the cession of the islands to another Power.

I then asked him to be good enough to explain to me the nature of the debt of the islands and the manner in which it is held; to which he replied that he had asked two heads of departments from the Ministry of Finance to meet me and furnish these particulars. He thereupon summoned the Under Secretary for Foreign Affairs, who took me to his room, where I met the officials in question, who stated that the debt of the three West India Islands owned by Denmark, consists solely of loans made from time to time by the Danish

Treasury to cover the deficits in the annual budgets; and they furnished me with a written document, of which I enclose a copy herewith, and from which the figures in my cipher telegram of this date, are taken. A translation of this cablegram is also enclosed.

I furthermore obtained copies of the budgets for the current year, in the English and Danish languages, of the Islands of St. Thomas and St. John, which form one municipality, and of St. Croix, which is a separate municipality; and I forward them herewith for your information. The items of revenue and expenditure will be found therein, and you will observe that the revenue of St. Thomas and St. John is estimated at $95,520 and the expenditure at $179,186.00, while those of St. Croix are respectively $154,865 and $253,073.64, showing a deficit in the three islands for the present year of $181,874,

The figures, I may mention, in the budget drafts, are dollars, whereas those in the accompanying statement from the Ministry of Finance are in Danish krone—the equivalent of about 27 cents, United States currency.

I have every reason to believe, notwithstanding the reserve of the Minister of Foreign Affairs in respect to terms, that the Danish Government is very anxious to be relieved of the care and expense of the islands, and that an offer of three and a half millions of dollars will be accepted.

Since my return to London to-day, I have received a telegram from Captain von Christmas, stating that the King of Denmark wishes the islands, if taken over by us, to be "inside United States customs' sphere," which I infer to mean that His Majesty would like any offer we may make for the islands to be subject to that condition, although nothing was said to me relative thereto by the Foreign Minister, nor by the other Danish officials whom I saw. I understood, however, that the Ministry had been in frequent communication with the King relative to my expected visit, the details of which were doubtless at once communicated to him; and I assume that Captain v. Christmas' telegram embodies a portion of the King's reply. * * *

DANISH WEST INDIES

The Danish West Indies comprise the Islands of Santa Cruz, St. Thomas and St. John. The areas are: Santa Cruz, 83 square miles; St. Thomas, 23 square miles; St. John, 21 square miles (Longman's Gazetteer and Johnson's Cyclopaedia). The Statesman's Year Book, 1900, says that by the last census (1890) the population of the islands was estimated at 32,789, and that it consists mainly of free negroes engaged in the cultivation of sugar cane. Consul Van Horne, of St. Thomas, in a report to appear in Commercial Relations, 1901,⁴ says that the population has declined, and that there is general business depression, due (according to a report in Commercial Relations, 1900) to the crisis in the sugar industry.

The trade of the Danish West Indies with the principal countries (according to the official returns of the countries named) for the most recent calendar years for which statistics are available, is as follows:

⁴Commercial Relations 1901, pp. 529-539.

	Imports from Danish West Indies	Exports to Danish West Indies
United States (1900)-----	$444, 050	$651, 996
Great Britain (1900)-----	2, 511	429, 770
France (1899)-----	64, 462	1, 184, 055
Germany (1899)-----	None	10, 710
Denmark (1899)-----	23, 272	24, 924

From the above, the imports into the Danish West Indies from the principal countries may be stated at $2,301,455, and the exports at $534,295 making the value of the total trade some $2,835,750.

Exports consist chiefly of sugar, bay rum and shells. Most of the sugar is sent to the United States, and represents nearly the entire export of the islands to our country.

United States Consul Van Horne, in a report appearing in the Review of the World's Commerce, 1900, says:

"St. Thomas is preeminently a coaling station; 100,000 tons were handled twice in 1899. All of this coal is American ——— The United States is the natural buying and selling market of the Danish West Indies."

Trade with all Countries

Exports (estimated)-----	$654, 122
Imports-----	1, 142, 038
Total trade-----	1, 796, 160

The statement of imports is taken from a report by U. S. Consul Van Horne (Commercial Relations, 1898, Volume I, p. 708) and is for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1898. The exports are estimated from the statements of trade of Great Britain, Germany, France, Denmark and the United States with the Danish West Indies, in 1897, the latest year for which figures from all of these countries can be obtained. Spanish figures contain no mention of trade with the Danish West Indies. The countries named have most of the trade; exports may have been sent to other West Indian islands, but as the exports consist chiefly of sugar, bay rum, shells, etc., they are probably destined for re-exportation, and the majority of the exports, it may be assumed, is sent directly.

Imports into United States from Danish West Indies-----	$327, 759
Exports from United States to Danish West Indies-----	707, 622

Of the imports, $317,244 was in dutiable and $10,515 in free goods. Of the exports, $704,034 was in goods of United States origin, and $3,588 in foreign goods.

The chief articles in the trade were:

Consul Stewart of St. Thomas, in Commercial Relations, 1896-7, says the population of the island is 12,000, nine-tenths of whom are colored. No food products are raised except cattle for home consumption, and market vegetables. Almost all food supplies (salt provisions, canned goods, flour, meal, etc.) come from the United States. United States Consular Reports for 1899, as yet, give only fragmentary returns.

The Stateman's Year Book, 1899, says the Danish West Indies are inhabited mostly by free negroes engaged in the cultivation of sugar cane. The trade with Denmark, formerly considerable, has fallen off. Exports to Great Britain consist chiefly of sugar, and the principal imports from that country are of cotton goods and machinery.

Captain von Christmas to Secretary of Embassy White

[Telegram—Translation]

HENRY WHITE, Esq. Prime Minister delighted to receive you. When do you arrive?

CHRISTMAS

The Secretary of State to Minister Swenson

No. 86

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, January 29, 1900.

SIR: The present time appears opportune to approach the Government of His Majesty the King of Denmark with a view to reviving the negotiations which in 1867 resulted in the signature of a convention between the United States and Denmark for the cession to us of the Danish West India Islands.

⁵It was explained to me that "Public foundations" under the letter B mean charities and a fund for immigrants.

The causes which at that time cooperated to defeat the confirmation of the treaty in the United States Senate are believed now to exist no longer, while on the other hand many good reasons combine to favor the approval of such a convention at this juncture. The proximity of the Danish Islands to the recently acquired territory of Puerto Rico of which they are virtually a geographical offshoot, and the existence of a harbor in Saint Thomas suitable for the station and repair of the naval vessels henceforth necessarily to be maintained in the West Indies are in point.

It is naturally presumed that the Government of His Majesty may now be found no less kindly disposed to entertain the proposal of such a cession than it was inclined to suggest it in 1892, on the occasion of the celebration of the four hundredth anniversary of the Columbian discovery of America. In this connection you may examine the confidential report made to Mr. Secretary Foster by your predecessor Mr. Carr under date of November 28, 1892 (No. 129),⁶ but it will not be necessary for you to make use of this precedent unless it should be recalled by the Minister for Foreign Affairs in any conversation he may have with you on the subject. It is presumed also that His Majesty's Government will readily appreciate, if indeed it shall not have anticipated the changed territorial and political conditions in that part of the West Indies which make it desirable to include the remaining Danish possession of Sainte Croix in whatever negotiation may now be found feasible.

Bearing these considerations in view, and cordially mindful of the strong friendship between the two countries, of which Denmark gave so conspicuous an evidence in 1867 and which has been since testified in other ways, the President desires that you shall sound the Government of His Majesty touching its disposition to enter upon negotiations for the acquisition by the United States of the Danish Islands in the West Indies, comprising Saint Thomas, Saint John and Sainte Croix with their outlying islets, rocks and appurtenances.

In the event of a favorable reception of this proposal you will submit for the consideration of the Danish Government a copy of the enclosed draft of a convention which, it is believed, while simplified in some respects as compared with the form signed in 1867, will completely effect the purpose designed.

You may say to his excellency the Minister for Foreign Affairs, in the event of his entertaining this proposal in the friendly spirit in which it is put forward, that it is thought desirable to bring the matter in definite shape before the Senate at an early day, and that if the subjoined draft convention is substantially accepted, I would be prepared to sign it with the Danish Minister at this capital on his receipt of telegraphed authority to that end.

You will use the cable freely in reporting your execution of this instruction, employing the cipher for all messages in this regard, and you will supplement your cabled reports with full details by mail.

I am [etc.]

DRAFT CONVENTION WITH DENMARK

Convention between His Majesty the King of Denmark and the United States of America, to effect the cession to the United States of the Danish Possessions in the West Indies.

The United States of America and His Majesty the King of Denmark being desirous of confirming the good understanding which exists between them, have to that end appointed as Plenipotentiaries:

His Majesty the King of Denmark, _____, and the President of the United States, _____, who having mutually exhibited their full powers, found to be in due form, have agreed upon and signed the following articles.

Article I

His Majesty the King of Denmark agrees to cede to the United States immediately upon the exchange of ratifications of this convention the Islands of Saint Thomas, Saint John and Sainte Croix in the West Indies with the adjacent islands and rocks.

This cession conveys to the United States the said islands and appurtenances in full and entire sovereignty, with all the dominion, rights and powers which Denmark now possesses and can exercise in them, free and unincumbered by any grants, conditions, privileges of franchises in any way affecting or limiting the exercise of such sovereignty.

Article II

The aforesaid cession conveys to the United States the absolute fee and ownership of all public, Government or Crown Lands, public buildings, ports, harbors, fortifications, barracks and all other public property of every kind and description belonging to the Government of Denmark, together with every right and appurtenance thereunto appertaining.

It is however understood, that the Lutheran Congregation shall remain in possession of the churches which are now used by them, and that sums due to the Danish Treasury by individuals are reserved and do not pass by this cession.

Article III

The Danish subjects inhabiting said islands may remain therein or may remove therefrom at will, retaining in either event all their rights of property, including the right to sell, or dispose of such property or of its proceeds, and they shall also enjoy all civil and religious liberties and be allowed to carry on their industry, commerce and professions, being subject to such laws as are applicable to other foreigners. In case they remain in the islands they may preserve their allegiance to the crown of Denmark by making within two years from the date of the exchange of ratifications of this convention a declaration of their intention to preserve such allegiance, in default of which declaration they shall be held to have renounced it and to have elected allegiance to the United States.

Article IV

Formal delivery of the territory and property ceded as aforesaid shall be made immediately after the payment by the United States of the sum of money stipulated in the Fifth Article hereof; but the cession with the right of immediate possession is nevertheless to be deemed complete on the exchange of ratifications of this convention, and any Danish troops which may be in the territory or islands aforesaid shall be forthwith withdrawn as soon as may be reasonably and conveniently practicable.

Article V

In full consideration of the cession of said islands to the United States, free of all incumbrance, the United States agrees to pay within ninety days from the date of the exchange of ratifications of this convention, in the city of Washington, to the diplomatic representative or other agent of His Majesty the King of Denmark duly authorized to receive the same, the sum of three and one half million dollars in gold.

Article VI

When this convention shall have been ratified by both the High Contracting Parties according to their respective procedure, the ratifications shall be exchanged at Washington as soon as possible within six months from the date hereof.

In faith whereof the respective plenipotentiaries have signed and sealed this convention, in the English and Danish languages.

Done at ———, the ——— day of ———, in the year of Our Lord one thousand nine hundred.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, February 3, 1900.

An important instruction was mailed to you 30th ultimo proposing purchase of Danish West Indies. I have conferred with Danish Minister here, who has advised his Government. You will be prepared to act on receipt of mailed instructions, being careful to impress upon Minister for Foreign Affairs the urgency of adhering to terms of my proposal, inasmuch as it is extremely unlikely that the Senate would assent to any modification. Time is most important.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, February 19, 1900.

It is in many respects very desirable to have the convention signed here, especially to enable immediate submission to the Senate. Signature in Copenhagen would delay this three weeks. Nevertheless if the Danish Government has good reasons for the suggestion, and is prepared to sign the convention verbatim as submitted through you, you are authorized to sign it.

Minister Swenson to the Secretary of State

No. 150

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Copenhagen, February 22, 1900.

SIR: I have had the honor to receive your No. 86, of the 29th ultimo, with enclosure as therein stated, and your cablegrams of the 3d and the 20th [19th] instant, relative to negotiations for the cession of the Danish West Indies to the United States.

On the 5th instant I called on the Minister of Foreign Affairs, and on inquiring if he had received advices from the Danish Minister at Washington on this subject, was informed that he had received a cablegram from him Feb. 3, stating that on Jan. 30 he had mailed a communication to the Danish Foreign Office enclosing a copy of a draft of a convention for the cession of the Danish West Indies to the United States; that the sum offered was $3,500,000; and that secrecy and early action were important. After consultation with the Premier, who holds the portfolio of finance and of the colonies, he had instructed Mr. Brun to ask that the purchasing sum be raised to $4,000,000.

Inferring that your cablegram to me, dated February 3, had been sent after Mr. Brun's interview with you on this point, I informed his excellency that telegraphic communications from you indicated that it was of the utmost importance that the terms of your proposal be adhered to; and that if the Danish Government was disposed to cede the islands to the United States, it would be well to take such preliminary steps in that direction as could be taken pending the arrival of the text of the proposed convention. I was informed that the matter would be taken up at once with the Minister of Finance, and that the importance of time and secrecy would be impressed upon all concerned.

Your No. 86, enclosing two copies of a draft of a proposed convention reached me Saturday morning, Feb. 10. In the afternoon I had conferences with the Minister of Foreign Affairs, the Director General and the Minister of Finance, who had familiarized themselves with the provisions of the draft received from Mr. Brun that day. We discussed these provisions, comparing them with those contained in the convention of 1867. Objections were raised to the sum offered; to that part of Article I providing that, "this cession conveys &c., &c., &c.,—free and unencumbered by any grants, conditions, privileges or franchises in any way affecting or limiting the exercise of such sovereignty;" and to Article III, on the subject of citizenship.

The first point, as to the sum offered was not urged strongly. On the second point, it was explained that the Danish Government desired to stipulate that the obligations entered into with the English West India and Panama Telegraph Co., and with the Floating Dock Co. at St. Thomas be recognized and respected by the United States. The former company, to which certain concessions had originally been granted Feb. 12, 1896, had recently been subsidized for a period of five years, to Jan. 1, 1905, in the sum of $3,000.00 per annum from the treasury of St. Thomas and $1,000.00 per annum from the Treasury of St. Croix. The latter company was on March 12, 1897, granted a monopoly for 21 years, securing exclusive right to adopt its own charges, regulations, etc. On the third point, the phrase, "being subject to such laws as are applicable to other foreigners" did not meet with approval, it being urged that the persons referred to ought to be accorded the same privileges, rights and immunities as are granted to citizens of the United States in the islands, and that Danish citizens inhabiting the islands ought to be given the opportunity to invest themselves with United States citizenship immediately after the convention takes effect.

A desire was also expressed to add a supplementary clause to Article II for the purpose of removing all possible doubt as to whether the stipulation that "sums due to the Danish Treasury by individuals are reserved and do not pass by this cession" covers sugar factory stock and mortgage securities in private plantations held by the Treasury in consequence of moneys loaned to private individuals. Charitable and other institutions were also referred to.

In addition, inquiry was made with respect to the political status and the relations of the islands to the United States after cession.

I stated that it was not the practice of the United States to embody in conventions for the acquisition of territory guarantees as to contracts, franchises, etc., calling particular attention to our late treaty with Spain on this subject, with the assurance that just and equitable treatment, with due regard for the obligations of international law, would be accorded in dealing with contracts entered into by the Danish Government. After some little discussion, it was conceded that the United States could not be expected to assume any obligations as to the concessions in question, especially with regard to the Floating Dock Co. On the subject of citizenship, the power of Congress to legislate, our naturalization laws enacted by virtue of such power, and naturalization by treaty were fully discussed; and the stipulation in our late treaty of peace with Spain was read. I expressed the opinion that the executive authorities desired to follow recent precedent in this matter, pointing to weighty reasons for so doing, especially at this time.

It was agreed that no stipulations would be necessary to secure the rights of charitable and similar institutions.

As bearing on the relations of the islands to the United States, after cession, especially with reference to customs regulations, I made general reference to the constitutional aspects of the case, and touched upon the President's policy, the Foraker Bill, and the recent report of the Committee on Ways and Means with regard to Porto Rico.

I added that in all matters pertaining to the islands, the Government of the United States could be relied upon to act with the utmost regard for the welfare and interests of the inhabitants; the nature and spirit of our Government as well as our past record in dealing with acquired territory affording sufficient guarantee in that direction.

I urged the considerations set forth in your communications to me for secrecy and an early acceptance of the proposed convention, without essential modifications. After these conferences, which were held Feb. 12, 15, 16, 20, 21 and 22, most of the objections to the provisions of your draft were withdrawn. One or two nonessential modifications may, however, be proposed, largely for political reasons.

On the 17th instant a Council of State, composed of His Majesty the King, His Royal Highness the Crown Prince, and the members of the Ministry, was held, at which His Majesty formally gave his consent to enter upon negotiations for the cession of the Danish West Indies to the United States. Though evincing no strong desire for the transfer of these colonial possessions to another power, His Majesty expressed the belief that the best interests of the islands would be subserved by cession to the United States.

On the 20th instant, the Premier called on me, at the Legation, stating that on the following day he and the Minister of Foreign Affairs were to meet with the Finance Committees of the two branches of the Rigsdag for the purpose of apprising them of the proposed negotiations. I had previously been informed that this would be necessary before any formal reply could be made to me in the matter; but had been given to understand that no difficulty would be experienced in securing the cooperation of the members. On the 22d I called on the two Ministers to ascertain the results of the meeting. I was informed that the draft of the proposed convention had been laid before the committees; that but little discussion and few expressions of opinion had ensued; but that some opposition had manifested itself, one of the members of the Government party having been especially severe and outspoken in his antagonism. The Minister of Foreign Affairs was not pleased with the manner in which the proposal had been received by the committees, and expressed some apprehension that public agitation might prove disastrous to the negotiations. The Minister of Finance, however, anticipated but little difficulty from the opposition, saying that the combative propensities of the member who had been seized with such patriotic emotions were well known and that he had been prepared for trouble from that quarter. He made light of it, assuring me that it would receive but scant attention. I inquired if it was a fact that petitions were quietly being circulated against the sale of the islands, and that public meetings and agitation by the press were being considered, and, if so, what effect that would have. He replied that he understood that such petitions had been signed by a few persons and that some agitation might be looked for, but attached slight importance to it.

To-morrow the Rigsdag takes a recess until Tuesday, Feb. 27.

No meeting of the Finance Committees can be had before the 28th; and as the meeting referred to above was productive of no result, the Minister of Foreign Affairs will not be prepared to give a definite reply to your proposal till after the 28th instant.

The Minister of Foreign Affairs, desiring to have the convention concluded here to avoid the appearance that the proposal for disposing of the islands had come from the Danish Government, I cabled you, under date of the 19th instant, as follows: "Minister for Foreign Affairs wishes treaty concluded here. Cable authority to sign." On receipt of your telegraphic reply of the 20th instant, I communicated the contents thereof to the Foreign Office, and was informed that Mr. Brun had cabled similar advices on the same day. The Minister of Foreign Affairs wishes to give the matter further thought before replying. To-day he informed me that when an agreement shall have been arrived at on the text of the convention, he may conclude to authorize Mr. Brun to sign it at Washington.

My communication to the Foreign Office formally submitting a copy of the proposed convention for the consideration of the Danish Government was handed to the Minister of Foreign Affairs on the 20th instant.

A copy of the note is herewith enclosed.

You will find appended on the overleaf copies of the telegrams referred to above.

EXCELLENCY: Referring to the interviews had with your excellency regarding the disposition of your Government to revive the negotiations which in 1867 resulted in the signature of a convention between the United States and Denmark for the cession of the Danish West India Islands, I now have the honor to transmit herewith a copy of a draft of a convention, which in obedience to instructions from the Secretary of State of the United States, I respectfully submit for the consideration of the Danish Government. In the event that this proposal should be favorably received and substantially accepted by your excellency's Government, the Secretary of State desires me to inform you that he is prepared to sign it with the Danish Minister in Washington, who, he suggests, might be called authority to that end.

The considerations that make early action desirable have been fully discussed in my conversations with your excellency and Director General Krag on this subject; and I shall not at this time impress upon you the urgency of a speedy issue of the negotiations, lest I may appear discourteous or importunate. I am satisfied that you appreciate the circumstances as represented orally to you, and that you will expedite matters as much as is consistent with the nature and importance of the subject under discussion.

In his instructions to me, the Secretary of State refers to the cordial relations and the strong friendship subsisting between the two Governments, of which Denmark gave so conspicuous evidence in 1867 and which has since been testified in other ways; and he expresses the hope that the Danish Government will entertain the present proposal in the friendly spirit in which it is tendered.

MR. MINISTER: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note of the 20th instant, transmitting, by order of the Secretary of State of the United States, a copy of a draft of a convention which he proposes to conclude with His Majesty's Government for the cession of the Danish West Indies to the United States, a copy of which draft I had already received from His Majesty's Legation at Washington.

Conformably to the disposition previously manifested to give earnest consideration to a proposal from your Government for negotiations looking to the cession of the Danish West Indies, and in a spirit corresponding with the cordial relations subsisting between the two Governments, His Majesty's Government will give its most conscientious consideration to the submitted proposal.

As I have had the honor to inform you orally, his Majesty's Government, after a preliminary examination of the proposal as drafted by your Government, is constrained to reserve the right of proposing certain modifications therein; and it is of opinion that the negotiations on this subject can be conducted to the best advantage in Copenhagen, where all the desirable information bearing on the points of detail can be procured without delay. Though the negotiations will of necessity require some time, I beg you to inform the Secretary of State that, in accordance with his desire, I shall expedite the matter as much as its nature and importance will permit, endeavoring at the same time to preserve secrecy, though it will be necessary to acquaint a certain number of persons with the subject.

His Majesty's Government believes that it ought to comply with your request eventually to have the convention signed at Washington, if your Government persists in such desire.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your cipher cablegram of the 12th instant,⁷ and to confirm mine of the 16th instant,⁸ copies of which are enclosed herewith.

In my No. 150 of the 22d ultimo, I reported that the Minister of Foreign Affairs could take no definite action on your proposal before the Finance Committee of the Rigsdag had been further consulted regarding the terms of the convention and had given definite assurances of their assent to an eventual cession of the islands.

After some discussion of the matter, the committee in question addressed a written request to the Minister of Finance for certain information bearing on the contract and other obligations entered into by the Danish Government with the English West India and Panama Telegraph Company, the Floating Dock Company, at St. Thomas, and certain sugar factories. See my No. 150, of the 22d ultimo, with respect to these contracts, concessions and guarantees.

The desired information has not yet been furnished by the Minister of Finance; and hence the whole matter is in abeyance.

I have had frequent interviews with the Premier and the Minister of Foreign Affairs, and have made every effort consistent with courtesy and discretion to bring about definite action on the subject. The political conflicts in the Rigsdag have, however, during the present month, been of such all absorbing interest that the Danish West India question has been lost sight of.

As foreshadowed in my No. 154, of the 8th instant and reported in my cablegram as herewith,⁸ the disagreement between the Government and the Folkething has culminated in the resignation of the Ministry.

Though the resignation has not been made public, I know that it is in the hands of the King.

The proposed cession of the Antilles has in no manner contributed to the fall of the Ministry. There appears to be a strong sentiment in both branches of the Rigsdag in favor of such cession; and the Folkething, controlled by the opposition, is perhaps more favorable to it than is the Landsting.

⁷Printed ante.⁸Not printed.

The Premier and the Minister of Foreign Affairs are of opinion that the change of Ministry will have no other effect on the pending negotiations than to delay them somewhat.

The Rigsdag will likely adjourn about April 1; and unless summoned for an extra session, will not meet again till in October. As no elections intervene, it is thought that the attitude of the National Legislature on the West India question will undergo no change during the recess.

The Minister of Foreign Affairs believes that an extra session would be called for the purpose of taking action on the convention, as soon as it shall have been signed by the two Governments and ratified by the United States Senate. I consider the delay unfortunate.

There has been some agitation against selling the islands; and attempts have been made to arouse public sentiment against it on patriotic grounds. Meetings have been held, resolutions adopted, petitions circulated, etc. I enclose herewith a newspaper clipping,⁸ with translation, containing the text and the signatures of a petition of this nature. Most of the signers are men of prominence in the various walks of life; but the address has not made a strong impression on the Rigsdag or on the public.

What might be accomplished in this direction when the members of the Rigsdag return to their constituents, and especially if an extra session were to be called for dealing exclusively with this matter, I do not pretend to be able to foretell.

I am of opinion that the convention ought to be acted upon during the present session of the Rigsdag.

AMERICAN LEGATION,

SIR: Yesterday I had an interview with the new Minister of Foreign Affairs, Mr. Schested, in regard to continuing the negotiations for the cession of the Danish West Indies to the United States. He stated that he had not yet familiarized himself sufficiently with the subject to define his attitude definitely, but that he had already taken up the matter with a view of obtaining the necessary information for intelligent and businesslike action on the proposed convention. He admitted that he had at first been opposed to the sale of the islands on "lyrical grounds," but that a closer study of the conditions prevailing in these possessions had modified his views, and that sentiment would not influence him in dealing officially with the question. The agitation against the transfer had made more of an impression than he had looked for; but he thought that much of the opposition, which was largely the result of misrepresentations and lack of information, would disappear when the facts in the case became generally known. He had no knowledge of what action, if any, the Finance Committees of the Rigsdag had taken in the matter.

See my No. 158, of March 17, 1900. He added that as a matter of etiquette he should ascertain if the King had any desire to have the negotiations discontinued. * * * The public press has aired the fact that certain adventurers who have posed as official agents in this matter have been actuated only by selfish motives of pecuniary gain. Some of the members of the Rigsdag have had communication with these persons. In consequence, expressions are frequently heard to the effect that the honor and good name of the Danish Government and people have been compromised by disreputable persons who for the sake of notoriety and plunder have advertised to the world that the bankrupt Danish West Indies are on the market to be knocked down to the highest bidder, etc.

No. 172

AMERICAN LEGATION,

SIR: I have the honor to enclose herewith a copy, together with a translation, of a confidential note addressed to me by the Minister of Foreign Affairs, under date of the 18th instant relative to a cession of the Danish West Indies to the United States.

The new Ministry has devoted much time to an earnest and careful consideration of the conclusion that such cession is desirable and that the negotiations with the United States to that end ought to be continued. See in this connection my No. 158, of March 17 last, and my No. 166, of May 4th last.

Before entering the present Ministry some of the members were opposed to a transfer of the islands, and joined in signing the protest to the Rigsdag referred to in my No. 158, of March 17 last. Having been entrusted with the responsibilities of government, however, and having been called upon to make a thorough examination into the question, they take a more practical view of it; and the Ministry is now unanimous in its opinion that a sale is desirable. In an interview which I had with the Minister of Foreign Affairs yesterday, he took pains to assure me that the modifications requested by the Danish Government in the draft of convention submitted by the Government of the United States were not intended as a diplomatic move to break off negotiations, but as a frank and sincere effort to arrive at an agreement that would prove satisfactory, especially to the Rigsdag.

Popular agitation against the sale of the islands has ceased; and time has cooled the ardor of prospective reformers and promoters of enterprises looking to the revival of commerce between these colonies and the mother country.

The adventurers who have figured prominently in the newspaper interviews on this subject have lost their bearings, and will likely be less communicative for a while at least. Negotiations can now be conducted under more favorable conditions than a few months ago, as far as the Danish Government is concerned; and I trust that they may be carried to a successful termination.

The Minister of Foreign Affairs to Minister Swenson

MINISTRY OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS,

Copenhagen, June 18, 1900.

MR. MINISTER: From interviews which my predecessor as well as I have had the honor of having had with you, you are acquainted with the main view of the King's Government on the proposal for a cession of the Danish West Indies which accompanied your note of February 20, last. You are aware that the King's Government would feel justified in ceding these islands, which for so long a time have belonged to the Danish crown, only in case it felt assured that the islands and their inhabitants would by passing to the United States, a large country, situated near by, gain a position preferable to what they may look forward to if they are to continue in the possession of distant little Denmark.

This point of view the King's Government must adhere to; especially as it is not the intention to give the inhabitants an opportunity to express themselves for or against cession by submitting the question to a vote. The King's Government accordingly presupposes; first, that the inhabitants who do not choose, within a term reserved for that purpose, to preserve their status as Danish subjects shall obtain, as soon as the cession shall have been effected, the rights enjoyed by American citizens; second, that simultaneously with the cession, they shall be exempted from all customs duties in their relations with the United States, or obtain, in this respect, at least the same advantages recently accorded to Porto Rico, so that the duties on goods entering the United States shall be greatly reduced and after a short period of transition entirely abolished.

You are also aware of the fact that the King's Government, which does not wish to consider the cession of the islands as a mere commercial transaction, asks as compensation only an amount sufficient to reimburse the Danish Treasury for sums, with accrued interest, advanced to the colonial treasury of the islands, to the commune of St. Croix, and to the stock-company, The Sugar Factories of St. Croix; also, by capitalization, for pensions which in consequence of the cession, would have to be paid to the functionaries of the islands.

Such reimbursement would require a compensation of four million dollars; and it is doubtful if the Government can obtain the assent of the Rigsdag to the convention if the purchasing price is fixed at only three and one half million dollars. In any case such assent can not be secured unless an absolute guarantee can be given that the Danish Treasury will be liable for no obligations after the cession has been made.

The draft submitted by your Government provides that the islands shall be free from all encumbrances limiting the exercise of sovereignty. There are, as you know, a number of such encumbrances in the islands; notably, a monopoly exercised by the St. Thomas Floating Dock Company, a concession granted to a telegraph company, and a guarantee by the colonial treasury of a certain rate of interest to the stockholders of the sugar factories. More detailed information on this subject will be placed at your disposal if you so desire. Of such rights, duly acquired, the King's Government can not divest the possessors; as that would be a violation of the laws at present in force in the islands, and which presumably would continue in force, at least temporarily after an eventual cession.

The Government of the United States would, therefore, have to pledge itself to indemnify the Danish Treasury for claims that might be made against it by parties considering themselves damaged in consequence of the cession, in their rights of monopoly, privileges, concessions, the above mentioned guarantee, or similar claims. I feel confident that when the above considerations are brought to its attention, the Government of the United States will admit their justness, and in that case take them into consideration and submit a new project of a convention in conformity with the points developed above. Such project would be conscientiously considered by the King's Government as a basis for negotiations between the two Governments.

The Secretary of State to Minister Swenson

No. 109

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, November 16, 1900.

SIR: I have to acknowledge the receipt of your No. 172 of the 20th of June last, enclosing a confidential note of the Danish Minister of Foreign Affairs, of the 18th of the same month, in relation to the project of convention heretofore submitted by this Government for the session of the Danish West Indies to the United States.

The willingness of Denmark to transfer the islands to the United States, if satisfactory terms could be agreed on, having previously been intimated, the Minister of Foreign Affairs states that his Government would consider itself justified in making the cession only in case it felt an assurance that the islands and their inhabitants would gain an advantage by the transaction: that it must adhere to this position, especially as no vote of the inhabitants is to be taken: and consequently that certain modifications of the project of convention must be presupposed as a basis of negotiation. Should these modifications be made, it is declared that the new project will be conscientiously considered as a basis on which the two Governments may treat.

Fully appreciating the motive avowed by the Danish Government, and sharing its wishes for the welfare and prosperity of the islands and their inhabitants, this Government has carefully considered the proposed modifications, with a view to meet them in such a manner as to lead to a mutually satisfactory result.

The desired modifications which are four in number may be discussed seriatim.

1. The project heretofore submitted provides (Article III) that Danish subjects inhabiting the islands may, in case they remain there preserve their allegiance to the Crown of Denmark by making, within two years from the date of the exchange of ratifications of this convention, a declaration of their intention to preserve such allegiance, in default of which declaration they shall be held to have renounced it and to have elected allegiance to the United States.

The Danish Government asks that the inhabitants of the islands who do not within the designated term elect to remain Danish subjects "shall obtain, as soon as the cession shall have been effected, the rights enjoyed by American citizens."

It is believed that the wishes of the Danish Government may be fully met by so amending Article III as to make the clause in question read as follows:

In case they remain in the islands, they may preserve their allegiance to the Crown of Denmark by making within two years from the date of the exchange of the ratifications of this convention a declaration of their intention to preserve such allegiance, in default of which declaration they shall be held to have renounced it, and to have elected allegiance to the United States.

2. The second modification desired by Denmark is that it shall be provided that the islands shall be exempt from customs duties in their relations with the United States, or that they shall have at least the same advantages as were recently accorded to Porto Rico.

This modification if embodied in the treaty would limit and direct the legislative discretion of the Congress, which it is not practical to do. In point of fact, the ceded Danish islands would necessarily share in the administrative scheme of Porto Rico, to which they are adjacent, and it is not supposable that the Congress in legislating for their governance would impose unfavorable conditions upon them. Another reason for omitting a conventional stipulation in this regard is that the question of the commercial relations of our lately acquired islands to the Union as well as the citizenship of their inhabitants remains to be passed upon by the Supreme Court of the United States and the decision of that tribunal would be final and conclusive as to both legislative and administrative discretion.

3. The third modification relates to the amount of the pecuniary compensation desired by Denmark for the cession. The note states that Denmark desires only enough to reimburse the Treasury for sums with interest, advanced to the colonial treasury, to the commune of St. Croix, and to the stock company called The Sugar Factories of St. Croix, and to capitalize pensions which, in consequence of the cession, would have to be paid to the functionaries of the islands. It is said:

Such reimbursement would require a compensation of $4,000,000: and it is doubtful if the Government can obtain the assent of the Rigsdag to the convention if the purchasing price is fixed at only $3,500,000. In any case such assent cannot be secured unless an absolute guarantee can be given that the Danish Treasury will be liable for no obligations after the cession has been made.

The statement made in the last sentence will be considered in connection with the fourth modification, and we may now examine the grounds on which a pecuniary compensation of four million dollars is understood to be suggested.

As the Department is advised, the sums, with interest, described as advanced to the colonial treasury, to the commune of St. Croix, and to the stock company called The Sugar Factories of St. Croix, amounted at a recent date to 12,094,582.27 crowns, or, a Danish crown being equivalent to about 27 cents, to $3,030,000 approximately. But of this amount which is more than three fourths of the maximum compensation suggested, more than two thirds appear to be composed of three items, as follows: An item of 7,924,915.43 crowns, or about $1,982,000, described as moneys due the Danish Treasury from the West India colonial funds, an item of 567,366.72 crowns, with accumulated interest amounting to 340,419.90 crowns representing moneys lent by the Danish Treasury to St. Croix, and an item of 472,060 crowns, representing circulating West India credit bills. It is, moreover, understood that of late years the annual deficit has been about $140,000, with an annual accumulation of interest of more than $5,000.

The three items above described, which aggregate 9,304,762.05 crowns, equivalent to about $2,300,000, or considerably more than half the suggested maximum apparently represent merely sums which Denmark, as the sovereign of the islands, has been obliged to expend in their government, in consequence of a deficiency of colonial revenues; sums which, save in the sense of domestic bookkeeping, do not in any manner constitute a debt, or, with the possible exception of the comparatively small item of West India credit bills, involve any future liability. This being so, those items seem for the most part to bear no relation to the amount of compensation to be paid, unless as an argument for reducing it, for the cause of their existence being a deficiency of colonial revenue, it is obvious that they denote an apparent decrease in the value of the islands, and that, if adopted as the basis of compensation, they must, while steadily draining the Danish Treasury, soon render a cession of the islands impossible.

The whole amount due from The Sugar Factories of St. Croix, which is understood to be a private company conducting a central factory for the grinding of cane, is said to be 2,789,820.22 crowns. For this amount the Danish Government appears to hold securities, which would, it is assumed, if this Government should take upon itself any liability in the matter, be transferred to the United States.

The amount required for the capitalization of pensions has been placed at 4,662,000 crowns. This is, however, only a rough estimate, and it is probable that the amount is to a considerable extent within the control of the Danish Government. In the draft of budget for the municipality of St. Thomas and St. John for the year ending March 31, 1900, the total amount for pensions is $10,350.78, and, in the draft of budget for St. Croix $7,127.25. The amount for all the islands therefore was $17,478.03. This would represent, at a rate of interest as low as three per cent, a capital of about $582,601, so that, if 4,662,000 crowns were allowed on the score of pensions, almost an equal additional capital would be afforded for new pensions, even at the rate of three per cent. But with French three and a half per cents selling barely above par, and German Imperial threes at 86, three per cent is a very low rate to assume as the basis of capitalization.

4. The fourth modification relates to the proposal of the United States for the cession of an unencumbered sovereignty. The project submitted by this Government provided (Article I) that the sovereignty of Denmark should be ceded free and unincumbered by any grants, conditions, privileges or franchises in any way affecting or limiting the exercise of such sovereignty.

The note of the Minister of Foreign Affairs states that there are a number of such encumbrances in the islands, and particularly a monopoly exercised by the St. Thomas Floating Dock Company, a concession granted to a telegraph company, and a guarantee by the colonial treasury of a certain rate of interest to the stockholders of The Sugar Factories; that the King's Government cannot divest the possessors of these rights without a violation of law, and that the United States would have to pledge itself to indemnify the Danish Treasury in respect of claims which might be made against it by parties considering themselves damaged by the cession in their "rights of monopoly, privileges, concessions, the above mentioned guarantee or similar claims." The note also states that more detailed information on these matters will be furnished, if it be desired. Such information will be desired, if the United States should consent particularly to assume any obligation of the class in question, but it may be expedient without further delay to examine the subject in the light of information already furnished.

By the drafts of budget for the year ending March 31, 1899, and your No. 148 of February 22, 1900, it appears that the telegraph company referred to is the West India and Panama Telegraph Company, Limited. It appears that the original concession was made on February 12, 1869, and that a subsidy has lately been granted to the company for five years, till January 1, 1905, of $3,000 a year from the treasury of St. Thomas and St. John, and $1,000 a year from the treasury of St. Croix; in all, $4,000 annually for the term specified.

The St. Thomas Floating Dock Company obtained March 12, 1897, a grant for twenty-one years of a monopoly which gives it the right during that term to make charges and regulations in its business, but apparently entails no expense upon the government.

The guarantee of interest on the securities of The Sugar Factories of St. Croix is stated to have been given under the law of February 25, 1876, and the ordinance of June 16 of the same year. It seems that the Danish Government holds a mortgage on the property of the company to the amount of 1,414,784.57 crowns, and has guaranteed interest at the rate of five per cent on bonds to the amount of 1,070,000 crowns, and on preference shares to the amount of 345,000 crowns. The amount which the Government is required to expend under this guarantee apparently varies with the surplus earnings of the company overrunning expenses. The amount in the drafts of budget for 1899-1900 was $45,275.98. The surplus earnings of the company from 1877 to 1897, seems to have varied all the way from $1073.20 (1880-1881) to $94,243.13 (1883-1884) a year, the usual surplus being nearer the former sum than the latter. For 1896-1897, the last year for which figures have been given, it was $20,257.55. It appears therefore that the guarantee in question involves a real and substantial pecuniary liability.

In view of this liability and of the subsidy pledged to the telegraph company, and in view also of the fact that the greater part of the maximum pecuniary compensation suggested by Denmark represents an item which so far as it has any relation to the subject, bears an inverse ratio to the value of the islands, this Government, whose offer of $3,500,000 presupposed the transfer of a free and unencumbered sovereignty, is of opinion that, if it should assume the obligations which the Danish Government has specified, it should not pay that Government more than $3,250,000 in cash, and it is also of opinion that, if it should expressly assume those obligations, which, as they are the only ones that Denmark has mentioned, presumably are all that exist, it should not suggest the setting up of groundless demands, to the annoyance of both Governments by inserting in the treaty a general and indefinite engagement to indemnify Denmark against the claims of those who may imagine themselves to have been damaged by the cession. And it is to be understood that the offer of $3,000,000 is made on the assumption that the obligations in question will not upon investigation prove to be more onerous than they now appear to be. On the other hand the United States would undertake to pay, for a cession unencumbered by pecuniary obligations, the sum of $3,750,000.

A draft of a convention, in which the former alternative is embodied, is herewith enclosed.^a It may readily be so altered as to give effect instead to the second alternative, of a larger cash payment for a sovereignty free from pecuniary obligations, should Denmark prefer that plan.

You are directed immediately to present the whole subject to the Danish Government in the sense of this instruction, and to report fully your proceedings, together with all the pertinent information that you may be able to obtain.

Three and one quarter millions is the lesser alternative sum. Alter instructions to agree.

As to Article III, we believe all that Denmark desires in favor of inhabitants remaining under our flag will be accomplished by the original proposal to permit election of allegiance to the United States.

It is the natural converse of the permission to elect retention of Danish allegiance. If however, Denmark insists on a formula which shall put the inhabitants electing American allegiance on the same footing as Porto Ricans, you may suggest inclusion of the appropriate clause found in Article 9 of our treaty of peace with Spain as follows:

The civil rights and political status of the inhabitants of the Islands hereby ceded to the United States shall be determined by the Congress.

The Minister of Foreign Affairs to Minister Swenson

MINISTRY OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS,
Copenhagen, February 21, 1901.

MR. MINISTER: In connection with my preliminary note in which I acknowledged the receipt of your communication of November 29 last, I have the honor to request that you be good enough to inform the honorable Secretary of State at Washington that the King's Government has considered most carefully the amended draft of a convention for the cession of the Danish West Indies to the United States submitted by your Government.

After such examination the King's Government is still unable to consider as satisfactory the stipulations contained in the projects regarding the rights guaranteed to the inhabitants of the islands as well as the amount of the consideration offered; and in consequence it does not dare to hope that it would be able to obtain the consent of the Rigsdag to the amended draft of convention.

^a Not printed.

Regarding the first point, the Government, which is unable to see any real change in the clauses in question contained in Article III of the new project, does not think that it ought to accept a less favorable condition for the inhabitants of the islands now than was assured them by Article 3 of the convention of October 24, 1867, whereby they were given the option of preserving their former allegiance to the crown of Denmark or acquire the rights of citizens of the United States. In this connection the Government must insist on securing for the islands free trade with the United States; as it seems natural that in this respect they ought to be given a position identical with that secured to Porto Rico after March 1 next year. Regarding the compensation offered, the Government first begs to observe that this is not to be considered as a purchasing sum for which the United States would eventually acquire the claims and demands which the Danish Government at present possesses the right to enforce against the colonial treasuries; inasmuch as it is the desire to rid the islands of this debt and their consequent cramped situation, without necessitating a loss on the part of the Danish Treasury of the sums that it has loaned or advanced to the colonial treasuries, and thereby make a better financial and economic future for the islands possible, that after all, should induce Denmark to transfer these islands to a foreign Government. The Government must therefore expressly guard against the possibility of eventually construing the wording of Article I, "This cession conveys to the United States the said islands and appurtenances in full and entire sovereignty, with all the dominion, rights, and powers, which Denmark now possesses and can exercise in them . . .," to import that the financial claims now held by Denmark against the colonial treasuries had been transferred to the United States. Though the Government of the King believes itself in full accord with the Government of the United States on this point, it being assumed that the latter agrees with the former in regard to this matter, it nevertheless considers it desirable in order to avoid possible misunderstanding and to reassure the inhabitants of the islands, that this view should be expressly embodied in the text of the convention, so that it should be stipulated that in the event of the transfer of the islands the colonial treasuries were to be considered released from their debts and obligations to the Danish Government Treasury.

In placing the amount of the consideration at four million dollars, the Government has taken into consideration not only the loans and advances made by the Danish Treasury, but also all the various obligations and encumbrances that would devolve upon said treasury in consequence of a cession. It has accordingly, among other things, found it necessary to have in view the fact that it would be compelled to seek the consent of the Rigsdag to effecting an arrangement with the joint-stock company St. Croix Fallessukkerkogerier (Cooperative Sugar Factories of St. Croix) whereby that company would relinquish its claims to the 5% interest guaranteed it by the colonial treasury of St. Croix. In order that the principal object of an eventual session may be realized—namely to secure for the islands a happier future and a better economic development than they have enjoyed heretofore and for which a release of the colonial treasuries from their present burdensome obligations must be considered necessary—and in order that the Danish State Treasury may receive full compensation for the sacrifices already made as well as for eventual future obligations; the consideration must, in the opinion of the Government be placed at four million dollars.

In addition, it would have to be agreed by the two Governments that while in that event the colonial treasury would have to continue to discharge its pecuniary obligations towards the West India and Panama Telegraph Company as a compensation for the maintenance by said company of telegraphic communication between the islands and the surrounding world, the Government would have to seek the consent of the Rigsdag to releasing the colonial treasury of St. Croix from its present obligations towards the Danish State Treasury and to an arrangement whereby said colonial treasury would be released from its guarantee of interest to the stockholders in the St. Croix Fallessukkerkogerier, which consent would have to be secured before the conclusion of an eventual convention. The United States would, on the other hand, bind itself to respect the concession granted to the Floating Dock Company of St. Thomas March 12, 1897, in accordance with the terms of which no other floating dock can be built in that harbor within 21 years of said date or any slips for ships of more than 200 tons, excepting the one now existing, whose enlargement the company's monopoly shall not hinder.

In case the accession of the United States Government to the amendments of the draft as indicated above should be secured, I beg to call attention to some minor modifications that would have to be made in the convention.

To Article II, clause 1, it is desired to add: "The public foundations shall continue to be applied in conformity with their destination." [English text in note.] The sums in question which amount to $78,108.21 in St. Croix and to $100,941.84 in St. Thomas and St. John, are applied mostly for the benefit of the poor, partly to encourage labor immigration. To clause II of the same article it is desired to add to the words, "Sums due to the Danish Treasury by individuals," the words, "including property taken over by the Danish Treasury for sums due to the same by individuals," inasmuch as it seems natural that the plantations that the State Treasury has had to take possession of as creditor should not be included in the transfer.

These plantations, which are located on St. Croix are entered on the books for $47,946.17.

To article III it is desired to add a provision that Danish subjects not living in the islands but owning property there shall not in any way be affected in their property rights by a cession.

Finally it is desired to add the following words to article IV: "Their arms as well as the military stores existing in the said territory or islands are not included in the cession."

No. 193

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Copenhagen, March 11, 1901.

SIR: You will have observed from the note transmitted to you with my No. 190, of the 23rd ultimo, regarding the sale of the Danish West Indies, that the modifications therein proposed were to a great extent inspired by the Danish Rigsdag. A number of communications regarding this matter were exchanged between the finance committees of the two houses of that body and the Foreign Office, with the result that the Minister of Foreign Affairs considered it advisable to propose certain changes in the amended draft submitted to him last November. The present Ministry is politically weak, being opposed by a large and aggressive majority in the lower house of the Rigsdag and being supported only in a half-hearted way by a faction within its own party sufficiently large to reduce its majority to one or two votes in the upper house whenever important differences in political policy arise.

As a result of this condition, the Ministry is lacking in self-confidence and in courage to take the initiative in important matters. It is therefore natural that it should manifest a strong tendency to defer to the Rigsdag even on what may seem nonessential points of detail in conducting the negotiations for the sale of the Danish West Indies. There is a dreaded apprehension on the part of the Ministry lest the Rigsdag might try to embarrass the Government for political purposes after an eventual convention should have been signed. To forestall this, the Rigsdag is asked in advance what terms it would consider satisfactory in the event of a sale.

I am acquainted with the contents of the correspondence referred to above; and I am kept well informed of what the members of the Ministry, the members of the Rigsdag, and other persons of influence, say and do privately regarding this matter.

The modifications considered most important by the Rigsdag are those concerning the rights and political status of the inhabitants after an eventual cession, and the customs relations between the islands and the United States. The Foreign Office realized the difficulties of embodying provisions on the latter point in the treaty. It is, however, important that this subject be covered fully in the correspondence exchanged, and that such assurances as can be given in the line desired by the Danish Government be made in a manner that would tend to satisfy the Rigsdag.

In former dispatches, I have spoken of the King's attitude regarding a cession of the islands. He dislikes to part with them; but feels that the offer of the United States ought to be accepted, if the transfer can be made on such conditions that the best interests of the inhabitants will be subserved thereby.

This is also the view of the Ministry and a majority of the Rigsdag. The finance committees of the Rigsdag have committed themselves to a sale, on the conditions set forth in the note from the Minister of Foreign Affairs referred to above. You will, therefore, see the importance of acceding to as many of the proposed changes in the draft as possible.

It would be well if an answer from the United States Government could reach the Foreign Office before the dissolution of the present Rigsdag, which will probably occur the first week in April.

Prominent business men are quietly trying to induce the Government to break off the negotiations; and are proposing plans whereby, with the cooperation of the Rigsdag, they would make an effort to improve the economic and commercial conditions of the islands.

The general manager of the East Asiatic Steamship Company, Mr. Anderson, is especially active in this work. Admiral Richelieu, who is soon expected to return from Spain, whose navy he is said to have built up, and who has been a prominent political and commercial factor there for a number of years, is also exerting his influence to further this plan. He will in the near future be elected President of the United Steamship Company, one of the largest navigation companies in the world.

Director Gluckstadt of Landmandsbanken, is also associated with these men. * * *

Some of these men recently held a secret meeting with members of the Finance Committees of the Rigsdag, to impress their views upon them and to interest them sufficiently in their plans to secure the desired appropriations for supporting private initiative in the direction indicated above. I have learned what transpired in this meeting. Nothing of importance was accomplished.

The Rigsdag appears to be of the opinion that sacrifices enough have already been made by the Danish Treasury for the benefit of the islands; and that if anything further is to be done, it will have to be undertaken by private initiative, unaided by financial support on the part of the Government.

Mr. Anderson expresses entire confidence in his ability to formulate a plan for the improvement of the islands that will meet with the approval of the Rigsdag; in which event the Minister of Foreign Affairs will feel constrained to break off the negotiations now being conducted between the United States and Denmark.

I think he is somewhat sanguine and overconfident in his ability to accomplish all this; nevertheless it is one of the factors we have to reckon with.

The Minister of Foreign Affairs is a little apprehensive lest the Folkething might suddenly change front on the question for political reasons.

The above, which gives the situation as it is at present, may help to enlighten you on one or two points.

LAURITS S. SWENSON

The Secretary of State to Minister Swenson

No. 111

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, March 26, 1901.

SIR: I have given careful consideration to the views of the Danish Minister for Foreign Affairs in regard to the bases of a treaty for the cession of the Danish West Indies to the United States, as set forth in his excellency's note to you of 21. February last, copy and translation of which accompanied your despatch No. 190 of the 23d of the same month.

On most of the points advanced by his excellency I am happy to find myself either in agreement, or in a position to concede the requests of the Danish Government, leaving two matters as to which complete concession on the part of the United States is not practicable at present, for reasons hereinafter stated, to wit: the civil status of the inhabitants of the ceded territories, and the commerical relations of the islands with the United States. The points upon which material accord is reached are, however, so vital to the negotiation, and so conclusive in removing the substantial obstacles which have heretofore existed to a satisfactory outcome that I entertain the belief that the way is now open for the acceptance by Denmark of the modified draft hereto appended, in which I have incorporated the essential changes suggested by M. de Schested.

In considering these amendments it will be convenient to follow the order in which they appear in the present draft.

ARTICLE I. The following change has been made at the end of the first paragraph:

comprising in said cession all title and claim of title to the territories in and about said islands over which the Crown of Denmark now exercises, asserts or claims jurisdiction.

This phraseology follows the language of the convention recently concluded between the United States and Spain to remedy a textual defect in the description in ceded Philippine Archipelago which was found to exist in the Treaty of Peace of December 10, 1898. It is believed to be a more convenient and practical definition of the cession than the formula employed in the earlier draft.

In the second paragraph of the same article the ceded sovereignty is further defined as "unincumbered" since it appears from the Danish presentment of the facts and arguments which, in its view, warrant and require the assessment of the compensation at four million dollars, that the sovereignty is in fact intended to pass without incumbrance on the part of the insular treasuries to the United States, and without the assumption by the United State of pecuniary obligations, whether at the insular treasuries or to other parties.

The statement of M. de Schested as to the propriety of excluding any interpretation whereby the United States might eventually acquire and enforce the claims and demands which the Danish Government at present possesses the right to enforce against the colonial treasuries, coincides with the desire and purpose of the United States in this regard. It is our wish to acquire the islands free from all debt and incumbrance whatsoever, a wish which would not be realized were the burdens under which they now labor merely assigned to the United States. As it appears to be his excellency's view that doubt might arise on this point, I have added to the wording of the second paragraph of Article I the following proviso:

It being however understood and agreed that the consummation of said cession does not import the transference to the United States of the financial claims now held by Denmark against the colonial treasuries of the islands, but that the colonial treasuries are to be considered released from their debts and obligations to the Treasury of the Danish Government, and, it is, moreover, understood and agreed, that the United States will assume and continue to discharge from the time of the cession the current obligations heretofore contracted by the Danish Government towards the St. Thomas Floating Dock Company, and the West India and Panama Telegraph Company, the Danish Government transferring to the United States any pledges or securities which it may hold for its protection or reimbursement in respect to said companies.

With respect to the concluding passage of this proviso, it is the understanding of the United States that no incumbrance, governmental or financial, devolves upon the United States or attaches to the islands in connection with either of the corporations named.

The current arrangements with those companies pass with the transfer of sovereignty, the United States enjoying the rights and privileges heretofore enjoyed by Denmark, as regards the use of the dock and the business of the telegraph companies, while the companies remain responsible to us instead of Denmark for the observance of their obligations to the State. As a fact, much the same thing has taken place with regard to telegraphic and other cessions in Puerto Rico and the Philippine Islands, and, if my understanding of the relation between the companies named and the Danish Government be correct, I see no objection to meeting the views of his excellency in relation.

ARTICLE II. The concluding suggestion of his excellency's note, that the arms of the Danish troops and the military stores in the said territory or islands shall not be included in the cession of the islands, has my entire acquiescence. In giving it conventional shape, however, it has seemed to me to be convenient to incorporate it as a proviso to the first paragraph of Article II, and in doing so I have followed the general lines of the similar stipulation contained in the Treaty of Peace between the United States and Spain, wording it as follows:

It being however agreed that the arms and military stores existing in the islands at the time of the cession and belonging to the Government of Denmark shall remain the property of that Government and may be removed by it within six months from the date of the exchange of ratifications of this convention, but in the meantime the Government of the United States shall have the option to purchase said arms and military stores upon satisfactory agreement with the Government of Denmark to that end.

I recognize the weight of M. de Schested's proposal that there be added to Article II a proviso that sums due to the Danish Government by individuals shall cover property taken over by the Danish

Treasury for sums due to the same by individuals. In as much, however, as the described plantations on the Island of St. Croix, which have been taken over by the Danish Treasury as security for loans to the planters to the amount of $47,946.17 could hardly be expected to remain the property of the Danish Crown under the changed sovereignty of the territory, it has seemed expedient to give to the proviso the following form:—

And where the Danish Government shall at the time of the cession hold property taken over by the Danish Treasury for sums due by individuals, such property shall not pass by this cession, but the Danish Government shall sell or dispose of such property and remove its proceeds within _____ months from the date of the exchange of ratifications of this convention.

ARTICLE III. After earnest consideration of the view of the Danish Government that the political status of the inhabitants of the ceded islands shall be defined as in Article III of the convention of October 24, 1867 so that they shall be given the option of acquiring the rights of citizens of the United States, I am unable to concede the point to the extent contemplated in M. de Schested's note. In view of the pendency of judicial decisions with regard to the status of the inhabitants of the territories lately ceded by Spain to the United States, and in view of the fact firmly established under our Constitution that the Congress alone has the power to prescribe rules of naturalization, it is found impracticable to embody any express provision to that end in a treaty, the making of which is an executive, not a legislative function. The contingency of legislation to prescribe the civil and political status of the inhabitants of the Danish Islands should properly be recognized in the pending negotiation no less than it is recognized as an existing fact with respect to the inhabitants of Puerto Rico. It is to be borne in mind that the Danish Islands are closely adjacent to Puerto Rico, and every geographical, economical and political consideration points to their being embraced in the same measure of privilege as Puerto Rico, not only as relates to the civil status of the inhabitants but as to their commercial advantages; and this appears to be the expectation of the Danish Government. Desirous of meeting the Danish view as far as possible, I am prepared to modify Article III and provide that the inhabitants of the islands accepting allegiance to the United States may be admitted to the nationality thereof on such terms as may be provided according to the laws of the United States, the determination of their civil rights and political status being left to the Congress. In this sense the relevant part of Article III has been recast as follows:

In case they remain in the islands they may preserve their allegiance to the Crown of Denmark by making before a court of record, within two years from the date of the exchange of ratifications of this treaty a declaration of their decision to preserve such allegiance—in default of which declaration they shall be held to have renounced it, and to have accepted allegiance to the United States, but such election of Danish allegiance shall after the lapse of said term of two years, be a bar to their renunciation of their preserved Danish allegiance and their election of allegiance to the United States and admission to the nationality thereof on the same terms as may be provided according to the laws of the United States, for other inhabitants of the islands.

The civil rights and the political status of the native inhabitants of the islands shall be determined by the Congress.

Should the Danish Government raise objection to the foregoing last two lines, you may assent to their omission, pointing out that the antecedent clause admission to the nationality thereof on the same terms as may be provided according to the laws of the United States for other inhabitants of the islands conveys substantially the same meaning, but in acquiescing in such omission you should give M. de Schested to understand that we are unable to suggest or admit any substitutionary provision of different import.

It will be noticed that a clause is added, providing for the subsequent acquisition of the nationality of the United States by any Danish subject who may have elected Danish allegiance under the general provision of the article. This is put forward as a convenient concession to Danish interests in the islands but if His Majesty's Government should not think it necessary, it may be omitted.

The proposal to add to Article III a provision that Danish subjects not living in the islands but owning property there shall not in any way be affected in their property rights by the cession, is cordially accepted. This Government can see no good reason for discriminating between insulars electing Danish allegiance and residence while retaining their insular property rights unimpaired, and native Danes owning insular property. The suggested proviso has accordingly been added in the following words:

Danish subjects not residing in the islands but owning property therein at the time of the cession shall retain their rights of property, including the right to sell or dispose of such property, being placed in this regard on the same basis as the Danish subjects residing in the islands and remaining therein or removing therefrom, to whom the first paragraph of this article relates.

ARTICLE IV remains unchanged.

ARTICLE V. In consideration of the statements made in the note of the Minister of Foreign Affairs in regard to the nature and amount of the financial obligations entailed upon the Danish Treasury by an unincumbered cession, and particularly in view of the exposition of the relation of the Cooperative Sugar Factories of the St. Croix to the Danish Government and the necessity of procuring the sanction of the Rigsdag to the annulment of the charter of that corporation, this Government is willing as a final concession, to increase its maximum offer to the sum asked by Denmark, to wit, $4,000,000; in the understanding that this sum is in full consideration for a free and unincumbered cession.

I do not understand that the "public foundations" to which his excellency refers, (amounting to $78,108 in St. Croix and to $100,-941.84 in St. Thomas and St. John) are incumbrances upon the sovereignty or title of the islands which the United States Government is asked to assume. They would appear to be akin to our incorporated charities. If so, there is no discernable ground for their diversion from their charitable purpose.

Their continuance would appear to be a proper subject for regulation by the future municipal government of the islands, and this, following the Puerto Rican precedent will doubtless have ample powers to deal with them for the benefit of the poor, and to apply their proceeds as now. It would not be practicable for this Government to legislate upon the matter by treaty, and moreover, the circumstance that the foundations in question are partly applied "to encourage labor emigration" would make it impossible for the United States to intervene to apply the funds in any way, for our contract labor laws would be a bar to doing so. I am obliged therefore to omit the said foundations from consideration in estimating the sum to be paid. In fixing that sum at four million dollars, you must be careful to make it clear that our maximum limit is reached, and that this is done only in consideration of the cession of the islands, "in full, entire, and unincumbered sovereignty" as now stated in Article V.

All of the points presented in M. de Schested's note have thus been passed in review, and in great part incorporated in the accompanying amended draft.⁸ The proposal that the convention shall regulate the future trade relations of the islands with the United States deserves, however, more extended notice than is above given to it.

M. de Schested says:

In this connection the Government must insist on securing for the islands free trade with the United States; as it seems natural that in this respect they ought to be given a position identical with that secured to Puerto Rico after March 1 next year.

I quite agree with his excellency, that it is natural for the economic and tariff systems of the islands to be on a footing similar to those of Puerto Rico. Unless a separate scheme of government should be adopted for the Danish group, which is deemed unlikely, it is almost a certainty that their administration will be, in the regular course of events, on a parity with that of the neighboring territory of Puerto Rico. It will be seen from the third section of the Puerto Rico Civil Government and Revenue Act approved April 12, 1900, that the trade relations between Puerto Rico and the United States are predicated upon the capacity of that island for self-supporting local administration. It is therein provided that whenever the legislative assembly of Puerto Rico shall have enacted and put into operation a system of local taxation to meet the necessities of the government of Puerto Rico by this Act established, and shall by resolution duly passed so notify the President he shall make proclamation thereof, and thereupon all tariff duties on merchandise and articles going into Puerto Rico from the United States or coming into the United States from Puerto Rico shall cease, and from and after such date all such merchandise and articles shall be entered at the several ports of entry free of duty, so that the contingency is contemplated of free trade between Puerto Rico and the United States being instituted even earlier than the first day of March 1902, after which date it is provided that in no event shall any duties be collected on merchandise and articles going into Puerto Rico from the United States or coming into the United States from Puerto Rico.

The present civil and economic conditions of Puerto Rico are very encouraging, and promise full justification of the measure so enacted. Freed from the excessive burdens of the past, and with the added stimulus to internal development and productiveness which results from the new order of things, Puerto Rico is today virtually autonomous in financial and municipal matters. It is not to be expected that the Danish Islands, in entering upon a new epoch, freed from burdens not so weighty as those of Puerto Rico, endowed with equal or even greater natural resources, and peopled by a community used to orderly self-control and possessed of sound business methods, will lag behind the adjacent Spanish American possession in proving their aptitude to enjoy and rightly use as full a measure of privilege as their neighbor.

It is the belief of this Government, amounting to a certainty, that this will prove to be the fact, and that it will soon be practicable to give to the Danish Islands all the privileges of Puerto Rico. It will be the earnest effort of this Government to bring this about, as a fitting and just treatment of the important civil and economical questions involved in the cession of those islands to the United States. It is however impossible to forestall legislation in this regard.

I trust these views will commend themselves to the Danish Government, and that it will be convinced that it is the paramount desire of the United States to contribute in every possible way to the welfare of the islands and their people in the event of the cession being consummated. To that end, we are prepared to go to all possible lengths in making such conventional engagements as lie within the competence of the treaty making power; feeling assured that the legislative power, which has done adequate justice to the needs of Puerto Rico, will do no less toward the neighboring and equally favorably circumstanced Danish Islands.

You will take an early occasion to lay these views before the Government of His Majesty the King, and to ask favorable consideration of the amended project herewith transmitted.

EXCELLENCY: Referring to your excellency's note of February 21, last, a copy of which was communicated to the Secretary of State, I now have the honor to transmit herewith a copy of his reply thereto with an amended draft of convention for an eventual cession of the Danish West Indies to the United States.

Your excellency's views and proposals regarding the bases for such convention are so fully discussed in the enclosures herewith that I deem it superfluous to make any supplementary comment or explanation at this time.

You will observe that it is the earnest desire of my Government to arrive at an early agreement on this subject. In the dispatch herewith, the Secretary of State gives frank and cordial expression to a disposition to yield on as many points as possible and to accede to the requests of the Danish Government as far as practicable; and he gives proof thereof by incorporating in the amended draft the essential changes suggested by your excellency.

Feeling confident that your excellency's Government will reciprocate the spirit in which this whole matter is now presented, I respectfully submit the amended project herewith for your early and favorable consideration.

SIR: Referring to my No. 200, of the 8th instant, I now have the honor to enclose herewith a copy, together with a translation, of a note, addressed to me by the Minister of Foreign Affairs, under date of the 15th instant, in reply to mine of April 8th.

In recent interviews, the Minister of Foreign Affairs and the Director General of the Foreign Office have informed me that the amended draft of convention, as well as your instructions to me, has made a most favorable impression upon the Ministry. Regret is however, expressed at the inability of the United States Government to accede to the requests of the Danish Government regarding the civil status of the inhabitants of the ceded territories, and the commercial relations of the islands with the United States.

The force of your explanations on these points is conceded; and yet the Danish Government seems reluctant to recede from its demands touching these two matters. I believe, nevertheless, that further discussion will result in the acceptance of the amended draft substantially as now submitted.

The Minister of Foreign Affairs has already taken preliminary steps towards arriving at a satisfactory agreement with the St. Croix Sugar Factories.

[Inclosure—Translation]

The Minister of Foreign Affairs to Minister Swenson

MINISTRY OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS,
Copenhagen, June 29, 1901.

MR. MINISTER: The Government of His Majesty the King having now considered the new project of a convention for the cession of the Danish West Indies to the United States which accompanied your note of April 8 last, I have the honor to request that you communicate the following to his excellency the honorable Secretary of State at Washington:

In re Article I. His Majesty's Government has nothing to object to the modification proposed by the Government of the United States, and according to which the ending of the first part of said article would be worded as follows: "Comprising in said cession all title and claim of title to the territories in and about said islands over which the Crown of Denmark now exercises, asserts, or claims jurisdiction."

His Majesty's Government also accepts the second part of said article, as worded in the new draft. It would, however, recommend the following modifications: For the words, "but that the colonial treasuries are to be considered released from their debts and obligations to the Treasury of the Danish Government," the following words are to be substituted: "It being agreed that these claims are altogether extinguished in consequence of the cession"; for the words, "the current obligations heretofore contracted by the Danish Government," the following words are to be substituted: "The obligations heretofore incumbent upon the Danish Government." Finally, inasmuch as His Majesty's Government holds no pledges or securities for its protection or reimbursement in respect to the two companies mentioned in said article, it would propose that the following words be omitted: "The Danish Government transferring to the United States any pledges or securities which it may hold for its protection or reimbursement in respect to said companies."

In re Article II. Inasmuch as the Government of the United States finds itself unable to accept the proposal of His Majesty's Government that a proviso be inserted in the first paragraph of this Article stipulating that the pious legacies shall continue to be applied in conformity with their purpose; His Majesty's Government recedes from the proposal in question, being convinced that the Government of the United States admits that, inasmuch as the public funds can not be considered as property belonging to the Danish Government, they would not pass to the Government of the United States by virtue of Paragraph 1, Article II. His Majesty's Government accepts the proposal to incorporate in the concluding part of Paragraph 1 of this article the proviso regarding arms, etc., and proposes the following wording: "It being, however, agreed that the arms and military stores existing in the islands at the time of the cession and belonging to the Government of Denmark shall remain the property of that Government and shall, as soon as circumstances will permit, be removed by it, unless they, or parts thereof, may before have been bought by the Government of the United States, upon a special agreement made with the Government of Denmark, it being, however, understood that flags and colors, uniforms and such arms or military objects as are marked as being the property of the Danish Government shall not be included in such purchase." In Paragraph 2 of said article His Majesty's Government proposes to substitute for the words, "the Lutheran Congregation," the words, "the Congregations belonging to the Danish National Church." Considering the terms of 12 months too short, His Majesty's Government further proposes to substitute for the concluding lines of said article, after the words, "but the Danish Government shall sell or dispose of such property and remove its proceeds," the following words: "Within two years from the date of the exchange of ratifications of this convention, the United States Government being entitled to sell by public auction to the credit of the Danish Government what might not have been sold before expiration of the said term of two years."

In re Article IV. His Majesty's Government proposes to add at the conclusion of this article: "But not later than six months after the said exchange; it being, however, understood that if those persons, after having quitted the Danish service, do not wish to leave the islands, they shall be allowed to remain there as civilians."

In re Articles V and VI. His Majesty's Government has nothing to say.

In re Article III. I have reserved Article III for the last, as it calls for more extended observations. I would first remark, with reference to the text, that the sense would seem to require that the words, "in case they remain in the islands," be placed higher up. His Majesty's Government, accordingly, proposes that in paragraph 1 of said article the words, "and in case they remain in the islands, they shall enjoy," be substituted for the words, "and they shall also enjoy." In case of such change, it would become necessary to insert at the beginning of paragraph 2 of said article the words, "those who remain in the islands, may further preserve," in place of the words, "in case they remain in the islands, they may preserve." As regards the scope of the rights which it is the object of this article to define, I regret to observe that the Government of the United States did not see its way clear to accede to the proposal to embody in the convention provisions regarding the customs relations of the islands and the rights of the inhabitants after an eventual cession. You are familiar, Mr. Minister, with the views of His Majesty's Government in this matter. When the Government, at the beginning of the negotiations, declared itself disposed to agree to an eventual cession of the Danish West Indies, it was because of the desire to secure for them a more prosperous and a happier development than was thought possible under a union with Denmark. It was, accordingly, considered a matter of prime importance, with respect to the islands as a whole as well as to the individual inhabitants thereof, that the obstacles which at present hinder a favorable economic development be removed, without in any way depriving the inhabitants of the economic privileges and rights which they now enjoy. With respect to the islands as a whole it is of special importance that the colonial treasuries be released from their present obligations which are burdensome to the inhabitants of the islands; and at the same time the Government revenues be retained and, if possible increased, without increasing the taxes. With respect to the inhabitants, the aim ought to be to lighten, as much as possible, the burdens resulting from present conditions. As regards the first point, I learn with satisfaction that the Government of the United States fully shares the view of His Majesty's Government, that in the event of a cession, the colonial treasuries should be considered released from their debts and obligations to the Danish Government.

I may add here that the Danish Minister of Finance has entered upon negotiations with the stock company St. Croix Fallessukkerkøgerier, with a view to releasing the colonial treasuries from their obligations and guarantees to the stockholders. But even under such circumstances it would be difficult to bring about a balance in the receipts and expenditures of the colonial treasuries.

Leaving out of consideration the interest on the debt to the Danish Treasury and the amount required to liquidate the obligations to the stockholders referred to above, the budget for the Island of St. Croix for the fiscal year 1900-1901 shows as against total receipts of scarcely 155,000 dollars total expenditures of about 200,000 dollars. Eighty-five thousand dollars, or nearly 55% of the receipts is derived from customs dues (65,000 dollars import taxes and 20,000 dollars export taxes). It will thus be seen that the colonial treasuries can not dispense with the customs receipts nor readily replace them with other taxes; inasmuch as the receipts and expenditures can in all probability not be made to balance, without imposing a new tax, even if the present sources of revenue are retained, and the expenses are somewhat reduced. On the other hand, one of the principal advantages expected from a union between the islands and the United States was that their principal products, especially sugar, would be admitted to the markets of the United States free of duty or, in any event, with a considerable reduction of duty. How to surmount this difficulty and how to arrange the custom relations in a manner satisfactory to both parties is one of the questions that is giving concern to His Majesty's Government; and it would be grateful if the Government of the United States likewise would consider how this matter might be best arranged, and submit a proposition to His Majesty's Government on this subject.

With respect to the civil status of the inhabitants, His Majesty's Government begs first to call attention to the fact that the organic law now in force insures them a large measure of autonomy in the administration of local affairs; and that they also possess Danish nationality and in consequence enjoy all the civil and political rights flowing from such l'indigénat, in case they establish their domicile within the Kingdom proper. His Majesty's Government also invites attention to the fact that not only did the convention of October 24, 1867, between Denmark and the United States, assure to the inhabitants of the islands in the event of a cession United States citizenship, but that Article 2 of the Treaty of Commerce, Amity and Navigation of April 26, 1826, between Denmark and the United States, which still remains in force, provides by Article II that Danish subjects in the United States shall "enjoy all the rights, privileges, and exemptions in navigation and commerce which native citizens or subjects do or shall enjoy, submitting themselves to the laws, decrees, and usages there established to which native citizens or subjects are submitted." Turning to the project submitted by your Government, we find that it is proposed, on this point, that the Danish subjects born in the islands or permanently residing there shall be "subject to such laws as are applicable to other foreigners." This provision would, without doubt, be regarded with much disfavor in the islands; inasmuch as the inhabitants that acquired domicile in the United States would be less favorably situated than they now are, under the provisions of the above named treaty (1826); while those remaining in the islands would not obtain United States citizenship. The foremost purpose had in view by His Majesty's Government in the event of a cession, is, to secure a more favorable economic condition for the islands, without, at the same time, placing the inhabitants under less favorable conditions in other respects than they now enjoy, His Majesty's Government realizes that the limited area of the islands as well as the small population renders it inexpedient to organize them into a separate state or a separate territory. On the other hand, it is feared that their incorporation in one of the States or Territories of the Union would exclude the inhabitants from exerting any influence in the administration of their local affairs, unless they had obtained guarantees in that respect by means of special stipulations. (Whether and how it would be possible to arrive at an arrangement that would be satisfactory for the inhabitants is a question which, under the circumstances, the Government of the King is not in a position to solve.) Your Government, however, may be able to find a satisfactory solution. At all events, His Majesty's Government did not wish to omit pointing out that the project of the convention will have to be modified in the sense indicated; so that the inhabitants would continue, after the cession and until otherwise ordained, to enjoy the private as well as the municipal and religious rights accorded them under the laws now in force in the islands; and that if these laws should be changed they would, with respect to these rights, be treated as citizens and subjects of the United States. Not yet having received a copy of the decisions recently rendered by the Supreme Court of the United States, in which the questions referred to above were involved, and not knowing whether the Government of the United States intends to solve these questions by means of a general law, and if so, what kind of law, His Majesty's Government does not find itself in a position to submit a text for Article III that would have due regard to the considerations set forth above and at the same time not conflict with the Constitution of the United States.

I trust that the Government of the United States will be able to submit a proposition to His Majesty's Government that will solve the difficulties which I have pointed out.

SIR: Referring to your despatch No. 212, dated Norseland, Minnesota, August 8, 1901, communicating copy of the note of the Danish Minister for Foreign Affairs of the 29th of June, relative to the proposed cession of the Danish West Indies, I have to enclose herewith copy of a new draft of the treaty with Denmark embodying all the accepted suggestions of the Danish Government.

ALVEY A. ADEE

[Inclosure]

Draft of Treaty with Denmark for cession of islands including modifications suggested in Danish Minister's note of June 29, 1901, which are underscored in red ink.⁹

DANISH WEST INDIES

The United States of America and His Majesty the King of Denmark being desirous of confirming the good understanding which exists between them, have to that end appointed as Plenipotentiaries:

The President of the United States _____, and His Majesty the King of Denmark, _____, who having mutually exhibited their full powers, which were found to be in due form, have agreed upon the following articles:

Article I

His Majesty the King of Denmark agrees to cede to the United States immediately upon the exchange of the ratifications of this convention the Islands of Saint Thomas, Saint John and Sainte Croix, in the West Indies, with the adjacent islands and rocks, comprising in said cession all title and claim of title to the territories in and about said islands over which the Crown of Denmark now exercises, asserts or claims jurisdiction.

This cession conveys to the United States the said islands and appurtenances in full, entire and unincumbered sovereignty, with all the dominion, rights and powers which Denmark now possesses, exercises, asserts and claims therein, it being however understood and agreed that the consummation of said cession does not import the transference to the United States of the financial claims now held by Denmark against the colonial treasuries of the islands. It being agreed that these claims are altogether extinguished in consequence of the cession, and it is moreover understood and agreed, that the United States will assume and continue to discharge from the time of the cession the obligations heretofore incumbent upon the Danish Government, towards the St. Thomas Floating Dock Company and the West India and Panama Telegraph Company.

Article II

The aforesaid title conveys to the United States the absolute fee and ownership of all public, Government or Crown lands, public buildings, ports, harbors, fortifications, barracks, and all other public property of every kind and description belonging to the Government of Denmark, together with every right and appurtenance thereunto appertaining. It being however agreed that the arms and military stores existing in the islands at the time of the cession and belonging to the government of Denmark shall remain the property of that Government and shall, as soon as circumstances will permit, be removed by it, unless they, or parts thereof, may before have been bought by the Government of the United States, upon a special agreement made with the Government of Denmark, it being however understood that flags and colors, uniforms and such arms or military objects as are marked as being the property of the Danish Government shall not be included in such purchase.

It is moreover agreed and understood: first, that the congregation belonging to the Danish National Church shall remain in possession of the churches which are now used by them, and, secondly, that sums due to the Danish Treasury by individuals are reserved, and do not pass by this cession: and where the Danish Government shall at the time of the cession hold property taken over by the Danish Treasury for sums due by individuals, such property shall not pass by this cession, but the Danish Government shall sell or dispose of such property and remove its proceeds, within two years from the date of the exchange of ratifications of this convention. The United States Government being entitled to sell by public auction, to the credit of the Danish Government, what might not have been sold before expiration of the said term of two years.

Article III

Danish subjects residing in said islands may remain therein or may remove therefrom at will, retaining in either event all their rights of property, including the right to sell or dispose of such property or its proceeds, and in case they remain in the islands they shall enjoy all civil and religious liberties and be allowed to carry on their industry, commerce and professions, being subject to such laws as are applicable to other foreigners. Those who remain in the islands may preserve their allegiance to the Crown of Denmark by making, before a Court of record, within two years from the date of the exchange of ratifications of this treaty a declaration of their decision to preserve such allegiance; in default of which declaration they shall be held to have renounced it and to have accepted allegiance to the United States; but such election of Danish allegiance shall not, after the lapse of said term of two years be a bar to their renunciation of their preserved Danish allegiance and their election of allegiance to the United States and admission to the nationality thereof on the same terms as may be provided according to the laws of the United States, for other inhabitants of the islands.

The civil rights and the political status of the native inhabitants of the islands shall be determined by the Congress.

Danish subjects not residing in the islands but owning property therein at the time of the cession shall retain their rights of property, including the right to sell or dispose of such property, being placed in this regard on the same basis as the Danish subjects residing in the islands and remaining therein or removing therefrom to whom the first paragraph of this article relates.

Article IV

Formal delivery of the territory and property ceded as aforesaid shall be made immediately after the payment by the United States of the sum of money stipulated in the fifth article hereof; but the cession with the right of immediate possession is nevertheless to be deemed complete on the exchange of ratifications of this convention, and any Danish troops which may be in the islands aforesaid shall be withdrawn as soon thereafter as may be practicable, but not later than six months after the said exchange; it being however understood that if those persons, after having quitted the Danish service, do not wish to leave the islands, they shall be allowed to remain there as civilians.

Article V

In full consideration of the cession of said islands in full, entire, and unincumbered sovereignty, the United States agrees to pay, within ninety days from the date of the exchange of ratifications of this convention, in the city of Washington, to the diplomatic representative or other agent of His Majesty the King of Denmark, duly authorized to receive the money, the sum of four million dollars in gold coin of the United States.

Article VI

The ratifications of this convention shall be exchanged at Washington, within six months from the date at which it shall have been ratified by both the High Contracting Parties according to their respective procedures.

In faith whereof the respective plenipotentiaries have signed and sealed this convention, in the English and Danish languages.

Done at _____, the _____ day of _____, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and one.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your No. 128, of the 10th ultimo, transmitting copy of a new draft of treaty for the proposed cession of the Danish West Indies to the United States, embodying the accepted suggestions made in the note from the Danish Minister for Foreign Affairs, of June 29, last, a copy of which was communicated to the Department in my No. 212, dated Norseland, Minnesota, August 8, 1901.

No. 221

AMERICAN LEGATION,

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your cablegram of the 14th ultimo,⁸ and to confirm mine of September 20,¹ in reply thereto, relative to the new proposal of the Danish Government in reference to the St. Croix sugar factories, copies of which you will find enclosed herewith.

The Danish Government has been in hopes of effecting an agreement with the stockholders in the company referred to, whereby the colonial treasury of St. Croix would be released from the 5% guarantee undertaken in 1876, and still in force. The Danish Government would then be in position to cede the islands to the United States, unincumbered by said guarantee.

As you will remember, the former Ministry had entered upon negotiations with the stockholders, and seemed to be making some progress towards a satisfactory solution of this difficulty. Later developments, however have proved that they were oversanguine in their expectations for early results. The new Ministry, which has continued these negotiations, says that it has practically given up all hopes of arriving at an understanding that would prove acceptable to the Rigsdag. The stockholders flatly decline to entertain any proposition looking towards a compromise (an acceptance for instance of 50% of the par value of their stock); but insist that in case of sale of the islands the Danish Government is morally bound to redeem in full, the obligations contracted by the colonial treasury of St. Croix in respect to the sugar factories. The Ministry and the Rigsdag are of a different opinion; and there is the difficulty.

The Minister of Foreign Affairs says that by legislative authority the Danish Government could force the stockholders to its own terms; but that such action would be unpopular and would require about a year's time. He declares himself ready, however, to adopt this procedure and to sign the treaty substantially as now submitted, in case he is assured of the necessary sanction after so long a lapse of time, which he doubts.

The situation, as it appears to me, is this: the present liberal Ministry has many pledges to redeem; it must exert itself in every direction to fulfill the high expectations it has raised among the people; and it wishes to fortify itself against expected criticism from within and without its own political party by obtaining a larger compensation for the islands than that virtually agreed upon by the former Ministry.

Recent incidents, with which you are acquainted, and of which I have been accidentally informed, have exerted a powerful influence in leading the Ministry and others concerned to believe that the the United States is overanxious to buy and, consequently, willing to pay a higher price than heretofore supposed. Under the circumstances, I am of the opinion that no treaty can be concluded before or during the coming session of Congress unless the United States Government is prepared to raise the purchasing sum to at least five million dollars.

The additional million would be considered as compensation for the sugar factories, and Government plantations, and some method would undoubtedly be discovered to release the treasury of St. Croix from the obligations referred to above.

No. 227

AMERICAN LEGATION

Copenhagen, October 24, 1901.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your cablegram of the 18th instant, relative to the proposed sale of the Danish West Indies, and to confirm mine of the 23rd instant, in reply thereto, which deciphered read as follows: [Printed ante.]

I have had two long interviews with the Minister of Foreign Affairs since the receipt of your cablegram; but have been unable to secure any definite proposition looking towards the conclusion of a convention for the transfer of the islands. As indicated in my No. 221, of the 4th instant, the impression that the United States Government is very eager to buy is growing stronger every day; and the Ministry seems to act on the supposition that delay and apparent indifference on its part will result in securing more favorable terms than those asked by the former Government.

The Minister of Foreign Affairs says that until within the last three weeks he would have assumed the responsibility of signing a treaty conforming substantially to the draft last submitted by the Government of the United States, except as to amount of compensation; but that now he would feel constrained to insist on embodying in such convention provisions expressly conferring citizenship upon the inhabitants and granting the islands free trade, in the event of a cession.

This change of attitude, the Minister says, has been caused by recent unexpected manifestations of opposition to the alienation of the islands on the part of his colleagues as well as of Rigsdag members of the Ministerial party, on account of the unfavorable terms offered.

They are now convinced that the United States has a strong desire to possess these islands; they reason that the building of an Isthmian canal will make the harbor of St. Thomas more valuable to us than it would have been in 1867, when we offered $7,500,000 for two of the islands; that we can better afford to pay a good price for them now than we could then; that if it was within the competency of the Executive to confer citizenship by treaty then, it is so now; etc. Then also, the King considers the question of citizenship as the most important.

Such are the representations made by the Foreign Office. It is further argued that the negotiations were started on a wrong basis; it being assumed that because the transfer was not to be considered as a purely commercial transaction, the price demanded was in consequence a comparatively unimportant matter. Denmark ought originally to have asked for a greater compensation than was required to indemnify itself for actual losses sustained in administering these possessions. * * *

It is evident that a liberal money offer is the essential thing.

No. 230

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Copenhagen, November 11, 1901.

SIR: The Minister of Foreign Affairs today handed me a copy of an amended draft for the proposed cession of the Danish West Indies to the United States.

Some of the changes he proposes relate to subjects which have not been included in the drafts heretofore submitted. The most important proposals, however, have reference to the civil status of the inhabitants of the islands after an eventual cession, and to the obligations at present resting upon the colonial treasury of St. Croix in consequence of the 5% guarantee of 1876 to the St. Croix Fallessukkerkøgerier Co. Ltd.

I take it that an agreement has virtually been reached as to compensation ($5,000,000). The Danish Government will not insist on the further additional sum of $190,000 for the purpose of liquidating the obligations mentioned in the provision incorporated in Article I of the amended draft; but it is likely to insist on embodying an express clause in the treaty stipulating that in no event shall said debts and liabilities become a charge upon the Government of Denmark. The stockholders of the sugar company claim that the Danish Government is liable for this guarantee, and that the courts would so hold.

They declare that if their claims are not settled amicably they will resort to litigation. The Danish Ministry and Rigsdag are of opinion that the colonial treasury of St. Croix is the sole debtor in this case; and they do not feel inclined to assume a debt for which they disavow all responsibility, and which, they say, was unwisely authorized by the unpopular and arbitrary Estrup Ministry—of the opposition. Minister Deuntzer requests me to say that he feels confident that the stockholders would accept 50% in full of all claims, if the treaty contained the agreement he suggests.

The future civil and political status of the inhabitants greatly concerns the King and it is feared that he would interpose his objection to the conclusion of a convention that was silent on that point or left the matter entirely to the pleasure and discretion of Congress.

That part of Article III beginning with "and in case they remain" etc., would meet the approval of His Majesty as well as of the Danish Government, if made to read as follows:

and in case they remain in the islands, they shall continue, until otherwise provided, to enjoy all the private, municipal, and religious rights and liberties secured to them by the laws now in force. If the present laws are altered, the said inhabitants shall not thereby be placed in a less favorable position in respect to the above mentioned rights and liberties than they now enjoy.

The raising of the money consideration from four to five million dollars, the importance of which I impressed upon you in my Nos. 221 and 227, of October 4 and 24 last, respectively, has had the expected effect. The "psychological moment" has been reached; and the time to terminate the protracted negotiations and to conclude a treaty for the cession of the Danish West Indies to the United States is here. The acquisition of these islands by the United States must be looked upon as a diplomatic achievement of no mean magnitude. The obstacles in our way have been considerable. The reluctance of the Danish Government to enter upon negotiations anew after having been so treated by our Senate in connection with the treaty of 1867; the well-known wish of the King and other members of the Royal family to retain these possessions under the Danish Crown; the popular agitation against the sale; the negotiations having been conducted with three different ministries—at least one of which took up the matter in only a half-hearted way; all these difficulties have had to be contended with and cleared out of the way. It is certainly a source of much gratification that success seems at last to crown our efforts; and I hope that whatever troubles may arise in the further progress of the treaty on the way to its final proclamation may be overcome.

No. 231

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Copenhagen, November 27, 1901.

SIR: I have the honor to confirm my cablegram of the 26th instant, which deciphered reads as follows: [Printed ante]

In my No. 230, of the 11th instant, I said that the Danish Government might insist on inserting in the treaty the stipulation "no responsibility, etc.," referred to in the above cablegram. The Minister of Foreign Affairs yesterday showed me a cablegram which he had received from Mr. Brun, informing him that you could not accede to some of the proposals contained in the last amended draft from the Danish Government, among them the one touching the 5% guarantee to the St. Croix Fallessukkerkogerier.

He told me that the Rigsdag would not give its sanction to a treaty that did not expressly exempt the Danish Government from these obligations. Whether such clause would operate to bar the claimants concerned from holding the Danish Treasury liable for the guarantee in question is not clear. The matter would in that case likely give rise to litigation in the Danish courts as intimated in my No. 230. It is possible that Mr. Deuntzer would recede from his position in respect to the above clause; and I doubt that the Rigsdag would permit the treaty to be wrecked on this rock. Nevertheless, I consider my advice as cabled to be the safest under the circumstances.

* The time limit which you have set for the negotiations expires next Monday.

In case the United States Government should wish to extend the time, Mr. Deuntzer would, in my opinion, avail himself of the opportunity to make new demands. He has intimated as much to me, saying that after December 2 he should consider himself released from all proposals made or agreed upon before that date, if a treaty is not concluded in the meantime.

If you insist on omitting the stipulation regarding the guarantee, he would, perhaps, reply: "Then, I can not sign the treaty by December 2nd, if at all. I would have to consult the King, the Rigsdag, etc., etc., etc." The Minister of Foreign Affairs is personally opposed to the sale of the islands, as I have informed you privately.

From the above you will realize the situation, and understand why I advise concessions in order to bring the negotiations to a speedy termination.

No. 234

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Copenhagen, December 19, 1901.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your cablegram of the 17th instant, relative to the treaty for the cession of the Danish West Indies, and to confirm mine of the 18th instant in reply thereto, the true reading of which follows: Cipher cablegram received December 17, 1901, at 9:30 p. m. [Printed ante.]

The text of the treaty which had been scrutinized and approved by the Department reached the Foreign Office Tuesday noon, the 17th instant. In the afternoon I called on the Director General—the Minister was attending a meeting of the Rigsdag—and urged the desirability of cabling Mr. Brun full power to sign the treaty as soon as the Minister for Foreign Affairs had examined it. I was informed that the formalities of finally laying the matter before the King would have to be observed, and that the Finance Committee of the Folkething had requested to have the treaty as agreed upon communicated to it before the signature was authorized.

This would require a few days. Yesterday morning I handed a copy of your cablegram to Mr. Deuntzer; and in the afternoon I had an interview with him. He said that it was quite impossible to expedite matters sufficiently to have the treaty signed before the adjournment of the Senate. A Council of State was to be held on Friday; and the King could not be asked to discuss the question earlier. The Folkething Finance Committee could not meet before Thursday afternoon. There seemed to be one or two discrepancies of minor importance, between the text of the treaty received and that of the cablegrams exchanged with Mr. Brun, which would necessitate further communication with him. No time limit for ratification had been inserted in the treaty. This he thought was an oversight; and such a stipulation ought to be added.

He then told me that the Rigsdag was giving him trouble by raising the question of a plebiscite at this stage in the negotiations, when an agreement between the two Governments had practically been reached. I reserve my report on this point for a separate dispatch, which will be mailed tomorrow.

LAURITS S. SWENSON

Minister Swenson to the Secretary of State

No. 235

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Copenhagen, December 21, 1901.

SIR: In my cablegram of the 18th instant, relative to the signature of the treaty, for the cession of the Danish West Indies, I reported that the Rigsdag proposes to submit the question of sale to a vote in the islands; and that the Minister of Foreign Affairs might yield to such demands.

When I called on Mr. Deuntzer, on Wednesday, to urge the desirability of having the treaty signed before the Senate adjourned for the holidays, he informed me that the Rigsdag appeared to be yielding to the popular demand for a plebiscite; and that he was under such pressure from that quarter that he would, in all probability feel constrained to give his consent.

It was especially the Landsting, which is controlled by the opposition, that he feared. The dominant party in that body was striking a popular chord by protesting against selling Danish citizens "as cattle"; and, what was more, it had it in its power to reject a treaty without the desired stipulation and this would, perhaps, be done. He asked my opinion on the subject, and inquired if I thought it likely that my Government would accept a proposal for a plebiscite. I told him, politely, that the treaty had been agreed upon by the two Governments; that the Danish Foreign Office had desired to examine the text as accepted by the Secretary of State, pledging itself to cable Mr. Brun full power to sign the document as soon as it had been verified, and that Mr. Hay, in consequence, considered the negotiations ended, and nothing wanting but the formality of signing. I further called his excellency's attention to the fact that at no time during the negotiations had the Danish Government proposed—leave alone insisted on—a plebiscite; that, on the contrary, the Minister for Foreign Affairs had, in a note to me, expressly mentioned the fact that no vote was expected; and that the Rigsdag, which had been consulted at every step, had not even intimated that it desired such a stipulation inserted in the proposed treaty. As for the political considerations and the fear of the Landsting, I remarked that the opposition had initiated the negotiations, continued them through two ministries, and consented to far less favorable terms—no plebiscite ever having been demanded—than those now obtained by the party in power. These circumstances, I thought, made it highly improbable that the Landsting would assume the responsibility of rejecting the treaty, thereby indirectly pledging itself to voting extraordinary appropriations for the improvement of the islands, especially inasmuch as a large majority in that branch is understood to favor the sale in order to relieve the Danish Treasury of the continual drain caused by the annual deficit in the colonial budget; and inasmuch as the sale is advocated by the larger part of the Danish people. Mr. Deuntzer agreed with me, except as to the improbability of adverse action by the Landsting. He was not so sure that the Right would not consider it a good opportunity to play him a “political trick”. He also feared that the King was inclined to consider the demand for a plebiscite as reasonable.

However, he was to meet with the Finance Committee of the Folkething that evening, and he would advise against a plebiscite, both because he did not favor it personally and because he considered my objections against introducing new subjects at this stage in the negotiations as weighty and as well taken.

At the meeting held in the evening, he prevailed upon the Finance Committee to take his view of the matter and to pledge its support to the ratification of the treaty as drafted.

Notwithstanding this action, fifteen Folkething members of the Ministerial party succeeded in having a secret meeting of the Rigsdag members of the Left called for the following evening—Thursday—for the purpose of discussing what attitude the Government party ought to assume in respect to a plebiscite.

Some fifty members attended this meeting, which did not adjourn till after eleven o'clock. The Minister of Foreign Affairs was present. Most of the speakers expressed the opinion that the party could not afford to ignore the popular clamour for a vote in the islands.

The Schleswig question was referred to; it being said that the Danes would justly be accused of inconsistency and lack of patriotism if they parted with the West Indies without consulting the wishes of the inhabitants. They could not thereafter complain of Germany's conduct towards Schleswig. A demand that was so fair and reasonable could not be disregarded with impunity. A precedent had been established in 1867. The royal proclamation of that year had committed the King and the Government to a plebiscite as a condition for an eventual sale. No party could afford to incur the odium of reversing history on this point.

Even if the United States Government would not give its assent to the proposed treaty stipulation, the Danish Government ought to call an election independent of treaty provisions, in order that the Rigsdag might be guided by the result, when the question of ratification came up. About twenty members expressed themselves as above. Many others informed Mr. Deuntzer—privately—that they shared the views of the speakers. A large part of the press of Copenhagen and the provinces is agitating in the same vein.

The Minister for Foreign Affairs said to me yesterday that he was tired of the whole business; and that he did not know what to do. He wished my Government could see its way clear to agreeing to a plebiscite, either by treaty stipulation or independent of treaty, and thus extricate him from the embarrassing position in which he found himself. He again expressed apprehension lest the Landsting might withhold its sanction to a sale without plebiscite. Yet, if Mr. Hay insisted on it, he declared himself willing to have the treaty signed in its present form, unless the King should interpose his objection, which he thought possible. I told him that I had nothing to add to what I had said in my previous interview, but that I would earnestly request that he communicate with Mr. Brun by cable, so that the signature might take place without unnecessary delay. I reminded him that the Senate would resume its sessions shortly after the holidays and that the treaty ought to be transmitted to that body immediately after its reconvening. I inquired if the subject had been discussed in the Council of State that day—yesterday—, and was told that the King had asked about the status of the negotiations. The Minister for Foreign Affairs had informed him that a résumé of the correspondence between the two Governments and an account of such other matter as had a bearing on the subject was being prepared, and would soon be submitted to His Majesty. Thus you see that it is quite impossible to secure as early action as we had hoped, and had been given reason to expect. I am unable to say when the formalities and conferences will come to an end. The Rigsdag has adjourned for the holidays; and both houses will not be in session again before January 10.

I shall leave no stone unturned to gain our point.

As to the danger of having the treaty rejected by the Landsting, in the event of no plebiscite, I can not believe that any such danger exists. If it does, the sentiment must have changed incredibly much within the last few days.

From official information furnished the Foreign Office by the Governor of the Danish West Indies, it appears that a large majority of the inhabitants would vote for a transfer to the United States. The owners of sugar plantations and the leading merchants favor the proposed cession. The official functionaries and some of the smaller merchants are opposed to it. The laboring classes are largely an unknown quantity; but it is thought that they would nearly all be influenced in favor of a sale.

The influence of the large steamship companies touching at St. Thomas would be exerted in the same direction.

On St. Croix the vote would be well-nigh unanimous for being brought under the United States flag. On St. Thomas the majority would be large.

Such is the opinion of Governor Hedeman; and the best informed persons here agree with him in this.

AMERICAN LEGATION,

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith a clipping, together with a translation of the same, giving the text of a petition to the King, the Ministry, and the Rigsdag, praying that the question of alienating the Danish West Indies be submitted to a plebiscite in the islands. Copies of this petition, which appears in today's papers, are to be left in every bookstore in Denmark for signature, until the 3rd of January.

The opponents of the sale, who are behind this move, are receiving encouragement and support from many of the advocates of the proposed cession in their demand for a vote. I called on the Minister for Foreign Affairs Tuesday, the 24th instant, to inquire if he was ready to authorize signature of the treaty at Washington. He said that he was not; and that he had written Mr. Brun, instructing him to ascertain the attitude of the United States Government with respect to a plebiscite.

I again urged the importance of delaying the conclusion of the treaty no longer; pointing out the dangers involved. He regretted that the question of plebiscite should cause such embarrassment; but in view of the strong pressure that had been made upon him, he did not dare to refuse the demand for a vote without bringing the matter to the attention of the American Government. And this he did not think could be done satisfactorily by cable.

[Inclosure—Translation]

A Petition to the King, the Ministry, and the Rigsdag, praying that the question of selling the Danish West Indies be submitted to a vote in the islands.

The question of alienating our West India colonies has again become prominent. We do not know what the result of the negotiations with America will be. But irrespective of our individual views as to the desirability of retaining the islands or the opportune time for selling them, we the undersigned agree that no alienation of Danish territory should be permitted without giving the inhabitants of said territory an opportunity to express their wishes in respect to such action. This is especially desirable in the present case, in view of the sentiment in favor of remaining Danish that has recently manifested itself in the islands.

Therefore we the undersigned earnestly and confidently request the King, the Ministry, and the Rigsdag not to make any final decision regarding the sale of our West India colonies except on the basis of a free vote, in accordance with the principles of universal suffrage, by the inhabitants of the islands; necessary preparations for such election to be made as soon as the circumstances will permit.

The Danish Minister to the Secretary of State

DANISH LEGATION,
Washington, December 27, 1901.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY OF STATE: By my note of November 23^s in fine, in regard to the Danish West India Islands, I had the honor to express to you the desire of my Government, that simultaneously with the signature of the treaty, you should address a note to me declaring that the United States Government would not support any claim against Denmark, or the Danish Government, of commission, provision or remuneration whatsoever to private parties on the occasion of the cession of the islands in question to the United States.

During our conference on November 25th you willingly agreed to do this.

His excellency J. H. Deuntzer, our Minister of Foreign Affairs, has unofficially asked me, whether it would be possible for me to send him a draft of such note.

If entirely convenient to you, I would greatly appreciate to receive a draft of the proposed note for transmission to Mr. Deuntzer, although it may not now reach the Minister before final action has been taken in this matter.

SIR: I have the honor to confirm my cablegram of the 2nd instant which deciphered reads as follows: [Printed ante.]

In connection with the above subject, I refer you to my Nos. 235 and 236, dated December 21st and 27th last, respectively. The popular agitation for a plebiscite still continues, though with somewhat abated zeal.

If the Minister for Foreign Affairs firmly resists the temptation to yield to this sentimental opposition to a sale without plebiscite, it will soon subside and disappear. He is strongly influenced, however, by political considerations, fearing to give offense by rejecting an apparently just and reasonable request.

This is undoubtedly what actuates him in asking the United States Government to give its consent to a vote in the islands.

His alleged fears that the treaty as agreed upon may be rejected by the Landsting are, in my opinion, not well founded; nor do I believe that he considers the danger from that quarter as serious as he would have it appear.

At a state dinner given by the King last night, I met a number of Landsting members of the Right (opposition), many of whom I number among my friends.

Mr. Schested, former Minister for Foreign Affairs, at present Vice President of the Landsting; Count Danneskjold Samsøe, Chairman of the Finance Committee of that body; General Hedeman, an influential member, uncle to the Governor of the Danish West Indies—all agreed in saying that the upper branch of the Rigsdag had not made its consent to an eventual treaty of cession dependent upon a plebiscite.

When I asked them if their party would assume the responsibility of rejecting a treaty without plebiscite, they said that no such intimation had been made to the Minister for Foreign Affairs; and they did not think it likely that the party would care to relieve the Ministry of any of its responsibility in this matter. To an interrogatory from Mr. Deuntzer as to whether they still favor sale of the islands—as they had informed his predecessor last year—they had replied that in case the present Ministry could with good grace break off negotiations, and desired to do so, they—the Right—would not embarrass the responsible Government by insisting on the sale and dragging the question into budget debates, etc.

Individual members had expressed a desire for a plebiscite; but no demand for it had been made—The gentlemen whom I interviewed did not think that the sentiment in favor of the sale was as strong as last year.

Nevertheless, they made it quite clear to me that Mr. Deuntzer has it in his power to secure the ratification of such treaty as he is able to make.

The Danish Minister to the Secretary of State

DANISH LEGATION,
Washington, January 7, 1902.

MR. SECRETARY OF STATE: His excellency the Danish Minister for Foreign Affairs having received the text of a treaty for the cession of the Danish West India Islands to the United States, upon which your excellency and I have agreed, has been pleased to inform me that, with the slight modification of two words of Article VII, to which your excellency willingly consented orally on December 19, this text has in every respect been found to correspond to the latest instructions and expectations of the Danish Government.

While having a most earnest desire to be able to cede the islands on the conditions thus agreed upon, the Danish Government finds itself confronted with a situation, which renders it absolutely necessary that some arrangement should be made in regard to the taking of a popular vote in the islands with a view to ascertain the wishes of the inhabitants concerning a transfer to the sovereignty of the United States.

This situation is created by the sentiment of the majority of the members of the Danish Congress, or Rigsdag, as well as by the sentiment of the Danish people at large, in both of which the Danish Government has met with a strong demand for the taking of a vote in the islands before any cession takes place.

This demand, I feel sure, will not surprise your excellency considering that it is in harmony with true democratic principles, and considering also the history of the cession to foreign powers of certain parts of Denmark, to which I had occasion to allude during a recent conversation with your excellency.

I am therefore instructed to submit for your excellency's consideration the following alternatives:

1. Will the United States Government agree to insert in Article I of the present convention a clause similar to the provision in Article I of our Convention of October 24, 1867, concerning a vote in the islands?

2. If not, will the United States Government agree to make a special arrangement by a note with the Danish Government concerning the taking of a vote?

3. If not willing to this either, will the United States Government agree to leave the taking of the vote entirely to the Danish Government?

In case our two Governments should agree to have a vote taken in the islands, this vote could take place in accordance with certain specified rules to be adopted by both Governments, and the Danish Government would on this point gladly conform to the wishes of the United States Government, provided that proper measures were also concerted in regard to insure the liberty and safety of the vote.

The vote in the islands should take place as soon as the ratification of the convention shall have been advised by the United States Senate.

Hoping that your excellency may find in this communication from my Government a base for a prompt agreement on the point in question, I have [etc.]

C. BRUN

The Secretary of State to the Danish Minister

No. 366

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, January 9, 1902.

SIR: I have had the honor to receive the note which you were pleased to address to me under date of the 7th instant and whereby you apprise me of the acquiescence of his excellency the Danish Minister for Foreign Affairs in the text of the treaty which we have framed for the cession to the United States of the Danish West India Islands. His excellency's acquiescence being, however, coupled with an important condition, to wit, the adoption of an engagement or understanding in regard to taking a popular vote in the islands with a view to ascertain the wishes of the inhabitants concerning a transfer to the sovereignty of the United States.

During the period of two years in which the question of this cession has been under consideration by the two Governments, the Government of the United States has negotiated with successive Ministries of Denmark and always with an evident and sincere desire to conform in every possible way to the views and wishes of the Danish Government in the matter. Step by step, the draft treaty has been advanced to its present shape, nearly all the proposals of the Danish Ministry having been accepted by us, even to the extent of setting aside agreements reached with one Ministry and substituting therefor amendments brought forward by its successor. It is very gratifying to me to learn that the text in its present form embodies the views and wishes of your Government as well as of mine in every particular and that the protracted negotiation is now happily closed save as to the one supplemental point raised by your present communication.

At no time in the course of our prolonged discussion of the subject has the condition of a popular vote in the islands as a precedent to the cession been seriously advanced. If a suggestion in that sense has been made, it has been with entire informality, and has not been taken up. The two Governments have until now been in full accord as to the omission of this feature.

It is now proposed that I consider the three following alternatives.

1. Will the United States Government agree to insert in Article I of the present Convention a clause similar to the provision in Article I of our Convention of October 24, 1867 concerning a vote in the islands?
2. If not, will the United States Government agree to make a special arrangement by a note with the Danish Government concerning the taking of a vote?
3. If not willing to do this either, will the United States Government agree to leave the taking of the vote entirely to the Danish Government?

By way of explanation you add:

In case our two Governments should agree to have a vote taken in the islands this vote could take place in accordance with certain specified rules to be adopted by both governments, and the Danish Government would on this point gladly conform to the wishes of the United States Government, provided that proper measures were also concerted in regard to insure the liberty and safety of the vote.

The vote in the islands should take place as soon as the ratification of the convention shall have been advised by the United States Senate.

I am constrained to express, with the President's approval and by his direction, the conviction of this Government that the first and second of these alternatives are not of such a nature as to admit of its acquiescence therewith. The grounds of this conclusion will sufficiently appear in considering the third alternative, which is that the Government of the United States shall agree to leave the taking of the proposed vote entirely to the Danish Government.

This Government regards the question as a domestic one the solution of which pertains to Denmark alone. It deems that it cannot in any way intervene to control, prescribe or sanction the manner in which the Danish Government may arrive at a judgment as to its competency to cede the islands. It does not feel that it can be a party to the execution of a formal contract the carrying out of which may depend upon a contingency as much beyond its own sphere of action as it is within the Danish sphere.

This Government stands ready for its part to sign the agreement which has been negotiated, without question as to the competency of the Danish Government to do the same. Dealing as a sovereign, with a sovereign equal, it cannot share in raising a doubt as to the ability of its co-contractant to enter into the contract, or in enunciating the procedure whereby the Danish Government may satisfy itself on that score.

It is deeply regretted that at this late day, when the two years' controversial discussion has been agreeably closed, an obstacle should be discerned in the path of Denmark, and it is sincerely to be hoped that it may not prove a barrier to the realization of a project which appears to be so mutually advantageous.

No. 239

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Copenhagen, January 15, 1902.

SIR: I have the honor to confirm my cablegram of this date, which deciphered reads as follows: [Printed ante.]

The Minister for Foreign Affairs received a cablegram from the Danish Minister at Washington last Saturday, the 11th instant, informing him that you could not accept the proposal for a vote. Nevertheless, Mr. Brun advises him to order an election in the islands before signing the treaty. This led Mr. Deuntzer to believe that you had intimated that such solution of the question would be acceptable to you, your objection being only against a stipulation for a plebiscite after signature of the treaty. Inasmuch as Mr. Brun had been instructed by mail to lay the matter fully before you, including the plan that he now recommends, and in view of your reply as cabled; my understanding is that you have declined to approve any of the propositions submitted by the Danish Government; and I have expressed this view to Mr. Deuntzer. He does not see, however, how Mr. Brun could give such advice without having assured himself that it would be perfectly safe to act upon it. I urged him to cable for more explicit information; but he preferred to await the arrival of an explanatory despatch, which he expects by next Monday's or Tuesday's mail—January 20 or 21st.—If the Minister for Foreign Affairs is given to understand that you will hear of no plebiscite before signature, he will, in my opinion, cause the treaty to be signed as soon as practicable. For political reasons, however, he may conclude to order an election in the islands after the signature, making ratification dependent upon the result. It would be well for the United States Government to make such arrangements as this contingency may suggest. See my No. 235, of the 21st ultimo, as to the probable outcome of a plebiscite. Information that you, undoubtedly, have on file in the Department regarding the influences that were prominent in the election of 1867 are also of interest in this connection. The petition for a plebiscite, treated of in my No. 236, dated December 27, 1901, was presented to the King, Monday, the 13th instant, by a deputation composed of the following five members: G. Brandes, Ph. D., author; N. Bang, director; C. Nyrop, Professor University of Copenhagen; J. Scavenius, formerly member of Folkething—defeated for reelection last spring, Professor Tscherning, surgeon.

The last named acted as spokesman. He referred in rather apologetic words to the number of signatures secured—ca. 34,000. His Majesty who received the deputation cordially, replied as follows:

We thank you, gentlemen, for the interest you have manifested in this matter by referring it to us. As long, however, as diplomatic negotiations are pending, we are unable to express any opinion on the point you have emphasized. (Plebiscite.) We feel confident that our Ministry will safeguard the interests of the islands, and their inhabitants, and we beg you to share this, our confidence.

Yesterday the petition was handed to the President of the Folke-thing, who communicated it to that body at the opening of the day's session.

It will lie three days in the reading room for inspection; and will then be taken up and referred to the Finance Committee.

This document has not made as much impression as had been expected. The Government organs—notably Dannebrog, owned by the Minister of Justice, and Politiken, with the Minister of the Interior as editor in chief—are belittling the whole movement for a vote by the "niggers." * * *

Minister Brun, executing instructions of Minister for Foreign Affairs, has asked our formal assent to a plebiscite, and in the event of our not assenting, has intimated that upon assurance of the United States not objecting to plebiscite he would be authorized to sign, leaving the vote to be taken before ratification. I have answered Minister from Denmark that the processes by which Denmark may reach a conclusion to ratify being wholly of the domestic concern of Denmark I felt unable to unite with Danish Government in prescribing a popular vote and could neither assent nor object thereto. As Denmark is thus made aware of our interposing no objection, the signature of the treaty forthwith appears to be the necessary and proper step. Each party signs subject to ratification according to its own domestic procedure, the form and manner of which is not subject to the consent or question of the other party.

You will press this view upon the Minister for Foreign Affairs as being the course which at this juncture best befits the sovereign rights of the two Powers. Delay in signing treaty is to be deprecated because likely to involve embarrassment here.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your cablegram of the 15th instant, which reads as follows: [Printed ante.]

Immediately on receipt of your cablegram, I communicated it to the Minister for Foreign Affairs. You will find enclosed herewith a copy of my note of transmission.

In a personal interview which I had with Mr. Deuntzer, he expressed his satisfaction with your reply to his inquiry, which he considered clear and complete. He assured me that no further obstacle to signing the treaty existed; and that full power would be cabled Mr. Brun as soon as the King's formal sanction had been obtained; the necessary formalities for which would be observed with the greatest possible dispatch. The petition for plebiscite, spoken of in my No. 239, of the 15th instant, has now been presented to the King, the Premier, and the presiding officers of the two houses of the Rigsdad.

My opinion is that it will have but little effect. The fanning that caused the patriotic flames to burn so high in certain quarters a month ago has almost ceased.

EXCELLENCY: I have the honor to communicate to your excellency a cablegram which I received this morning from the Secretary of State and which deciphered reads as follows: [Quotes telegram of January 15, 1902.]

The above message clearly defines the attitude of my Government on the question of an eventual plebiscite, independent of treaty stipulations, adopted by the proper authorities in Denmark as part of the procedure in acting on the ratification of the treaty, when it shall be submitted for the required sanction. This matter is thus eliminated from the discussion; as it lies wholly within the sphere of Danish jurisdiction and prerogative, upon which the United States Government has neither the competence nor the inclination to encroach.

Now that the last cause of delay has been removed, I earnestly hope that the necessary formalities for executing a full power to sign the treaty will be completed with the greatest convenient celerity, in order that Mr. Brun may be cabled authority to affix his signature as soon as possible.

It is gratifying that the protracted negotiations for the cession of the Danish West Indies have come to a successful termination—a fact I now take for granted.

The negotiations which have been conducted in the friendliest spirit, have been marked by a frankness and singleness of purpose that has made the exchanges of views and proposals on the subject in question most agreeable; and, if possible, drawn the two countries closer together than ever.

This is cause for gratification, and is, I assure your excellency, highly appreciated by my Government.

I gladly avail myself of the opportunity to give expression to the feeling of personal pleasure and satisfaction I have derived from my connection with this work.

Your excellency, as well as your predecessors and Director General Krag have made my task one of enjoyment by the courteous manner in which you have discussed our differences, and the frankness and friendliness with which you have met me. For all of which, I beg you to accept my sincere thanks.

I trust that neither of the signatory parties will ever have cause to regret the transfer of the three little pearls in the western seas.

The situation of the islands, the character of their inhabitants, and their commercial interests point to a bright future for them under the American flag.

The benevolent colonial policy as well as the traditions of the liberal Republic which is to control their destiny is a guarantee that the best interest of the inhabitants will be safeguarded; and that the blessings enjoyed by the people of the United States will ere long gladden the homes of this handful of people.

CONVENTION BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND DENMARK FOR THE CESSION OF THE DANISH WEST INDIES

Signed at Washington, January 24, 1902. Ratification advised by the Senate February 17, 1902. Ratified by the President, March 1, 1902.

The United States of America and His Majesty the King of Denmark being desirous of confirming the good understanding which exists between them, have to that end appointed as Plenipotentiaries,

The President of the United States:

John Hay, Secretary of State of the United States; and His Majesty the King of Denmark:

Mr. Constantin Brun, Commander of Dannebrog and decorated with the Cross of Honor of the same Order, His Majesty's Chamberlain and Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary at Washington; who, having mutually exhibited their full powers, which were found to be in due form, have agreed upon the following articles:

Article I

His Majesty the King of Denmark agrees to cede to the United States immediately upon the exchange of the ratifications of this convention the Islands of Saint Thomas, Saint John and Sainte Croix, in the West Indies, with the adjacent Islands and rocks, comprising in said cession all title and claims of title to the territories in and about said islands over which the Crown of Denmark now exercises, asserts or claims jurisdiction.

This cession conveys to the United States the said Islands and appurtenances in full sovereignty, entire and unincumbered except as stipulated in the present Convention, with all the dominion, rights and powers which Denmark now possesses, exercises, asserts and claims therein; it being however understood and agreed that the consummation of said cession does not import the transference to the United States of the financial claims now held by Denmark against the Colonial treasuries of the Islands, it being agreed that these claims are altogether extinguished in consequence of the cession. And it is moreover understood and agreed, that the United States will assume and continue to discharge from the time of the cession the obligations heretofore incumbent upon the Danish Government towards the St. Thomas Floating Dock Company and the West India and Panama Telegraph Company.

No responsibility of any kind whatever is incumbent on the Danish Government, nor on the United States Government, as to the guaranty which, conformably to the ordinance of June 16, 1876, the Colonial treasury of Sainte Croix has assumed with regard to the payment of an interest of five per cent per annum to the holders of shares of the "Sainte Croix Fallessukkerkogerier" Company limited.

Article II

The aforesaid title conveys to the United States the absolute fee and ownership of all public, Government or Crown lands, public buildings, ports, harbors, fortifications, barracks, and all other public property of every kind and description belonging to the Government of

Denmark, together with every right and appurtenance thereunto appertaining: it being however agreed that the arms and military stores existing in the islands at the time of the cession and belonging to the Government of Denmark shall remain the property of that Government and shall, as soon as circumstances will permit, be removed by it, unless they, or parts thereof, may before have been bought by the Government of the United States upon a special agreement made with the Government of Denmark; it being however understood that flags and colors, uniforms and such arms or military objects as are marked as being the property of the Danish Government shall not be included in such purchase.

It is moreover agreed and understood: first, that the congregations belonging to the Danish National Church shall remain in possession of the churches which are now used by them, together with the parsonages appertaining thereunto, and secondly, that sums due to the Danish treasury by individuals are reserved and do not pass by this cession; and where the Danish Government shall at the time of the cession hold property taken over by the Danish Treasury for sums due by individuals, such property shall not pass by this cession, but the Danish Government shall sell or dispose of such property and remove its proceeds within two years from the date of the exchange of ratifications of this convention, the United States Government being entitled to sell by public auction, to the credit of the Danish Government, what may not have been sold before expiration of the said term of two years.

The Danish Government retains the claims held by the same as a creditor against the "Ste. Croix Fallessukkerkøgerier" Company limited; should that Government acquire the ownership of property belonging to this Company in the island of Ste. Croix, the above provision regarding a sale within two years shall apply to such property; the two years however to begin from the date of the acquirement of ownership of said property which shall be within three years from the exchange of the ratifications of the present treaty.

Any Government archives, papers and documents relative to the islands ceded and the dominion of the same, which may now be existing there, shall pass by this cession, but an authenticated copy of such documents or papers as may be required will be at all times given by the United States to the Danish Government or to such properly authorized Danish officers or subjects as may apply for them.

Article III

Danish subjects residing in said islands may remain therein or may remove therefrom at will, retaining in either event all their rights of property, including the right to sell or dispose of such property or its proceeds; and in case they remain in the islands, they shall continue until otherwise provided, to enjoy all the private, municipal and religious rights and liberties secured to them by the laws now in force. If the present laws are altered, the said inhabitants shall not thereby be placed in a less favorable position in respect to the above mentioned rights and liberties than they now enjoy. Those who remain in the islands may preserve their allegiance to the Crown of Denmark by making, before a court of record, within two years from the date of the exchange of ratifications of this convention, a declaration of their decision to preserve such allegiance, in default of which declaration they shall be held to have renounced it and to have accepted allegiance to the United States; but such election of Danish allegiance shall not, after the lapse of the said term of two years, be a bar to their renunciation of their preserved Danish allegiance and their election of allegiance to the United States and admission to the nationality thereof on the same terms as may be provided according to the laws of the United States, for other inhabitants of the islands.

The civil rights and the political status of the inhabitants of the islands shall be determined by the Congress, subject to the stipulations contained in the present convention.

Danish subjects not residing in the islands but owning property therein at the time of the cession shall retain their rights of property, including the right to sell or dispose of such property, being placed in this regard on the same basis as the Danish subjects residing in the islands and remaining therein or removing therefrom to whom the first paragraph of this article relates.

Article IV

Formal delivery of the territory and property ceded as aforesaid shall be made immediately after the payment by the United States of the sum of money stipulated in the fifth article hereof; but the cession with the right of immediate possession is nevertheless to be deemed complete on the exchange of the ratifications of this convention, and any Danish troops which may be in the islands aforesaid shall be withdrawn as soon thereafter as may be practicable, but not later than six months after the said exchange; it being however understood that if those persons, after having terminated their Danish service, do not wish to leave the islands, they shall be allowed to remain there as civilians.

The Colonial Treasury shall continue to pay the yearly allowances now given to heretofore retired functionaries appointed in the Islands but holding no Royal Commissions, unless those allowances may have until now been paid in Denmark.

Article V

In full consideration of the cession of said islands in full sovereignty, entire and unincumbered except as stipulated in the present Convention, the United States agrees to pay, within ninety days from the date of the exchange of ratifications of this convention, in the City of Washington to the diplomatic representative or other agent of His Majesty the King of Denmark, duly authorized to receive the money, the sum of five million dollars in gold coin of the United States.

Article VI

In case of differences of opinion arising between the High Contracting Parties in regard to the interpretation or application of this convention, such differences, if they cannot be regulated through diplomatic negotiations, shall be submitted for arbitration to the permanent court of arbitration at The Hague.

Article VII

The ratifications of this Convention shall be exchanged at Washington, within six months from the date hereof, after it shall have been ratified by both the High Contracting Parties according to their respective procedure.

In faith whereof the respective plenipotentiaries have signed and sealed this convention, in the English and Danish languages.

SIR: On this gratifying occasion of signing the convention we have negotiated for the cession of the Danish West India Islands to the United States it appears to be expedient to advert to a phase of the matter which came into view during our consideration of the bases of agreement, but which from its nature did not admit of expression in the formulated convention.

In your note addressed to me on the 23rd of November ultimo, you said:

Your excellency will remember that during the long time of these negotiations private parties have repeatedly tried to impress on the negotiators the necessity of their good offices in order to attain the adoption of the treaty, with a view to obtain some compensation for themselves under the name of commission, provision or others. The Danish Government is under obligation to nobody in this respect, and your excellency has been good enough to inform me that the United States Government also has incurred no such obligation.

Responding to the desire expressed by you it affords me much pleasure to confirm in a more formal way as I now do, the statements in this regard which I have made to you orally heretofore.

The Government of the United States is in no manner under obligation to the good offices of private parties in reaching the agreement now happily brought about between the United States and Denmark, and cannot admit for its own part or support in any way any such claim against Denmark for commission, compensation or remuneration of whatever nature which might be made by private parties for alleged service in connection with the cession of the islands in question to the United States.

The Minister of Foreign Affairs to Minister Swenson

MR. MINISTER: I have had the honor to receive your note of the 16th instant, in which you were good enough to communicate to me a cablegram which the Secretary of State had addressed to you on that date, from which it appears that the Government of the United States would not object if the Danish Government should decide to submit the question of a cession of the Danish West Indies to the United States to a vote by the inhabitants of the islands, after the signature of the treaty but before the ratification of the same by His Majesty the King. This point having been clearly established, the King has affixed his signature to the full powers authorizing His Majesty's Minister at Washington to conclude and sign the convention as per the text agreed upon by the two Governments; and accordingly Mr. Brun has today been cabled authority to sign the convention, without awaiting the arrival of full powers, which have been forwarded by this day's mail.

In expressing to you my keen satisfaction at seeing the negotiations so long conducted by our two Governments thus terminated, I am glad to bear testimony to the spirit of frankness and cordial friendship in which they have been carried on by your Government, and which is sincerely appreciated by the King's Government.

It is with pleasure that I avail myself of the opportunity to make acknowledgement of the perfect courtesy and uprightness as well as the compromising spirit which you have evinced towards me throughout the negotiations, and which I assure you I shall ever cherish as a pleasant souvenir.

SIR: I have to inform you that the Senate, by its resolution of February 17, 1902, has given its advice and consent to the ratification, without amendment, of the treaty signed by Mr. Constantin Brun, the Danish Minister at Washington and myself on January 24th last, providing for the cession to the United States of the islands of St. Thomas, St. John, and St. Croix in the West Indies.

The Danish Minister to the Secretary of State

DANISH LEGATION,
Washington, February 22, 1902.

MR. SECRETARY OF STATE: I have the honor to inform your excellency, that I have today received a despatch from his excellency the Danish Minister of Foreign Affairs, dated Copenhagen, February the 8th, acknowledging the receipt of the convention which I had the honor to sign with your excellency on January the 24th for the cession to the United States of the Danish West India Islands.

The Minister states that a clerical error has been found in the Danish text of Article II of the copy intended for Denmark. This Article begins as follows in said copy: [Danish copy omitted] while the corresponding passage in the English text reads as follows:

The aforesaid title conveys to the United States the absolute fee and ownership to all public, Government or Crown lands, public buildings, ports, etc.

The English text is identical with the text approved by your excellency before the final signature of the treaty, but the following words:

"Offentlige, Regjerings-eller Kron-Grundstykker," being the exact translation of "public, Government or Crown lands," have fallen out by the engrossing of the Danish text here at this Legation.

The Minister instructs me to inform your excellency that the above-mentioned Danish words should be inserted in the beginning of Article II between the words "alle" and "offentlige", and that this addition has already been made in Copenhagen in the copy of the convention intended for Denmark. The Minister also expresses the hope, that if the same clerical error should be found in the copy intended for the United States, your excellency would cause the same addition to be made therein and, this done, would so inform me by a note, and that it would not be necessary to specially mention this correction of a clerical error in the instrument of ratification.

I regret extremely that this error should have occurred owing to the great haste considered necessary when the work of engrossing took place in the first days of December last, but venture to hope, that your excellency will approve of the addition made in Copenhagen in the copy intended for Denmark and will find it possible to have the same addition made in the copy intended for the United States without the formality of signing entirely new copies of the convention.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note of the 22nd instant in which you call attention to the omission from the Danish text of Article II of the Treaty signed on January 24, 1902, for the cession of the Danish West India Islands to the United States of the Danish words "offentlige, regjerings-eller Kron-Grundstykker" equivalent to the English words "Government, public or Crown lands" which appear in the English text of the second article.

You state that these words have been inserted in the Danish original and inquire whether this may not also be done in the United States original.

In reply I have the honor to inform you that the omitted words have been inserted.

No. 246

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Copenhagen, March 5, 1902.

SIR: I have the honor to confirm my cablegram of the 3rd instant, and to acknowledge the receipt of the Department's of the same date, in reply, as follows:^s

On the third instant the Director General of the Foreign Office showed me a communication from Mr. Brun, in which he reports that ratification of the treaty had been advised by the Senate; but that some time would likely transpire before the President would take formal action in the matter. I was informed that the Minister for Foreign Affairs did not intend to submit the treaty to the Rigsdag before he had received official notice of the President's ratification; and that no such notice had yet come from Mr. Brun. I thereupon cabled you as above; and on receipt of your reply immediately communicated the same to the Foreign Office. In a personal interview the Minister for Foreign Affairs expressed his gratification at receiving this information; and told me that he would transmit the treaty to the President of the Folkething the following day—March 5th. He expected that it would come up for discussion in that body on the 7th or 8th instant; and that the necessary consent would be secured without much difficulty. He is still in the dark, however, as to what course will be pursued by the Landsting. It is rumored that the matter will be referred to a special committee, which will report the treaty back with certain amendments, pertaining to citizenship and customs relations, and recommend that the question of transfer be submitted to a plebiscite in the islands, ratification to be made dependent upon the result. This would defer final action by the Landsting until after such proposed vote had been taken.

Though it is never safe to prophesy "unless one knows", I predict that the Rigsdag will ratify the treaty in its present form. It is not by any means certain that the Landsting will demand a plebiscite. A new petition is being circulated protesting against the sale of the islands on the ground that the treaty does not confer citizenship upon the inhabitants; that free trade with the United States is not guaranteed; and that St. Thomas is not continued as a free port. The petitioners find fault with the manner in which the negotiations have been conducted; saying that improper means were employed in creating a sentiment favorable to the purchase in the United States. This criticism is based on interviews, accounts, and newspaper articles emanating from Walter Christmas and Niils Gron, each one of whom claims the credit for having brought about the sale. Mr. Gron claims that he had practically completed the negotiations when they were suddenly interrupted by the breaking out of the Spanish American war.

Captain Christmas alleges that in the fall of 1899 he was authorized by the Hørring Ministry to make new overtures to the United States Government. As a result, the two commissioners, or agents, crossed each other's paths; and the story of the pot and the kettle was repeated. The repeated assertions of these adventurers that the Danish Government had offered them a commission of 10% in the event of a sale; Captain Christmas' "official report"¹¹ to the Schested Ministry, in which he gives an account of how he had to bribe every public man in the United States whose influence was needed—except Senator Lodge—; etc., etc.; have been made use of to arouse indignation against the sale.

The signers of the petition referred to above pledge their moral and pecuniary support to any feasible plan for bettering the economical conditions in the islands. Leading business men, they say, have guaranteed that a new steamship line will be established for developing the commerce with the islands if they remain in the possession of Denmark.

You will find enclosed herewith a newspaper clipping containing a copy of the petition.⁸

The Minister of Foreign Affairs has asked me for certain information that he wishes to use in replying to the questions and arguments of the opponents of the treaty in the Rigsdag.

I have handed him copies of the recent Supreme Court decisions in the so-called insular tariff cases. I have familiarized him with the provisions of the Constitution and the Federal Statutes on the subject of citizenship and naturalization; with our system of state and territorial governments; with our colonial policy; etc.

In pointing out the wide scope given to local legislation under all these different forms of government, I have endeavored to show that the question of United States citizenship for the inhabitants of the Danish West Indies is after all more academic and sentimental than practical. The Minister fully concurs in my views; and hopes that he will be able to bring the Landsting around to his own view of the matter.

AMERICAN LEGATION;
Copenhagen, March 22, 1902.

SIR: Referring to my No. 246, of the 5th instant, I have the honor to inform you that the Folkething gave its formal consent on the 14th instant to the ratification, without amendment, of the treaty for the cession of the Danish West Indies to the United States.

The resolution was adopted by a vote of 88 yeas against 7 nays. Six members abstained from voting, and twelve were absent. This decision had practically been reached in the three secret sessions which had been held previous to the discussion of the treaty in the open, or public, sessions, of which there were two. In the former, eighteen or nineteen members recommended that action on the ratification of the treaty be deferred until the wishes of the inhabitants of the islands respecting the proposed transfer had been ascertained by a plebiscite.

They were prevailed upon, however, to yield on this point; hence the final vote on the question of ratification was a direct one, with no conditions attached. The arguments advanced by the opponents of the sale were the same as those mentioned in my previous communications to you on this subject.

The treaty is now before the Landsting, which will follow the same procedure in discussing it as that adopted by the Folkething; that is, it will first be dealt with in one or more secret sessions, and then be disposed of after two public sessions.

The first meeting has been set for Tuesday, the 25th instant. This body has asked for copies of all communications relating to the negotiations between the United States and Denmark on this subject.

No definite action will be taken on the question of ratification before the Easter recess of the Rigsdag. It is expected, however, that the matter will come to a vote the first or second week in April. — I am in constant personal communication with leading members of the Landsting, keeping well informed of what is going on. I am still satisfied that a majority of that branch favors ratifications; but no one seems able to tell to a certainty whether a plebiscite will be insisted on or not. Strange to say, the opponents of the cession are again active. They held a secret meeting last Wednesday, which was attended by a large number of the most prominent business men of Copenhagen. There were ca. 400 persons present.

It was decided to concentrate all efforts towards inducing the Landsting to reject the treaty. To make an impression, on practical minds, not given to sentimental considerations, the sum of 1,900,000 Kronen was subscribed for the purpose of organizing a plantation company and establishing a steamship line between Copenhagen and St. Thomas. There were three subscriptions of 100,000 Kronen each.

Select Committee on Purchase of Danish Islands to the Secretary of State HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Washington, March 31, 1902.

DEAR SIR: I have the honor to submit herewith an alleged report to the Danish Government from Captain W. Christmas Dirckinck Holmfeld, relative to the purchase of the Danish West India Islands.¹¹ You will observe that in this so-called report certain statements are made as to relations existing between yourself and the author of the report. I have no doubt that at some time in the near future the committee appointed by the House to investigate the matter of this report will be glad to have you appear before them to make such statement as to you may seem fitting.

Very respectfully yours,

JOHN DALZELL,
Chairman

The Secretary of State to the Chairman, Select Committee on Purchase of Danish Islands

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, April 3, 1902.

SIR: I have received your letter of the 31st of March, and in reply beg leave to say:

In the early part of December, 1899, Captain Christmas called upon me at this Department, and informed me that, through private and personal sources in Copenhagen, he had become aware that there was a disposition among some of the leading members of the Danish Government to regard favorably an overture from the Government of the United States looking to the acquisition of the Danish Islands. He said that he had been a naval officer, and spoke at some length in regard to the desirability of the island of St. John as a naval station for the United States. At my suggestion he conveyed what further technical information he had on this subject to Admiral Bradford of the Navy Department. Although he presented no credentials whatever and expressly declared he had no official character, I thought his story was of sufficient interest to be worth investigation. I told him I would send a confidential and trusted agent of this Government to Copenhagen to ascertain unofficially the true state of affairs, and mentioned to him the name of Mr. Henry White, First Secretary of Embassy at London. Captain Christmas said he would like to be in Copenhagen when Mr. White arrived, and bring him into communication with the members of the Government whom he had mentioned. I gave him a note of introduction to Mr. White, and they met in Copenhagen, where Captain Christmas had arranged for an interview between Mr. White and a member of the Danish Government. Mr. Christmas was not present at this interview, and his connection with the matter ceased entirely at that time. He afterwards returned to Washington, and I saw him once or twice, but told him that there was no need of the services of any private person in any negotiations which might be taken up between the two Governments in regard to the acquisition of the islands.

I enclose a copy of a letter which I gave the Danish Minister in Washington at the time of the signing of the recent treaty, and also a copy of a letter which I have received from the Danish Minister, Mr. Brun, dated the 31st of March 1902.

Very sincerely yours,

JOHN HAY

Minister Swenson to the Secretary of State

No. 252

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Copenhagen, April 14, 1902.

SIR: I have the honor to enclose herewith, for your information, a copy of a communication addressed to me by Walter Christmas, under date of the 8th instant. In acknowledging the receipt of the same, I respectfully declined to cable the contents thereof to the Secretary of State. In view of Mr. Christmas's character and his absurd and contradictory statements regarding his alleged connection with the negotiations for the cession of the Danish West Indies to the United States, I attached no importance to the representations set forth in the enclosed letter. It is quite generally understood here that Mr. Christmas and Mr. Gron are engaged in a purely personal controversy; and that their attempts to paint each other as black as possible are actuated by motives of revenge. Statements emanating from these two persons are viewed with suspicion.

In my No. 246, of the 5th ultimo, I reported that the opponents of the treaty were airing the Gron-Christmas scandal, hoping thereby to arouse popular indignation and to influence the Rigsdag against ratification.

The newspapers have kept the subject before the public; and crimination and recrimination have been the order of the day. No opportunity has been lost to give the scandal a serious aspect. The bribery investigation recently ordered by the lower house of Congress has been sedulously made use of for that purpose.¹¹

Few persons believe that the negotiations were in any way influenced by unofficial agents or that suggestions of corrupt means were ever made or countenanced by either of the two Governments.

The Danish Prime Minister, Mr. Herring, is thought to have been indiscreet in his dealings with Mr. Christmas, but beyond that the matter is not taken seriously. Nevertheless, the fact that such wide publicity has been given to the scandal causes a feeling of humiliation among the Danes, and rather strengthens the opposition to the cession.

The Landsting held its first secret session for consideration of the treaty on Tuesday, March 25th. Subsequent meetings have been held on the following dates: April 3, 4, 5, 7 and 9. I have been kept well informed of what has transpired in these sessions. The question of ratification has become a political one; and the Right is making desperate efforts to hold its members in line on all votes respecting the matter. In the secret session of Monday, the 7th instant, a motion to reject the treaty was defeated by a vote of 35 to 28. The Landsting is composed of 66 members, of which 35 belong to the Right (Opposition).

The next move by the antisale people came on Wednesday, the 9th instant, when they decided, by 35 votes, to report in favor of deferring ratification till after the question of the proposed cession shall have been submitted to a restricted vote in the islands. Two minority reports will be made. The Left, or Government party, will favor ratification of the treaty as consented to by the Folkething, that is, without any conditions attached. The independent group of 8 will recommend ratification dependent upon a subsequent plebiscite, or general vote, in the islands.

The reports are now being prepared, and will be laid before the Landsting in a secret session next Thursday, the 17th instant, for formal adoption by the committee of the whole.

The matter will then be brought to a vote in open session—probably in two or three days.

The result will show a disagreement between the two houses; and after the usual procedure has been observed, a conference committee will likely be appointed.

¹¹House Report No. 2749, 57th Cong., 1st sess.

It seems likely that an agreement will be reached on the basis proposed in the report of the independent group referred to above; though many leading members of the Folkething are strongly inclined to advise nonconcurrence in a compromise report.

The Minister of Foreign Affairs thinks that an uncompromising attitude on the part of the Folkething would result in the rejection of the treaty by the Landsting. There is much difference of opinion as to this. I have talked with prominent Landsting members of the Right, — on this point; and my impression is that if unconditional ratification is insisted on by the lower house, the upper house will yield by a very small majority. The opposition in the Landsting is being lead by Professor Matzen, the President of the thing; Mr. Estrup, the leader of the Right and formerly Premier of Denmark; and Mr. Holger Pedersen, a wealthy manufacturer. The last named has become fanatic on the subject of the transfer. In one of his speeches in secret session, he declared with intense feeling that he was ready to sacrifice his whole fortune to prevent the sale. Vort Land and Nationaltidende, dailies published in Copenhagen, have for some time been making a regular crusade against the sale.

The arguments advanced are the same as indicated in my previous despatches on this subject. The Brussels conference for the abolition of bounties on beet sugar has furnished the opposition with a new argument in favor of retaining the islands. It is pointed out that the cane sugar producing West Indies will profit by the proposed agreement; and that the main reason for selling the islands will thereby be eliminated.

LAURITS S. SWENSON

[Inclosure]

Captain Christmas to Minister Swenson

COPENHAGEN, April 8, 1902.

YOUR EXCELLENCY: Nearly two months ago some Danish gentlemen engaged a Danish born American citizen, named Niels Gron, to prevent the sale of the West Indian islands.

By foul means one of these gentlemen got hold of a confidential report of my doings in America, and provided Gron with a copy of the same.

I have reason to believe, that Gron has falsified my report, and I am already able to state—from newspaper cablegrams—falsifications on following points:

1. I have never impressed the former Prime Minister Hørring with the idea, that bribery was the way of getting the islands sold.

I never wrote anything like this in my report. The fact is that Gron two years before my taking the matter up, invented the whole 10% commission theory, and declared, that without spending this money no sale was possible.

2. Nowhere in my report I have given the name of any congressman in connection with my personal promise of money.

3. I have never written that bankers I. & W. Seligman had guaranteed certain contracts. I have in the contrary stated, that these gentlemen declined to do so.

4. I have never in any newspaper declared Mr. Gron's copy of my report to be correct, for the simple reason, that I have never seen any copy.

I do not understand how Congress can take up a matter like this without investigating about the informer, Niels Gron, and his so-called translation of a stolen document, belonging to the Danish Government. After what I can judge Mr. Gron has utterly falsified my report.

On the nineteenth of February I have through Ritzans' Bureau, sent to all Danish newspapers a declaration by which I, under my oath, state, that no members of Congress in Washington were interested directly or indirectly, with my knowledge, in the sale of the islands.

This declaration I deposited the next day in the Danish Foreign Office, demanding to have it forwarded to our Ambassador in Washington.

I sincerely regret that the Minister of Foreign Affairs declined to do so, and I do not understand his motives; the whole scandal might have been avoided.

I hereby entreat your excellency to cable the content of this letter to Secretary of State, Mr. Hay, and I offer to pay the cable expenses myself.

WALTER CHRISTMAS

The Danish Minister to the Secretary of State

DANISH LEGATION,
Washington, April 18, 1902.

MR. SECRETARY OF STATE: By direction of his excellency the Danish Minister for Foreign Affairs I have been instructed to unofficially call your excellency's attention to some errors in connection with the Convention of January 24, 1902 for the cession to the United States of the Danish West Indies, which appear in the report on this subject of the Committee on Foreign Relations of the United States Senate called Report No. 1. Executive. To accompany Executive M. 57th Congress, first session.

This report says on page 13:

The object of the closing provision of Article I is to discharge the insular treasury and the Government of the United States from all liability by reason of the nonpayment of the guaranteed interest.

And again a few lines below:

No responsibility or obligation of any kind rests on the Government of the United States or on the insular treasury in connection with the St. Croix Sugar Company.

This is evidently an entirely erroneous interpretation of the last part of Article I of said convention, in which it is said:

No responsibility of any kind whatever is incumbent on the Danish Government, nor on the United States Government, as to the guaranty which, conformably to the ordinance of June 16, 1876, the colonial treasury of Saint Croix has assumed with regard to the payment of an interest of five per cent per annum to the holders of the shares of the "Sainte Croix Fallessukkerkogerier" Company Limited, while this article does not say and cannot in any way be understood to suggest or involve that the Colonial Treasury should after the cession be held to be discharged from all liability by reason of the nonpayment of the guaranteed interest.

That no responsibility or obligation of any kind rests on the insular treasury in connection with the St. Croix Sugar Company is just the contrary of the real situation in regard to the guaranty of the insular treasury towards the shareholders. It was also distinctly admitted from both sides during the negotiations, that the liability for said guaranty would remain with the insular treasury of Sainte Croix, and it was for this very reason that the words "except as stipulated in the present Convention" were inserted in Articles I and V after the words "in full sovereignty, entire and unincumbered."

The report also says:

In point of fact, the unfulfilled guaranty of the insular treasury could not subsist as a valid claim in favor of Denmark.

These words appear to suggest the supposition, that the nonpayment by the colonial treasury to the shareholders of the guaranteed interest should result in a claim on the colonial treasury in favor of the Danish Treasury, a misunderstanding which is inexplicable to my Government.

The report appears finally as an argument for the opinion, that the colonial treasury would by the convention be discharged from all liability by reason of the nonpayment of the guaranteed interest, to refer to a note which I had the honor to address to your excellency under date of November 23, 1901 and in which I said:

The guarantee of 5 per cent interest per annum, which, according to the above, is incumbent on the colonial treasury of St. Croix in regard to certain shareholders, will cease as soon as the Danish Government has acquired the ownership of the mortgaged property of the Fallessukkerkogerier by execution sale, because, in accordance with the ordinance of June 16, 1876, this guaranty should only last until the loan given by the Danish Treasury was liquidated.

I am instructed to call the attention of your excellency to the fact, that this, of course, was only meant to express, that the guaranty in question would cease for the future, while the claim of the shareholders in regard to the guaranteed interest due before the liquidation would remain in force. It was at the time thought unnecessary to add the words "for the future" to the word "cease", as no misunderstanding seemed possible on this point.

In directing me to call the attention of your excellency to the above-named points, it is of course far from the intentions of my Government to in any degree criticize the report of the Foreign Committee of the Senate, but the expressions used in this report have given rise to the fear, that an erroneous understanding of the same points might subsist or arise in other quarters, and it is my Government's wish to prevent every possibility thereof by seizing this opportunity to call attention to the right interpretation of the Convention.

I have [etc.]

C. BRUN

Department Memorandum

The note of Mr. Brun, the Danish Minister, brings to the attention of the Department the last paragraph of Article I of the Treaty of Cession to the United States of Danish islands in the West Indies, with reference to the question what effect said paragraph may have upon any obligation the colonial treasury of St. Croix may have assumed with regard to the payment of an interest of 5% per annum to the holders of the shares of the Saint Croix Fallessukkerkogerier Company, Limited.

"It is not allowable to interpret what has no need of interpretation," and therefore it is evident that Mr. Brun's note is entirely correct in stating that

This Article (I) does not say and cannot in any way be understood to suggest or involve that the colonial treasury should after the cession be held to be discharged from all liability by reason of the payment of the guaranteed interest.

His statement is also correct that under the treaty of cession, whatever liability existed against the insular treasury in connection with the Sainte Croix Sugar Company prior to the cession would remain with the said treasury after the cession.

From the foregoing it follows, as a matter of law, that the guaranteed creditors will retain their remedies, after the cession, fully and precisely, as they existed prior to the cession except so far as is expressly stipulated in the treaty to the contrary; and the contention of Mr. Brun in this sense is undoubtedly correct—that the guaranty would subsist against the colonial treasury until the loan and guaranty were liquidated, when the guaranty in question would cease for the future.

The treaty in question is to be interpreted and carried into execution by the Executive Governments of the high contracting parties; but in respect of the provision of the treaty to which Mr. Brun's note is addressed, the meaning is so clearly expressed, as already indicated, that there is nothing to interpret.

No. 255

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Copenhagen, May 6, 1902.

SIR: I have the honor to confirm my cablegram of the 2nd instant and to acknowledge the receipt of yours of the following day, in reply as follows: [Printed ante.]

My cablegram was caused by the following circumstances:

As indicated in my No. 253, of the 25th ultimo, the Landsting report on the ratification of the treaty for the cession of the Danish West Indies to the United States came up for consideration in the Folkething April 29th. The debate, which lasted about two hours, gave additional proof of the fact that the question of ratification has been made a party issue. By a vote of ninety-eight to seven—eight members being absent—the following resolution which I translate was adopted.

The Rigsdag gives its consent to the convention concluded at Washington, January 24, 1902, for the cession of the West India islands of St. Thomas, St. John, and St. Croix to the United States, on condition that the inhabitants of the islands, through a plebiscite, (similar to that of 1867), arranged by the Danish Government, express themselves in favor of ceding the islands to the United States of North America.

You will observe that this is identical with the resolution proposed by the minority of ten in the Landsting. The majority leader declared that in receding from its former position and showing such spirit of compromise, the Folkething had reached the limit of its concessions.

The matter was again sent up to the Landsting, where it was considered in two secret sessions (the house sitting as a committee) on April 29th and May 1st, respectively. It had been expected that these sessions would result in reintroducing the resolution previously adopted by this body; and that such action would give the minority the desired opportunity to move, in open session, that the matter be referred to a conference committee of the two houses, to which proposal the majority would agree. The progress of the deliberations was blocked, however, by a discovery made by Dr. Matzen, the President of the Landsting, and communicated by him to the Minister of Foreign Affairs, in a confidential letter bearing date April 29, 1902.

By reading the report of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations referred to above, Dr. Matzen had come to the conclusion that the parties to the treaty differed radically in the interpretation of an essential provision in Article I.

He considered the memorandum submitted to the Committee on Foreign Relations by the Department of State on this point to be of special importance; and found fault with the Minister of Foreign Affairs for not having called the attention of the Rigsdag thereto. He insisted on a satisfactory explanation before permitting further action on the treaty. The Minister of Foreign Affairs replied that Dr. Matzen was mistaken in his views as to the interpretation of Article I, and offered to prove that fact verbally to the Landsting. He appeared in the two secret sessions mentioned above, but failed to satisfy the opposition; and it was decided to make no further move, pending an authoritative statement from the Department of State on the subject. The opposition majority made good use of this complication to draw its members closer together; and the anti-sale part of the press made the alleged difference between the two Governments appear as serious as possible—in fact represented it as an insurmountable obstacle to ratification. The Minister of Foreign Affairs and the Director General appealed to me to help them out of the difficulty by submitting my views of the interpretation of the treaty in writing. I assured them that my Government was in full agreement with that of Denmark on the interpretation in question; but told them I wished to communicate with the Secretary of State by cable before committing myself officially in writing. I had previously been informed of the Minister's despatch to Mr. Brun and had been shown a copy of the latter's note to you, under date of April 18th last. A cablegram had been sent to Mr. Brun but the desired information had not been received when your cablegram reached me. I immediately communicated to the Minister of Foreign Affairs your reply to me. You will find enclosed herewith a copy of my note to him. He expressed much gratification and felt quite reassured.

The president of the Landsting was notified yesterday; and this afternoon a secret session was held in which the majority decided to reintroduce the resolution originally passed, as explained above. To-morrow an open session will be held, at which a conference committee of the two houses will likely be agreed to. A compromise on the resolution proposed by the Landsting minority of ten and now accepted by the Folkething seems probable.

Copenhagen, May 4, 1902.

EXCELLENCY: It gives me much pleasure to communicate to your excellency the following cablegram from the Secretary of State, which I received this morning: [Quotes telegram of May 3, 1902.]

This clear, authoritative statement leaves no room for any doubt or difference of opinion on the part of the two Governments regarding the interpretation of the closing provision of Article I of the treaty in question.

Your excellency's views with respect to the obligations arising from the 5% guarantee to the stockholders of the St. Croix Sugar Factories were well defined in the official interviews and correspondence that preceded [preceded?] the signature of the treaty; and I felt confident that no obscurity, ambiguity, or misunderstanding had led my Government to impart any other meaning to the text referred to above than that now held by Secretary Hay to be the accepted import.

I trust that Mr. Hay's statement will dispel all misgivings as to the interpretation of the treaty and thus serve to hasten its ratification.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Copenhagen, May 16, 1902, 5:50 p. m.

The Folkething today adopted the majority report conference committee, ninety-seven to two. The Landsting adopted the minority report, thirty-three to thirty. This disagreement precludes ratification treaty this session, which closes shortly. The Minister for Foreign Affairs intends to submit treaty [to] the Rigsdag again in October, expecting September elections to the Landsting will give favorable majority ratification. Cable me that you stand ready to extend the limit ratification up to a year.

No. 257

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Copenhagen, May 22, 1902.

SIR: I have the honor to confirm my cablegrams of the 16th and 17th instant and to acknowledge the receipt of yours of the 17th and 19th, in reply, as follows: [Printed ante]

Tuesday, last week the Minister of Foreign Affairs told me that in case the Rigsdag was prorogued without having given its consent to the ratification of the treaty, the King would be very reluctant to authorize a prolongation of the six months' period stipulated in the treaty.

He was of opinion that if the United States Government declared its readiness to extend the limit for ratification, His Majesty would not feel at liberty to withhold his sanction. As soon as the fate of the conference committee's report had been settled, I accordingly cabled you as above. On the following day, the 17th, the Minister for Foreign Affairs informed me that he had seen the King; and that owing to His Majesty's attitude he wished my Government to make the request for the extension of the period for ratifying the treaty. He admitted that the customary procedure would require that such proposal come from the Danish Government; but hoped that under the circumstances no question of formality would be raised and that the course suggested would be acceptable. I was shown a cablegram from the Danish Minister at Washington, in which he reported that you had expressed a desire on the 15th instant to have the period in question extended. I supposed that this would be sufficient for Mr. Deuntzer's purpose; but he did not consider it an official request; and I therefore immediately cabled you as per my second message above.

Your reply was communicated to the Foreign Office in a note, dated the 20th instant, a copy of which is enclosed herewith. The Minister of Foreign Affairs has verbally expressed his satisfaction with your instruction to me; and has assured me that Mr. Brun will be authorized to sign the necessary protocol. The matter will be brought up in a Council of State to be held to-morrow. To further elucidate the present status of the question of ratification, I continue my report of the proceedings in the Rigsdag and add such other information as I consider pertinent.

As indicated in my No. 255, of May 6th, the Landsting on the following day restored the resolution sent up from the Folkething to the form originally given it by the upper house. The minority leader thereupon moved that, in view of the conflict between the two houses, the matter be referred to a conference committee to be composed of thirty members: fifteen from each house. This motion prevailed, and was subsequently concurred in by the Folkething. On the 9th instant the conferees were elected. The committee held meetings May 10, 12, 13, and 15. Some of the members of the Right showed a disposition to agree to a compromise; but Dr. Matzen, a stubborn opponent of the treaty, made the differences appear irreconcilable, and with his party colleagues, including Schested and Goss of the former Ministry, succeeded in preventing an agreement. Two reports were consequently made: a majority recommending the adoption of the resolution previously passed by the Folkething, and a minority recommending the adoption of that previously passed by the Landsting. See my Nos. 253 and 255, dated the 25th ultimo and the 6th instant, respectively. The three representatives of the independent group in the Landsting voted with the Left, or Ministerial party. The Right, or Opposition, had eight members on the committee—all from the upper house; their insignificant following not entitling them to any representation from the Folkething.

I enclose a copy, together with a translation, of the committee's report, which was submitted to the Rigsdag on the 16th instant, with the result that the resolution proposed by the majority passed the Folkething by a vote of 98 to 2 (not 97 as above), 5 not voting, and 8 being absent; whereas the one proposed by the minority passed the Landsting by a vote of 33 to 30, 1 not voting and 1 being absent.

The absentee, who was sick, would have voted with the minority, making the margin two instead of three. It was with the greatest difficulty that the Right held its votes together in the upper house. One member of that party refused to vote. A motion to reject the treaty would have been defeated as it had previously been in secret session. As soon as the test vote referred to above had revealed to the Opposition leaders the fact that a number of their party adherents favored ratification, they resorted to indirections for the purpose of presenting a united front. They proposed to defer action on the treaty until the advice of the electors to the colonial councils in the islands had been asked. By means of frequent caucuses, in which strict party discipline was enforced, they thus succeeded in delaying matters and, finally, in bringing about a disagreement between the two houses of the Rigsdag.

Much party feeling was injected into the debate, which at times was quite acrimonious. It was pointed out by the Ministerial side that there had formerly appeared to be a general sentiment in favor of selling the islands; that a despatch from Mr. Carr to the Secretary of State showed that Mr. Estrup, the present leader of the Opposition, had favored such sale in 1894, when he was President of the Council and Minister of Finance; that the Horring and Schested Ministries, both of the Right, had conducted negotiations looking to a transfer; that the finance committee of the Landsting had advised the conclusion of a treaty of cession in two communications to the Minister of Foreign Affairs, one dated January 24, 1901, the other, January 22, 1902—two days before the treaty was signed at Washington; that members who now opposed a plebiscite (because the friends of the treaty declared themselves willing to accept it) had shortly before the conclusion of the convention signed a petition to the King, Ministry, and Rigsdag, praying that no decision with respect to the alienation of our West India colonies be taken except on the basis of a free vote by the inhabitants of the islands, in accordance with the principles of a popular franchise, and that the necessary arrangements for the taking of such vote be made as soon as the circumstances will permit.

See in this connection my No. 236, of December 27, 1901. Surprise was also expressed that members who had helped to form committees and had contributed of their private means for a prosale campaign now were numbered among the gentlemen that placed obstacles in the way of ratification; and that four former members who had held portfolios in the Horring and Schested Ministries—Mr. Schested, Minister of Foreign Affairs, included—now supplied the enemies of the treaty with the necessary votes to prevent ratification.

The letters from the Finance Committee referred to above may be of interest to you. Translations of the same follow:

FINANCE COMMITTEE OF THE LANDSTING,
(Copenhagen, January 24, 1901.

Having duly considered the communications from their excellencies the Minister of Foreign Affairs and the Minister of Finance with respect to a proposal from the United States Government for the cession of the Danish West Indies to the United States of America, a majority of the Landsting's Finance Committee (all excepting Carstensen) does not advise against (11 members, on the contrary recommending) such session, if:

1. By treaty stipulation the islands and their inhabitants secure such measure of civil liberty and free trade with the United States as is necessary for a better economic development, contributing to the welfare of the people, than can be expected under Denmark, even if our country were prepared to make greater sacrifices, especially pecuniary, than we have reason to expect.

2. And the Danish Treasury, in consequence of the conditions of such cession, is completely, or at any rate approximately, indemnified for its claims against the colonial treasures and the burdens resulting from the cession. Carstensen advises against the proposed session.

C. MOLTKE

*To His Excellency
The President of the Council.*

THE COMMITTEE OF THE LANDSTING,
Copenhagen, January 22, 1902.

In compliance with your excellency's request, you are hereby advised that the majority of the Finance Committee (8) members adheres to its communication of January 24, 1901, to the former President of the Council, in accordance with which one member of the majority (Carstensen) is unconditionally opposed to the sale of the West India Islands, while the remaining seven insist on the conditions set forth in the letter referred to above, especially that, by treaty stipulation the islands and their inhabitants secure such measure of civil liberty and free trade with the United States as is necessary for a better economic development than can be expected under Denmark.

The aforesaid members of the majority beg to add that in case such stipulation can not be secured, they will, nevertheless, under the circumstances, agree to a cession of the islands, if the inhabitants are given an opportunity to vote in a satisfactory manner on the question whether they wish to remain under Denmark or prefer that the islands be ceded to the United States, and if the vote shows the latter preference.

The minority (7 members) approves the draft of convention for the cession of the islands submitted by your excellency.

C. MOLTKE

His excellency,

President of the Council, and Minister of Foreign Affairs Deuntzer.

Of the eight composing the majority of the Finance Committee, only Mr. Carstensen has shown consistency; the others have not respected the written pledge given to the Minister of Foreign Affairs.

Mr. Koch, the spokesman of the majority in the Landsting, was among the members who had signed the petition referred to above, "confidently and earnestly" praying the King, the Ministry and the Rigsdag that the question of ceding the Danish West Indies to the United States be submitted to a plebiscite in the islands. In the course of the debate on the treaty, he said: On April 22d—

I have established, by reference to our legislation, that the West Indies have a coordinate position with the rest of the monarchy; and that the inhabitants are just as good citizens of Denmark as the honorable member (Madsen-Mygdal) and I * * *.

On May 7th:

We stand on legal ground, the ground indicated by our legislation, when we say that the only persons we can ask (for advice as to cession) are the electors to the colonial councils. Others have had nothing to say regarding the affairs of the islands, as long as these have been in our possession * * *.

On May 16th:

A satisfactory election can not, in our opinion, be secured through a plebiscite * * *. The contents of petitions are, of course, wholly indifferent to the Rigsdag, which needs pay no regard thereto. We do not permit ourselves to be guided thereby * * *. When, as signer of the petition referred to, I have previously expressed myself in favor of a plebiscite, I have, in common with many others, not considered the subject in all its bearings.

In view of the inconsistency and shifting of ground explained above, the Ministry thought it useless to continue the session any longer; and accordingly the Rigsdag was prorogued on the day following the vote reported in my cablegram to you. An election to the Landsting takes place in September, when one half (27) of the elective members are to be chosen. The Right has 35 out of the 66 members of the Landsting as at present constituted.

The Ministry feels quite confident of reducing this number sufficiently by the coming elections to secure control of the Upper House in the next Rigsdag, which will convene in October.

The Minister of Foreign Affairs says that even if such result is not obtained, he at present intends to lay the treaty before the Rigsdag again at its next session.

EXCELLENCY: I have the honor to communicate to your excellency the following cablegram, which I received last night from the Secretary of State.

"Propose to Minister for Foreign Affairs extension for one year of period of ratification."

Pursuant to this instruction, I would respectfully request that the Danish Minister at Washington be authorized to sign a protocol for the desired extension of the six months' limit for the ratification of the treaty for ceding the Danish West Indies to the United States.

In view of the fact that the Danish Rigsdag has been prorogued without having taken action on the treaty, your excellency will appreciate the reasons for making the above proposal.

[Inclosure 2—Translation]

Report of conference committee of Rigsdag on treaty for cession of Danish West Indies, May 15, 1902.

The attempt to agree on a resolution whereby both houses of the Rigsdag concurrently give their sanction to the convention of January 24th last has failed.

The majority (Blem, Jens Busk, N. Hansen, Harald Jensen, J. Jensen (Alb. A. I. V.) S. Jensen, Jensen-Stengaarden, K. M. Clausen, Madsen-Mygdal, Neergaard, Anders Nielsen, Chr. Nielsen, Norhave, Ole Olsen, N. Pedersen, Philipsen, Reevitz-Thott, Rosager, Rosloff, Steensen-Leth, Zahle) insists that the vote in the islands on which ratification is to be made dependent shall be a free vote in accordance with the principles of a common franchise; as was originally desired by all parties that demanded the final conclusion of the treaty made dependent upon a plebiscite. In conference, the majority moved that the right to vote be granted every person of good character, who has attained the age of 25, who has the right of a native, or who has resided in the islands for a period of at least five years; unless, having no household of his own, he is employed as a private servant, and provided that he has at no time been a public charge, and that he has the disposal of his own estate. This proposal the minority has declined to entertain; intimating, however its willingness to extend the right of franchise beyond the limit applying to electors for members of the colonial councils.

It has thus been proposed to give the right of franchise to every person of good character who has attained the age of 25, who has the right of a native or has resided in the islands for a period of five years, who can prove that he has an annual income of at least 300 West India dollars or real estate yielding a rental of at least 50 West India dollars. The minority further demands that the voting shall take place before the Rigsdag takes final action; and it will commit itself to ratification only in case the result of the election shows a three-fourths majority in favor of ceding the islands to the United States. With respect to this suggested proposal the majority has declared that if the minority would drop its limitation of the franchise, which it was impossible for the majority to accept, the latter was willing to consider the other details, including the agreement on a certain majority; and would likely be prepared to make concessions. This representation, however, proved unavailing.

The minority (la Cour, Goos, Hansen-Soleval, Koch, Matzen, Moltke-Lys-trup, Holger Petersen, Schested) begs to remark that it has been unable to accept the proposal for a plebiscite, which would essentially be governed by the same rules that obtain in elections for members of the Danish Folkething. The differences between the inhabitants of this country and those of the islands are so great that the minority considers it very questionable to permit the bulk of the inhabitants of the islands to exert a decisive influence in so important a question for the future of the islands by giving them a right to vote for or against the treaty of January 24, 1902. They are generally unmoneyed, and have heretofore been excluded from all influence on or participation in the public affairs of the islands. To give these persons a right to vote, the minority finds so much the less defensible in view of the fact that, in its opinion, the only consideration that would speak in favor of a cession of the islands is their present and future economic welfare. Consequently, only that part of the population which has real economic interests in the islands ought to have an influence in deciding the question under consideration. It should be added that the vote proposed by the majority would not be a satisfactory (honest) vote, such as has always been expressly demanded by the Landsting. On the contrary, the minority expressed the opinion, in the meetings of the committee, that, considering the economic depression in the islands, it would be safe, in addition to the electors to the colonial councils, pursuant to the colonial law of November 27, 1863, to give the right of franchise to every person of good character having attained the age of 25, who has the right of a native or has resided in the islands the last 5 years, and who has an annual income of at least 300 West India dollars, or owns real estate in the islands the annual rental of which can be estimated at 50 West India dollars. Such voting should be secret; should be superintended by a commissioner sent from here by the King for that specific purpose; and should be taken separately on each of the islands. The minority remarked that the number entitled to vote under the above arrangement had been estimated to be more than twice the number of the electors to the colonial councils. He also added that in case the Rigsdag should find that three-fourths of the electors had voted for a cession, it ought to give its consent to ratification.

This proposal by the minority was, however, declared unacceptable to the majority.

Although the majority is of opinion that at this stage further discussion of the matter is useless, it wishes to remark that in the foregoing the minority is guilty of an utterly untenable contention when it asserts that only those having an annual income of at least 300 West India dollars or owning real estate in the islands the annual rental of which may be estimated at 50 West India dollars have real economic interests in the islands. The patent absurdity of this contention is so self-evident that it needs no refutation; but the majority has considered it best to invite the attention of the members of the Rigsdag as well as that of the public to the kind of arguments the minority make use of to avoid what is the only possible and justifiable course in case advice from the islands is to be sought, namely to take a plebiscite. Such vote has, indeed, been demanded by prominent members of the minority, as for instance in the petition which was handed to the King, praying that "no decision with respect to the alienation of our West India colonies be taken except on the basis of a free vote by the inhabitants of the islands, in accordance with the principles of a popular franchise, and that the necessary arrangements for the taking of such vote be made as soon as the circumstances will permit."

The following resolution is submitted for adoption by the two houses:

By the majority:

The Rigsdag gives its consent to the convention concluded at Washington January 24, 1902, for the cession of the West India Islands of St. Thomas, St. Johns, and St. Croix to the United States, on condition that the inhabitants of the islands, through a plebiscite (similar to that of 1867), arranged by the Danish Government express themselves in favor of ceding the islands to the United States of North America.

By the minority:

Before the Rigsdag takes final action on the convention of January 24, 1902, the electors to the colonial councils of St. Thomas, St. John, and St. Croix, as provided in paragraph one, clause one, of the colonial law of November 27, 1863, shall vote, secretly, on the question whether they wish to remain under Denmark or prefer that the islands shall be ceded to the United States of North America. Such election shall be superintended by a commissioner sent from here by His Majesty the King for this specific purpose.

(The report is signed by 29 members—one, Harald Holm, being absent when it was adopted.)

DANISH LEGATION,
Washington, May 30, 1902.

MR. SECRETARY OF STATE: With reference to our conversation of yesterday morning I have the honor to inform your excellency that I am now in possession of a cable message from my Government authorizing me to sign a protocol for the extension of the term mentioned in Article VII of the Convention of January 24 last concerning the Danish West Indies. The telegram does not suggest for how long time said term should be extended, and I therefore conclude that the time proposed by your excellency through the United States Minister at Copenhagen is entirely agreeable to my Government.

I take pleasure in placing myself at your excellency's disposal for further agreement on the protocol in question at any time which may be agreeable to your excellency.

Minister Swenson to the Secretary of State

No. 258

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Copenhagen, June 2, 1902.

SIR: In a note dated the 28th ultimo, the Minister of Foreign Affairs informs me that on the previous day the King gave his formal consent to the extension for one year of the period for ratification of the treaty for the cession of the Danish West Indies to the United States; and that the Danish Minister at Washington would be authorized to sign the necessary protocol for that purpose without delay. I had two interviews with the Minister of Foreign Affairs, on May 28th and 29th, regarding the proposed prolongation. He called attention to the fact that, under the provisions of the treaty, the United States agrees to pay the stipulated five million dollars within ninety days from the date of the exchange of ratifications; but that the cession with the right of immediate possession is to be deemed complete on the exchange of ratifications. The enemies of the treaty in the Rigsdag had, he said, criticized this provision, asserting that it would enable the United States Government to take possession of the islands and then refuse to pay the purchasing sum. He asked if I thought my Government would have any objection to paying the consideration before it took possession, and to altering the convention to that effect.

He intended to submit such proposal through Mr. Brun; and would not instruct him to sign the protocol of extension before he had ascertained whether the Government of the United States would accept the desired amendment.

I replied that a reopening of the negotiations would give rise to complications; and urged upon him the desirability of cabling Mr. Brun authority to sign a protocol, in view of the fact that the Senate might adjourn before long. Incidentally I called attention to that part of the treaty reading: "Formal delivery of the territory and property ceded as aforesaid shall be made immediately after the payment by the United States, etc."

I hoped that the enemies of the treaty would not question the public honor of the United States; and I suggested that it might be construed as an endorsement of their views and a confession of lack of foresight on the part of the minority to revise the treaty in accordance with the wishes of its opponents. His excellency seemed to consider my points well taken; and decided to cable Mr. Brun at once.

He requested me, however, to advise you of the above criticism, and to ascertain if you could not give a written assurance that the United States Government would not take possession of the island before the five million dollars should have been paid.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note of the 30th ultimo, by which you inform me that you have been authorized by your Government, by telegraph, to sign a protocol for the extension of the time mentioned in Article VII of the Treaty of January 24, 1902, concerning the Danish West Indies, within which the ratifications of the said treaty may be exchanged.

Inasmuch as the accomplishment of this object involves the amendment of a treaty already passed upon by the Senate of the United States, it is necessary that any instrument I may sign to that end shall also be submitted to the Senate for its advice and consent, and such instrument should be in the form of a supplementary treaty.

I have the honor therefore to enclose herewith for your consideration a draft of a supplementary treaty prolonging for a period of twelve months from July 24, 1902, the time within which the ratifications of the said treaty of January 24, 1902, may be exchanged.

Should the draft prove acceptable to you I shall be pleased to have it prepared for signature if you will kindly furnish me with the Danish text.
